BADGER ABOUT TO RETIRE.

His Career in the Navy One of Service and Honor.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—Rear Admiral Charles J. Badger of the General Board of the Navy, who since his retirement as commander in chief of the Atlantic Fleet, last year, has made this city his home, will go on the retired list next Friday after forty-six years in the navy, twenty-five of which have been at sea. He has sailed on every sea, has been Superintendent at Annapolis, was one of the officers who participated in the famous Greeley relief expedition to the arctic, and was the senior commanding officer in Mexican waters for months following the taking of Vera Cruz by the marines and bluejackets under Fletcher, his successor to the Atlantic Fleet command.

Admiral Badger is a Marylander. His father was the late Commodore Oscar C. Badger, U. S. N., and Ensign Badger, U. S. N., is his son. He has enjoyed to a great degree the confidence of his superiors in the Navy Departmnt. President Taft made him commander in chief of the Atlantic Fleet, and President Wilson made him a member of the General Board.

Admiral Badger was the senior naval officer in San Francisco Harbor at the time of the great earthquake, and he worked hand in hand with General Funston in the preservation of order and the organization of relief. For his services at San Francisco he was officially commended by the Secretary of the Navy.

As Superintendent at Annapolis he was known as "Square Deal" Badger, a nickname that has stuck to him ever since. He was a strict disciplinarian, but just.

When Admiral Badger got his commission as "C in C" of the fleet it was a Sunday and under the regulations no salute could be fired in his honor on that day. At one minute after midnight the Rear Admiral's salute boomed from every ship in the fleet. This unusual event happened at sea off the Capes of Virginia.

FOSS WOULD RUN AGAIN.

Ex-Democratic Governor Would Now Run as Republican.

BOSTON, Aug. 1.—Former Governor Eugene N. Foss announced formally today his intention of seeking the Republican nomination for Governor in the primaries next Fall, in an open letter to Charles S. Bird of Walpole, candidate of the Progressive Party in 1912 and 1913. Foss expresses regret that Mr. Bird has determined not to become a candidate for the Republican nomination, as the ex-Governor suggested some weeks ago. The letter adds:

"It must be apparent to you Mr. Bird, that in offering to support you, I was attempting to interpret the position will and that upon your declaration I have determined myself to lead the popular movement."

Continuing, Mr. Foss says that the Republican party demands progressive leadership by a business man, and he asserts that, as the exponent of the McKinley policy of tariff regulation, he himself has been "the real leader of the true Republican idea in Massachusetts," notwithstanding that he was three times elected Governor on the Democratic ticket.

The letter severely criticizes former Congressman Samuel McCall and Lieut. Gov. Cushing, who are candidates for the Republican nomination, for "their refusal to stand for national prohibition."

TOLEDO FRIGHTENS THAW.

He Avoids City Where Big Reception Was Planned.

TOLEDO, Aug. 1.—A big brass band did not play, a banquet at one of the leading hotels was called off, and thousands of the city's curious were disappointed today when Harry K. Thaw telephoned from Fremont that he had changed his mind about visiting Toledo on his motor trip to the Pacific Coast.

The slayer of Stanford White had heard of the plans to receive him, and it caused him to alter his course. He said he wished to avoid being the centre of a curious crowd.

Thaw left Fremont at 9:30 o'clock this morning, passing through Bowling Green, Napoleon, and Bryan, Ohio, on a direct route to Butler, Ind. His plans were to go from Butler to Kendallville, thence to South Bend. He hoped, he said, to reach Chicago by night.

WANT OKUMA TO STAY.

Japanese Business Men Opposed to Changing Cabinet in Wartime.

TOKIO, Aug. 1.—A solution of the Cabinet crisis is not yet in sight.

The situation has been complicated by the opposition of the Elder Statesmen to Takaaki Kato, Minister of Foreign Affairs, whose handling of the Chinese question they have criticized. On the other hand, representative Japanese not connected with politics are urging the continuance in power of the Cabinet, headed by Count Okuma.

This group, under the leadership of Baron Shibusawa, Chairman of the Tokio Banking Association, and Buei Nakano, President of the Tokio Chamber of Commerce, is seeking to convince the Elder Statesmen that a cabinet change is not desirable in wartimes, when state affairs of paramount importance remain unsettled, including a readjustment of financial problems arising from extraordinary war expenditures and projected naval expansion. The assertion is made that great difficulty would be experienced in forming a new ministry willing and able to cope with the crisis.

The opposition charges that the Okuma Cabinet came into office through the misuse of funds and irregularities in the election.

Since the charge was made by the Elder Statesmen that the Kato policies had placed Japan in a position of isolation, the Cabinet has been pushing a program of rapprochement with China, Kato himself defending his position in a series of public addresses.

The creation of a coalition ministry similar to that of Great Britain has been suggested.

ROSSA BURIED IN DUBLIN.

Ten Thousand Persons Escort the Body of the Irish Patriot.

DUBLIN, Aug. 1.—The body of J. O'Donovan Rossa, the Irish patriot, who died in New York last month, was buried in Glasnevin Cemetery here this afternoon. His tomb is in what is known as Patriot's Corner.

The body lay in state in the City Hall for several days and large numbers of persons, many of them coming from the rural districts, passed before the bier. The streets converging on the City Hall today were densely packed with people as the funeral procession passed.

Ten thousand persons were in the procession, including representatives of the Irish Volunteers and the Irish National Volunteers, both contingents in uniform, and many of the former carrying "rebel pikes," members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and delegations from Irish trade and labor unions. Several priests walked behind the hearse, which was preceded by pipers playing a death march. The body was buried close to the Daniel O'Connell Statue and near the graves of other noted Irishmen.

GARMENT WORKERS END VOTING TONIGHT

Cast Ballots at Nine Places and Count Will Be Taken at 9 o'Clock.

LEADERS READY TO STRIKE

Dr. Adler Calls Conference of Conciliation Board Today to Adjust Differences.

All yesterday thousands of members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union crowded Forward Hall, 175 East Broadway, and eight other polling places to vote on this question, printed on the ballots in English, Yiddish, Russian, and Italian:

"Shall the officers of the union call a general strike at once if the manufacturers refuse to accept the findings of Mayor Mitchel's Council of Conciliation by Tuesday, Aug. 3?"

Officials of the union estimated that 40,000 members voted on the question Saturday and yesterday. It is expected that most of the remaining 20,000 members in the city will have voted by 9 o'clock tonight, when the secret ballots will be counted. Officers of the union said there is no doubt that the vote would be overwhelmingly in favor of the strike if the manufacturers longer withheld their acceptance of the findings of the council headed by Dr. Felix Adler.

Members of the Council of Conciliation yesterday got in touch with Dr. Adler who was out of the city, and he authorized the calling of a meeting for 10 o'clock this morning, when he said he would be present to try to smooth out the differences between the needle union and the Cloak and Skirt Manufacturers' Protective Association.

The differences of the manufacturers and the unions seemed ten days ago to be on a fair way to settlement, when the union officials published a statement in Yiddish papers that, in the findings of the council, they had won a complete victory over the manufacturers on the question of power of an employe to discharge a workman. The manufacturers, through their counsel, notified Mayor Mitchel that they could not adopt the findings if the interpretation put upon them by the unions was official. Their interpretation, which was said to be the consensus of a majority of the conciliators, was that only in certain instances could the employe have a review of his discharge.

The unions interpret the findings of the conciliators to include cases which the employers said would be subject to review. The employers want the agreement to be made more specific; the unions say it is very good as it is and the employers must accept it, or there will be a strike. The purpose of the meeting of the Council of Conciliation today will be to have both sides modify their stand and phrase the agreement so that there can be only one interpretation.

Benjamin Schlessinger, President of the Garment Workers' Union, said last night that the workers wanted the matter settled at once, because the Jewish New Year and other holidays fell in about five weeks, and the large majority of Jewish workers wished to be in a settled state of mind, not only during the holidays, but during the extensive preparations that precede them.

"The manufacturers have trifled long enough," said Schlessinger. "We were in good faith when we agreed to the Council of Conciliation, and we thought the employers were. We accepted what the Council thought was right, but the manufacturers have hemmed and hawed, trying to get a little the best of it. I believe they will see the error of their way when on Tuesday we show them the result of the vote, and that we intend to make trouble for them if they play with us any longer. The manufacturers want to get in a position where they can strike the union a death blow."

Professor George W. Kirchwey of Columbia, a member of the Council of Conciliation, said that the meeting had been called for today to prevent an ugly crisis.

"It seems to me the agreement was fair enough," he said, "and if the only question is a definition of terms, it doesn't seem that should be impossible."

The troubles between the unions and the cloak and skirt manufacturers date from April 1, when the employers abrogated a protocol under which the trade had been conducted since the big strike in 1910.

THINK MACHINISTS WILL WORK

Garvin Company Doesn't Look for a Strike Today.

George MacLagan, Treasurer of the Garvin Machine Company, said last night he expected all the machinists of the company's plant, at Varick and Spring Streets, to be back at work this morning, despite the fact that officials of the International Association of Machinists stood outside of the factory when the men quit work as usual Saturday noon and announced that a strike was on.

"I never heard of men going on strike until they had made demands of some sort and had been refused," he said. "There has been no demand made upon the Garvin Machine Company. It is not unusual for our machinists to quit work at noon Saturdays; it would be quite unusual if they didn't. I expect them all back tomorrow morning."

Officials of the Garvin and other companies making munitions of war for the Allies believe that J. J. Keppler, Vice President of the International Association of Machinists, and other labor leaders who have threatened big strikes have attempted more than they can effect. Early last week Keppler announced that before Saturday noon he would submit to the E. W. Bliss Company of Brooklyn, manufacturers of torpedoes, an ultimatum for an increase of wages, with a strike as an alternative. Those demands have not been made.

"We are working along very nicely," said Howard C. Sesman, Vice President of the Bliss Company, last night. "No demands have been made upon us and our men are satisfied."

Before he left New York for Philadelphia yesterday, Keppler said the strike was on at the Garvin plant and that it would be extended to others.

DOG DIES TO SAVE GIRL.

Runs Ahead and Kills Copperhead in Her Path, but Is Bitten.

CALDWELL, N. J., Aug. 1.—Don, a collie dog owned by John Miller, gave up his life this afternoon to save the 6-year-old daughter of his master from a copperhead snake. The dog killed the snake, but died two hours later from poison.

Agnes Miller and her older sister, Clara, started out for a romp with Don this afternoon, and were making for a wood not far from their home, with the dog at their heels.

The dog suddenly sprang forward, growled, and leaped upon a copperhead directly in the path of the little girl. Both girls ran home and told their father. Miller hurried to the scene and got the dog, but although a veterinary surgeon was summoned Don died.

THIEVES USE SOCIETY NEWS.

Montclair Woman Says It Guides Them to Untenanted Houses.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., Aug. 1.—Mrs. Charles E. Van Vleck, who is prominent socially in this town, thinks that wealthy persons give the town newspapers too much information about the plans for their trips away from home. In a signed statement she asks that instead of giving such information to the newspapers residents furnish it to the police, so that the later can safeguard homes during the absence of the owners.

Mrs. Van Vleck contends that this would make the work of the police easier and remove a source of information for thieves who are alert to rob untenanted houses. Recently the police found the copies of two newspapers in houses that had been entered. The social column in each paper had been marked opposite each place where an item recorded that some resident of the town had left or was about to leave Montclair for the season.

The social columns, Mrs. Van Vleck believes, form a local directory of information for the thieves. She owns one of the finest homes in Montclair, at North Mountain and Claremont Avenues. She and the other members of her family will spend the remainder of the season at Eastern Point, New London. This fact was announced in the local papers, but the Van Vleck home will be specially guarded during the time that the owner is away.

HAVE SERVED 158 HATTERS.

Closing Down on Homes and Savings in Famous Boycott Case.

Special to The New York Times.

HARTFORD, Aug. 1.—United States Marshal Chesterfield C. Middlebrooks and his deputies returned to Hartford today after having made careful personal service on 158 of the 247 Danbury hatters who were the losing defendants in the famous hatters' boycott case, which D. E. Loewe & Son, independent hat manufacturers, finally won after twelve years' litigation over the Sherman anti-trust law. The individual hatters are liable for about $260,000, triple damages, and must pay it to the extent of their ability, unless the American Federation of Labor or the United Hatters of North America, which fought the case for them, shall levy a small personal assessment on members with which to pay the judgment.

The United States Marshals are now attaching homes and savings banks accounts in Danbury, Bethel and Norwalk in the new Loewe suit, which is for foreclosure of judgment liens, and will continue serving the writs during the coming week, several visits to a homestead being necessary in many instances before the owner is personally served.

FRANK'S HEAD IN BRACES.

Excessive Heat Delaying Recovery from Wound in Throat.

Special to The New York Times.

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., Aug. 1.—Leo M. Frank, whose throat was cut by a fellow-convict, J. C. Creen, fifteen days ago, is not recovering as rapidly as the doctors attending him had hoped he would. The excessive heat is causing him much suffering. It will be a month at least, the doctors say, before he will be able to leave the special hospital ward in which he has been placed.

Frank's head was encased today in surgical braces, so that he cannot move it. The braces are arranged so that his head is held to the left side to prevent stitches on that side of the neck from tearing out. Mrs. Frank is at the bedside of her husband every day.

Creen is still chained to a bedpost in the prison dormitory. He will be kept there for an indefinite period.

48 YEARS AT SEA ENOUGH.

Purser Hinsley Quits After Sailing 6,500,000 Miles.

Howard Ernest Hinsley, purser of the American liner St. Louis, which arrived yesterday from Liverpool, announced that it was his last voyage, after having been at sea continuously since 1867. He has rented a small house and farm on the estate of the Duke of Buccleugh, near Dumfries, Scotland, where he will spend the remainder of his days with his family. James Cowie, formerly chief engineer of the New York, who retired three years ago, will be a near neighbor.

Mr. Hinsley was born in Liverpool sixty years ago and started his sea career on the Inman liner City of Baltimore when he was 12 years old. He entered the British Navy, in which he served until 1880. Rejoining the Inman Line as assistant purser, he was promoted to purser twenty-three years ago and became a naturalized American citizen when the company was incorporated as the American Line in 1888.

During the Spanish-American war Mr. Hinsley was paymaster of the Harvard, now the Philadelphia. All together he has traveled 6,500,000 miles, or 260 times the distance around the earth. He will be succeeded by E. Slight, the assistant purser of the St. Louis.

NEW CHARITIES SECRETARY.

Stanley Howe Transferred from Kingsbury's Office.

Announcement of the resignation of Charities Commissioner Kingsbury's private secretary, Stanley Howe, and his appointment as Secretary of the Department of Charities, and the appointment of Elmer Roberts as Mr. Howe's successor, was made yesterday by Commissioner Kingsbury.

Mr. Howe has been associated with Mr. Kingsbury for several years. He was formerly connected with the Public Charities Association of Pennsylvania and the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor. Mr. Howe will fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of J. McKee Borden, for seventeen years Secretary of the Charities Department. The salary of the Secretary of the department is $3,500 a year.

Mr. Roberts lives in Bay Ridge and has been for some time associated with the Bureau of Municipal Research. He has recently been assigned by the bureau to assist Commissioner Kingsbury. His salary as the Commissioner's private secretary will be $3,000 a year.

INQUIRER SEES FLAW IN ALDERMEN'S WORK

Tells McAneny Board Has Allowed $1,130,500 Purchases Without Bidding.

GOT 44 MOTOR VEHICLES

Flour, ($60,000,) Coal, Fish, and Fruits Bought Without Competition by Charities Commissioner.

The Bureau of City Inquiry has sent an open letter to President McAneny of the Board of Aldermen, containing the statement that the board, which has recently been praised by Mayor Mitchel and Mr. McAneny, had permitted contracts to be let within the last eighteen months exceeding $1,130,500 without competitive bidding, thus opening the door to favoritism and graft.

"I am informed," said the letter, "that this amount far exceeds the total for any eighteen months since consolidation. Contracts which prior to 1914 always were awarded after open bidding, have been let without competition of any kind, and in allowing this the board has interfered with one of the chief plans for betterment of the city administration.

"Repeated efforts have been made by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, of which you are a member, to have the State Legislature pass a law for a Central Purchasing Bureau, to the end that wider competition in bidding might be obtained, with a gain in lower prices. Unsuccessful in these efforts, the administration had established a temporary Central Purchasing Bureau in the office of the Commissioner of Accounts. This bureau is for the purpose of gaining wider competition in bidding and lower prices. Despite all this, the present Board of Aldermen has persistently continued, since it took office, to kill competition in bidding, thereby leaving the city treasury at the mercy of individuals in power, as elected officials, appointed heads of departments or otherwise."

The letter says that the disposition to neglect to obtain competition has been marked in regard to automobiles. There having been purchased without bidding twenty-three automobiles, ten automobile ambulances, six automobile trucks, one automobile hearse, and four tractors, or a total of forty-four motor vehicles. It continues:

"The city in the past bought its coal, flour, fish, &c., by open bidding. The present Board of Aldermen has permitted several departments to buy coal without competition; it has given the Commissioner of Charities a free hand in paying out $60,000 for flour. Also it has permitted the Commissioner to spend as he individually pleased, $74,220 for fish, oysters, fruits, &c."

The bureau says that the Commissioner of Public Charities has been given absolute power in letting a total of $190,680 in contracts, and that the Commissioner of Water Supply, Gas, and Electricity has been empowered to let contracts totaling $107,490 as he pleases.

"For city departments in general," adds the Bureau, "contract letting without competition has been encouraged and made easy."

To the letter is appended a list covering six pages of contracts let without bidding which total $1,130,500.

WEEK'S OUTDOOR CONCERTS

Commissioner Ward Issues Program and Pleads for Parks.

Saturday, Aug. 7, 4 P. M.—Seward Park, East Side Municipal Band.

An appeal is made at the same time by the Park Commissioner to the public to help preserve the parks as recreation places. He says:

"We go to the parks because they represent nature and because we find in them something different from the noisy, heated streets and sweltering houses. There are many thoughtless persons who tear up the lawns, steal flowers, destroy the bushes and dig up roots and peel off the bark of trees, which give such pleasant shade. Soon the trees die and the park is as hot and as bare as the narrow streets from which we sought to escape.

"The parks belong to all of us. I am doing my best to keep them in good condition, but I can do nothing unless I have your assistance. All that is required is an intelligent use of the parks so that they may be of good to the greatest number of people."

MRS. GAFFNEY'S INCOME CUT

Court Holds Her Son Need Not Pay Her $2,000 a Year.

The Court of Appeals has decided that Mrs. T. St. John Gaffney, wife of the American Consul at Munich, Germany, cannot legally compel her son, Frederic F. Humphreys, a West Point graduate, to pay her the $2,000 yearly which he has been accustomed to do.

Mr. Humphreys is one of two children of Mrs. Gaffney by her first husband, Dr. Frederic Humphreys, founder of a patent medicine corporation, who left a fortune when he died in 1894. Mrs. Gaffney's other child by her first marriage was Jayta M. Humphreys, now the Baroness Hans Heinrich von Wolf, who resides in South Africa. The Baroness has been giving her mother $2,000 yearly, and will continue to do so.

Mrs. Gaffney's second marriage was displeasing to Dr. Humphreys's father, who, however, set aside a trust fund composed of stock in the patent medicine corporation, and which is now valued at $120,000. From this fund Mrs. Gaffney received $7,000 yearly as guardian of her daughter until the latter reached the age of 21, and $1,500 yearly as guardian of her son until he reached the same age. Then her income ceased.

The trust conditions further arranged it so that one-half the accumulated income went to the children when the son reached 21. When Frederic became 30 the entire estate was to be divided equally between him and his sister.

The children, however, in 1903, signed an agreement whereby they were to pay their mother $2,000 a year each during her lifetime, but Frederic was then under age. When he reached the age designated in the will for coming into his half share of the estate, he refused to allow his mother the $2,000 yearly. He contended that she was amply provided for, and that he was legally incapable of making the agreement when under age.

MRS. WHITNEY IMPROVING.

Shows Rapid Recovery After Operation for Appendicitis.

Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, who was operated on for appendicitis last Friday morning at her Summer home in Old Westbury, L. I., is recovering rapidly. It was said at her home last night that she had passed a good day and that her condition "was very fine and improving."

Mrs. Whitney was Miss Gertrude Vanderbilt, and her mother is now with her, having come on from Newport when it was known that the operation was necessary. It is thought that Mrs. Whitney's war relief work for the Allies and her endeavors to assist the young artists of this city thrown out of work by the war had much to do with her attack. In addition to her other activities, she has made three trips abroad and recently opened her studios at 8 West Eighth Street for an exhibition of the work of young artists. She also has taken an active part in the formation of the society of the Friends of Young Artists.

New Blight Attacks Jersey Trees.

Special to The New York Times.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Aug. 1.—Because a new blight has attacked trees in this vicinity, Rahway's Park and Shade Tree Commission has asked State Forester Gaskil to come to Rahway to assist in saving the trees. The new disease has appeared simultaneously in several parts of Union County, and in each instance the trees affected have withered and died rapidly. Maples and elms are especially susceptible to the attacks.

NEW COURT HOUSE FLAW.

Tilden Adamson Says Proposed Building Contract Is Faulty.

The cost of the new Court House should be reduced by the elimination of many expensive features and the city should be secured against fraud by changes in the form of the proposed building contract, according to Tilden Adamson, Director of the Bureau of Contract Supervision, in his report to the Budget Committee of the Board of Estimate, which has been made public in its entirety.

The trouble with the contract, he says, is that the contractor, after bidding a lump sum for the entire building, is to set up his schedule of prices and his work program within the following thirty days. Under this arrangement, Mr. Adamson argues, a contractor might bid $12,000,000, for instance, on the entire building, and then name $5,000,000 as the price of the foundation, $5,000,000 being several times the legitimate price for this item.

After building the foundation, the contractor might default on the rest of the job, but would be able, according to Mr. Adamson, to collect 80 per cent. of the price he had fixed for the foundation and make a profit of several million dollars. The form of contract, he recommends, should be altered to make juggling of this kind impossible.

CONFESSES KILLING A MAN.

Stranger Calls on Detectives and Tells of Massachusetts Homicide.

A man who said he was Frank Jones, an upholsterer, living at 43 Winslow Street, Roxbury, Mass., walked into the Third Detective Branch yesterday afternoon and told Lieutenant Gallagher he wanted to give himself up for a killing.

Detectives Prantner and White learned from him that on the night of July 17 he was in a saloon at Hampden and Eustis Streets, Roxbury, when he met a man whom he knew only as Joe. The two had several drinks at a table, and when Joe made a slurring remark about Jones's wife Jones hit him and knocked him out of his chair.

Jones fled, and heard later that the man had died. He went to Providence and stayed there till last night, when he came to New York on a boat of the Bay State Line. But when he had got 200 miles further away from his home he suddenly became homesick for a sight of his wife and two little children, and, feeling that the police would get him some time anyway, he decided to give himself up.

UNGRATEFUL BEAVER WON'T STAY AT HOME

Old Scrooge, with Only Three Legs, Gnaws His Way About the Zoological Park.

FOUND IN BOTANICAL GARDEN

Once Was Rescued from a Sportsman's Show When About to Grace Camping Club's Menu.

After twenty years of unfailing kindness in the handling of wild and domestic animals, Charles Snyder, keeper in the Zoological Park in the Bronx, confessed yesterday to Curator Raymond Ditmars, his superior, that he was beginning to lose faith.

"It isn't so much that the results are not worth while," he said, "but I am plum discouraged because of the carryings on of Old Scrooge."

Old Scrooge, it may be remarked here, is a disreputable, bewhiskered beaver, who, besides the disadvantage of a villainous appearance, is further handicapped by having only three legs. His right foreleg was left in a trap in the Maine woods. Snyder will venture no opinion on Scrooge's age, contenting himself with the assertion that Scrooge is an adult animal.

Long ago—just how long Snyder has forgotten—Scrooge was an attraction at the Sportsman's Show here. After the show he was in a fair way of becoming one of the strange dishes on the menu at an annual dinner of some camping club, when Snyder, who had made a pilgrimage to the show, took a fancy to Scrooge, and in the end persuaded the management that the Zoological Park in the Bronx was the proper place for the beaver. So the animal went to the park one day in an express wagon, and on the same day his name was changed by Snyder to Scrooge from Reginald, or something like that.

Scrooge proved to be a docile animal, and soon became a sort of family pet in the Bronx. Snyder thought so much of him that he once obtained permission to take the beaver home to be shown to his family. Then, to quote Snyder, he had to keep watch all night to prevent Scrooge from digging under the back yard fence and destroying a pet peach tree belonging to his neighbor on the right as you face the street. Even Keeper Bayreuther, who is wrapped up in a study of the giraffes, took to Scrooge, though he frankly confessed he could never pronounce his name. Privately he accused Snyder of not pronouncing it right himself.

Fled from Fowl Pond.

Everything went well until two months ago, when Scrooge was placed in the fowl pond. There he developed a gayety of disposition heretofore unsuspected, and by his antics made life miserable for a considerable number of ducks and geese. When the pond was drained some weeks ago Scrooge mysteriously disappeared. There was a council of war, and after much searching the beaver was discovered. He had dug himself a very comfortable home under the concrete steps leading into the water. From the pond he was placed in an inclosure near the mammal house. Two weeks and two days ago Scrooge climbed the three-foot wire fence surrounding his temporary home and disappeared again.

Three days after he escaped to free life a report came from the Botanical Gardens that a strange animal was raising Cain with the elm trees that line the banks of the Bronx River. Animal men from the Zoological Park were summoned, and their observation confirmed their previous belief that oeavers were at work. At first it was figured that a pair of the animals were on the job.

Nights of searching followed, and every effort was made to find the troublemaker. Searchlights were placed along the river bank, and keepers detailed from the park, with policemen sent from the Bronx Park Station, spent many hours in the search. Some were armed with shotguns.

"It's old Scrooge that is making all the trouble in the park," Snyder confided to Mr. Ditmars. "Just think how that beaver has repaid our kindness. The first chance he gets, here he up and runs away, and even then can't behave like a dignified animal should."

Other keepers had the same idea as Snyder, and in time word passed among the searchers that no pair of beavers was at work among the elm trees, but that the mischief was being done by an old renegade beaver that in times past had come readily to his meals in answer to the cry of "Here, Scrooge!" The search progressed with no success. The keepers in time relaxed their vigilance, and in one night the beaver reappeared and three small elm trees bore evidence of his activity.

Tracing the Fugitive.

Following this the shotguns and searchlights again made their appearance, but there was no sign of the wily beaver. Three nights ago one Mulligan, an atendant in the Botanical Gardens, went to the management. He pointed out that the search as then kept up was simply a waste of time. No self-respecting beaver, he argued, would come out when the noise of men tramping the banks of the stream was heard and the flash of lights lit up the scene. Mulligan said he had been a trapper in Maine, and he was sure if left alone he could trail the beaver to his lair and so bring about his capture. After some consideration the search was abandoned and the beaver hunt placed in charge of Mulligan.

At the end of the second night's vigil Mulligan proudly announced:

"I have located him. It is a villainous looking old three-legged beaver with an industry that would make one of them keepers in the Zoo ashamed of himself."

Mulligan led the way to a shady spot where, under the water end of a drain pipe, was made out with difficulty. "He's in there," announced Mulligan.

A little footmark or two in the soft mud untouched by the rising water showed that Mulligan was right.

The management of the Botanical Gardens sent word to the Zoological Society to come over and get its old beaver, or words to that effect. Snyder was detailed to head the party that recaptured the fugitive. A manhole was opened up, and through it the keeper descended to where the drain pipe entered. In the bottom he found evidences that the runaway was preparing to winter along the Bronx River. He caught a glimpse of the marauder and shouted up: "It's old Scrooge all right." A chorus: "I told you so," drifted back.

A trap with a sliding door that closed when the bait was touched was set, and yesterday old Scrooge was caught. The trappers arrived just in time, for during the hours of his captivity Old Scrooge had gnawed a considerable hole in the wooden cage.

"And just to think," said Snyder yesterday, as he regarded the recaptured and chastened Scrooge, "I thought kindness and a good home would keep Scrooge from running away. I wonder if kindness was best after all."

And Scrooge rubbed his bewhiskered nose against the back of Snyder's hand as though to say: "Let's forget it, old fellow, and begin again."

"Gee," said Snyder to Mr. Ditmars, "ain't I the soft one?"

MRS. ROOSEVELT NOT ILL.

In Telegram to His Daughter Colonel Denies Omaha Report.

Mrs. Richard Derby, wife of Dr. Richard Derby of 116 East Seventy-ninth Street, who was Miss Ethel C. Roosevelt, a daughter of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, received a telegram from her father from Omaha, Neb., yesterday afternoon, in which he said that Mrs. Roosevelt was in the best of health.

Colonel Roosevelt expressed surprise that the report had been circulated that his wife was seriously ill and was being rushed East on a fast train. He said he could not understand how the report originated.

AUTOS FOR RURAL CARRIERS

Post Office Department Will Put 208 Cars in Service Today.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—Two hundred and eight automobile rural postal delivery routes, distributed among eight States, will go into operation tomorrow. This means that approximately 11,440 miles of rural post roads will be traversed six days a week during August by automobile.

In all, orders have been issued authorizing 296 motor routes. Two experimental routes were put into operation in Pennsylvania July 1 from Quarryville. Other authorizations include eighty-three routes, effective Sept. 1, and five routes, effective Oct. 1.

The routes vary from fifty to sixty-four miles, and will be operated from nine to twelve months a year. The salary paid to carriers on such routes varies from $1,500 to $1,800 a year. Reports received by Postmaster General Burleson from a special inspection of the two pioneer routes show that this service is in every way satisfactory. It is demonstrated that where road conditions are good a sixty-mile route can be easily served in from seven to eight hours.

FOREST RECEIPTS LARGER.

Turned $2,500,000 into National Treasury in Last Fiscal Year.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—The national forests turned into the United States Treasury during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, nearly $2,500,000, an increase of more than $40,000 over the previous year. On account of the depressed condition of the lumber industry, the timber sales, which amounted to $1,164,000, yielded $75,000 less, but there were larger revenues from other sources. The grazing receipts which totaled $1,125,000, increased $127,000, and the water power receipts, which amounted to not quite $100,000, increased nearly $42,000.

The demoralization of the turpentine industry on account of the war's curtailment of the naval stores market caused the receipts from the sale of turpentining privileges on the national forest reserves to drop to about $9,000, as against nearly $15,000 last year.

MOTOR FAR TO GET TO WAR.

Two Canadians Here After 2,963-Mile Trip, on Way to the Front.

Robert Frank, 30 years old, an accountant, and George Morley, 45 years old, an engineer, both Englishmen, arrived yesterday at the Cornish Arms Hotel, 443 West Twenty-third Street, after traveling from Saskatoon, in the Canadian Northwest, a distance of 2,963 miles, on a motor cycle with side cradle. They are on their way back to England to enlist, and will sail on Wednesday for Liverpool on the Adriatic.

Frank has served nine years in the British Army in the West Yorkshire Regiment, and will enlist as a dispatch rider with his motor cycle. His partner will volunteer for the transport service or in the Munitions Department.

"We left Saskatoon on June 9," Frank said to a TIMES reporter, "carrying a tent, stove, and three grips, which, including ourselves, weighed 1,040 pounds. Our machine can go eighty-five miles an hour without the cradle, which reduced the speed to thirty-five miles. We had only two punctures the whole way, which was pretty good, considering the rough roads in North Dakota and Minnesota, which were too awful for words. The rains in those States were heavier than had ever been known before, and detained us ten days at Botineau, three days at Grand Forks, and two days at Fargo. We followed the old Yellowstone trail, and camped in our tent the whole time, which made it very enjoyable. The only drawback was the thick black mud in North Dakota and Minnesota."

DETAIN ALLEGED SWINDLER.

St. Louis Passenger Says Charges Against Him Had Been Dropped.

When the American liner St. Louis arrived yesterday from Liverpool the immigration officials detained Charles Wolfe, a first-cabin passenger, who asserted that he was an English financier and worth a million dollars, on the ground that he was an undesirable alien and should not be allowed to land in this country.

Eddy Mallon, chief of the pier detective force of the International Mercantile Marine Company, said that he had recognized Wolfe, in spite of a Van Dyke beard he had grown, as Charles Harcroft, who had been arrested in this city on a charge of swindling foreigners. The man admitted his identity, but said that the charges against him had been dropped and he was now engaged in business in London.

His wife was at the pier to meet him, and was very much agitated when informed that her husband would have to remain on the St. Louis overnight and go to Ellis Island early this morning, where he will be examined by a Board of Special Inquiry.

NEW PROBLEMS MET IN SUBWAY BUILDING

Engineers Overcome Obstacles Never Before Presented in Construction Work.

MANY STREAMS DIVERTED

Underpinning Buildings Has Often Cost More Than the Adjacent Excavation.

One block from the excavation made by the subway builders in Seventh Avenue, several tall loft buildings have been set vibrating until the tenants appealed to the owners. The slight shocks that had so alarmed them were the outward evidence that below the street level the engineers were meeting and solving some of the most perplexing problems that have confronted them in subway construction.

Each problem is being met in the most modern scientific way, and nothing has been left to chance. Each problem is well studied in advance of the initial steps, and dangers everywhere are reduced to a minimum. To the layman the difficulties would seem impossible to overcome. Quicksands have been frozen and then carved out, on one section it was necessary to pump out a million gallons of water a day in order to successfully prosecute the work, and in another spot it was necessary to surround the work with three-inch grooved sheeting in order to prevent the sand from flowing in and undermining the buildings in the vicinity.

Where the new route crossed the old the engineers had to support the present subway with supporting piles. In many places it was found expedient to build heavy retaining walls of concrete to safeguard buildings and prevent a general slide into the excavation.

Marshes and underground streams were a never ending source of worry to the builders. Perhaps the most difficult bit encountered was at the Centre Street loop, which runs over the old Collect Pond. Great planning was required and a greater work had to be accomplished before permanent foundations in this place were located.

Encounter Underground Streams.

In the Lexington Avenue work an underground stream was encountered near Fifty-eighth Street. Under the street level the excavators came upon a stream of considerable dimensions. In this case the problem was one of easy solution. The contractors simply diverted the stream into a convenient sewer, where it is still flowing without interfering with the work.

Sewers and other sub-surface structures are among the many obstacles encountered in subway building. The sewers are an important item in the work and the Public Service Commission maintains a sewer division in its engineering department. In some places the sewers are ripped out and diverted to new sewers built alongside or over the roof of the subway.

In other places a new "off-line" sewer is built in another street to replace the removal pipes. At times it is necessary to build syphon sewers which dip down under the subway and come up on the other side. In the Fourth Avenue Subway in Brooklyn a temporary sewer was built in the space for the local tracks between Hansom Place and Butler Street, and maintained for three years until the city could complete a relief sewer system near by. The temporary sewer was taken out just in time to permit the opening of the subway last June.

It frequently happens that the commission buys property and tears down buildings in the line of a subway. After construction the commission sells the ground subject to a permanent easement for the underground railroad. It rarely happens that buildings in the way are removed, but an instance of the kind occurred in December, 1912. A city fire house stood on the banks of the Harlem River at the end of 132d Street. It was near the line of the Lexington Avenue Subway, which crosses under the Harlem River there. Both for the sake of the subway work and for the convenience of the firemen, it was decided to remove the fire house to a new location at 135th Street and Park Avenue. The engineers of the commission and the contractors planned to lift the fire house off its foundations, slide it on a barge and tow it to its new location. The delicate operation was successfully accomplished while the firemen were in the house. Only a slight cracking of the plaster on the walls resulted. The rise and fall of the tide were utilized to accomplish the feat.

Below High Water Level.

Lying geographically in one of the most interesting sections of Manhattan Island, the Canal Street Subway from its inception has been of peculiar interest to the engineers of the designing division in charge of that particular line. Designing Engineer Charles E. Conover was in charge. The line is an exceedingly important link, as it is the only point where the Fourth Avenue line across the Manhattan Bridge crosses the Broadway-Lexington Avenue line.

"The sub-grade for that part of the Canal Street line extending from Centre Street to Broadway, including the portion lying under the Broadway Subway lies from thirty-five to forty feet below mean high water level," said Mr. Conover. "On account of this fact much thought and attention were given to the designing of this part of the structure. In the earlier discussion serious consideration was given to the idea of constructing by the freezing method certain portions of the line, particularly that part under the existing subway in Lafyette Street. It appeared that these methods had been used with considerable success in certain parts of Europe in sinking mine shafts. The method in the case of sinking mine shafts was to drive pipes down in a circle around the shaft and then circulate cold brine through these pipes by means of inner tubes, continuing the circulation until the earth in the vicinity was thoroughly solidified. It did not appear, however, that this freezing method had been used to such an extent as would warrant its adoption in subway construction."

COLLIER ANSWERS McLEAN.

Cheerfully Awaits Court's Decision on Adirondack Camp Title.

By Telegraph to the Editor of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

RAQUETTE LAKE, N. Y., Aug. 1.—In an interview Deputy Attorney McLean of the State Conservation Department is quoted as follows:

"With such offenders as these this commission has no sympathy whatever."

It is true that papers were served on me on July 14 last and I was given a month in which to make reply concerning my occupancy of Bluff Point Camp. It seemed to me that Mr. McLean might have done me the courtesy of awaiting that reply before giving out his interview.

I have occupied the camp where I now am for eleven or twelve years. For the first five or six I rented it from Frank H. Stott. When Mr. Stott's mother was very ill in California, he and his sisters decided to sell the camp. I purchased it for some $20,000. Mr. Stott believed he had an absolute title. His mother had made a will dividing the camp among her three children, and he and his sisters assigned their interest to me.

I am in entire sympathy with the conservation movement, as Louis Brandeis, who represented Collier's in the Ballinger case, will testify. It cost me more to protect the public interest in the Alaskan coal fields than to purchase my camp at Raquette Lake.

I have the strongest desire to see adequate protection for the Adirondack forest, and, whether the title I purchased from Mr. Stott be sustained by the courts or not, I shall co-operate in every possible way with the Conservation Department in preventing the cutting of timber and the spread of forest fires. I did not purchase this camp for commercial reasons. I have always bought timber outside rather than cut it for such buildings as I have erected, and should the courts decide I should pay rent, I shall cheerfully do so.

Fishing Schooner Ashore.

The fishing schooner Parker went ashore early yesterday morning on Northeast Brigantine Shoals and signaled for assistance, although she is lying in an easy position. PENNSYLVANIA ROAD HAS PENSIONED 8,881

Eight Employes Just Put On the Roll Have Served More Than 50 Years Each.

4,467 LIVING HONOR MEN

One Agent Sold 25,000,000 Tickets During His Career—Sons Succeed Fathers.

A bulletin just issued by the Pennsylvania Railroad system contains the names of fifty-seven employes who have been placed on the company's roll of honor (pension list). Eight of these are from lines west of Pittsburgh. The list is headed by Charles H. Cantwell, yard master at Wilmington, Del., who has been in the road's service for fifty-one years and nine months, and has held his present position since Sept. 1, 1888. Three other men have served fifty-one years, and four others fifty years. Among the old-timers are several who held important positions in their community, or who were well known to many thousands of people. Altogether 8,881 have been put on the pension roll, of whom 4,467 are living.

Mark A. McGrillis has been ticket agent at the Market Street wharf in Philadelphia since Sept. 1, 1877, and has served fifty years and five months all told. He has sold, according to estimates, not less than 25,000,000 tickets, and has started people off to almost every city, town, and village in the United States. He has developed a considerable philosophy for dealing with the man in a hurry in the course of fifty years of dealing with people who had to catch their trains in thirty seconds.

William H. Krogmann, a crossing watchman in Baltimore, has served the railroad fifty-one years and one month, and in all that time was never subjected to censure or discipline.

Alvan B. Conner, agent at Felton, Del., has served fifty years and two months. He was promoted to his present place on Jan. 1, 1900, when his father, who had been agent at Felton for forty-four years, was placed on the pension list. He had been his father's assistant since 1857, and the two together have held the position of station agent at Felton ever since that part of the road was opened in 1856. He served two terms in the Delaware State Senate.

Others who had served fifty years or more were Walter S. Laird, (fifty years two months,) of Philadelphia, who had been an engineer since 1884; Harry S. Given, (fifty years, four months,) of Harrisburg, an engine watchman; John R. Nowland, (fifty-one years, one month,) yard master for the district of Chester, Penn., since 1890; James Martin, (fifty-one years, three months,) of Hightstown, N. J., a hostler in the yards near Runyon, N. J. Among the other employes mentioned in the bulletin is George M. Ball, manager of the Empire Line since 1881. Mr. Ball lives in Germantown, and had been connected with the Empire Line since 1868.

John K. Gross, freight agent at York, Penn., since 1890, graduated from Franklin and Marshall College in 1867 with valedictory honors, and got his M. A. degree three years later. He had expected to study law, but poor health prevented this, and he entered the railroad service at York in 1872.

Maurice Cain, a shifting engineman in the shops at Logansport, Ind., was the last survivor of Company H of the Forty-sixth Indiana, most of whose members, after coming back from the civil war, were employed in the Panhandle shops at Logansport.

The bulletin states that since the roll of honor and retirement plan was established Jan. 1, 1900, the system has paid out nearly $11,500,000 in pensions.

PRESBYTERIANS' BIG YEAR.

Grew in Membership and Finances Despite War in Europe.

Facts concerning Presbyterian Church growth, made public yesterday, show that membership in the United States now stands at 1,513,046, an increase of 54,961 last year. This is the greatest increase ever made in a single year when no consolidations swelled the figures. More new ministers were ordained than in any previous year, and the number of Presbyterian ministers now stands at 9,070, the highest number yet attained.

Finances kept pace with membership. The total gifts were $27,784,000 last year, or $18.32 a member, the highest average of any religious body in America. Eight of the months covered by these reports were also covered by the European war period.

Presbyterianism in New York within the year included the acquisition of two large churches from the Reformed, and unprecedented growth in numbers and gifts of the large Manhattan and Brooklyn churches. Many of these are downtown, so called, and yet their numbers and money grow steadily, some of them breaking all records last year.

The reports show the largest Presbyterian Church in the world to be the Fifth Avenue. Its miscellaneous charities for the year amounted to $403,300. The cost of maintenance was almost $100,000. It gave to foreign missions $42,000, and to home $54,900. In its famous days, under the late Rev. Dr. John Hall, such figures were never attained.

Robert Bacon Back from War Zone.

Robert Bacon, former United States Ambassador to France, returned yesterday on the American liner St. Louis from a six weeks' visit to France in the interest of the American Red Cross relief work. He said the work done by the American hospital and the American surgery will be a monument in France to this country after the war is over. When asked if he would make any comment on the war, Mr. Bacon smiled and replied: "Wild horses could not drag it from me."

The Equitable Building is "good business"

The hundreds of tenants now located in the Equitable Building did not enroll out of sentiment, but because the Equitable Building appealed to their judgment as "good business."

And the Equitable Building is "good business," considered from whichever or from all of those manifold viewpoints which establish one building's superiority over another.

It is "good business" because it offers advantages which you cannot get elsewhere, yet involves no sacrifice on the score of cost.

Warning!

From the moment the organization of the Triangle Film Corporation was announced, all sorts of fantastic tales of fabulous expenditure and still more fabulous profits, have been flying about.

Based chiefly on fact, these stories have, in some cases, grown into such gross exaggerations as to amount to misrepresentation.

Dealing with a subject that interests more than half the people of the United States, such exaggeration is not unnatural.

Most of the stock of the Triangle Film Corporation is held by Mr. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation"; Mr. Ince, producer of "The Battle of Gettysburg" and other big pictures of the big outdoors; Mr. Sennett, producer of "Keystone Comedies"; Messrs. Bauman & Kessel, proprietors of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, myself or others directly concerned in the management. All of this stock is deposited for two years and cannot come on sale.

The remainder has been underwritten by a syndicate which will in turn dispose of it through brokers in the open market.

While I, and the experienced and successful motion picture men who are with me in this Company, have every reason to believe the business will be highly profitable, there is no authority whatever for the statement that either the Company itself or any of its officers guarantees or promises dividends of given amount or within a stated time.

Any business yielding such amazing profits as this business yields is subject to great risks.

It is not the type of investment for the man who cannot afford the chance of loss.

The total capital is $5,000,000—all common stock, par value $5.

There are no bonds—no notes—no preferred shares.

No matter how great nor how prompt his dividends a stockholder is not satisfied if he has been led to expect something greater or quicker.

So—

While I believe this venture will be even more profitable than any of my earlier ones, I am making no definite predictions as to date or amount. And no one else has any authority to make them—

I want satisfied stockholders—

GIANTS BRACE UP AFTER LOSING GAME

McGraw's Men Break Even in Double-Header with St. Louis —Perritt Saves Day.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Aug. 1.—The Giants and St. Louis Cardinals fought and clawed over two ball games this afternoon, and when the crowd finally got away in the heavy rain that started in just as the final session closed the score was even up. The locals grabbed the first, 4 to 3, and were drubbed in the second, 4 to 1.

Perritt, once the idol of the St. Louis fans, was the most unpopular man in the city when the fray ended, for he not only prevented the Cardinals from having any success by pitching the second game, but helped the Giants along with a neat little sacrifice that was responsible for one of the visitors' runs.

The first game went ten innings after the Giants rallied in the final frames and showed form that appeared fine enough to win the game. Marquard started in and was succeeded by Schauer after Snodgrass batted for him in the sixth. With the score 3 to 0 in favor of the locals, Snodgrass was put in to start things. He would not have done a thing had not Butler helped him along in his chosen ambition with a fumble that seemed very costly for a while.

Snodgrass knocked a dainty little bounder out to short. Butler's specialty is flies, deep flies, short flies, any kind of flies, but he detests grounders, and showed his disguest by letting the ball roll on. Snodgrass got safely on first. Burns singled and Snodgrass raced around to third. Robertson went out, Miller to Hyatt. Snodgrass scoring. Doyle fouled to Snyder, and then, with two out, the Giants started things again. Fletcher singled, scoring Burns. He went to second on the throw in. Merkle flied to Dolan.

In the ninth Fletcher singled and went all the way to third on Beck's wild throw. Merkle went out, Butler to Hyatt. Fletcher adding a run. Lobert sent one out to Miller, and Brainard tapped an easy one to Sallee. A hit by Long, a wild pitch by Schauer, and another single by Snyder gave the game to St. Louis in the ninth.

Doak faced Perritt in the second. The latter had a little of everything, and the locals did not have a chance at any time. The Giants began early. In the second Fletcher was hit by a pitched ball and moved to first. Two infield outs put him on third, and he scored when Betzel muffed Brainard's infield grounder.

Brainard's homer brought in two runs in the seventh. Merkle had singled to right and Lobert had died on an infield hit. Brainard's hit was a hot one over in left field. Just before it got to Bescher it took an ugly bound and before the ball was recovered Brainard was safe at home, Merkle going in before him.

Dooin kept up the good work with a single. Perritt responded with a sacrifice which put Dooin on second. Burns's single scored Dooin. The scores:

Better Rubber—Better Service

Empire Tires RED WEAR LONGEST

RED Rubber as we cure it makes the springiest, toughest tire known. Empire RED Rubber is a poor conductor of heat, which means less loss from friction. Empire RED Rubber doesn't deteriorate standing still, which means longer life. The Empire Non-skid Tread is extra thick, meaning more mileage.

Compare an Empire RED that has run four or five thousand miles with any other make that has given equal mileage. Then you'll know better than we can tell you.

BROOKLYN DROPS TWO.

Cincinnati Wins Both Games of Double-Header by Close Scores.

Special to The New York Times

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Aug. 1.—Hitting in the pinches, while their pitchers were backed by air-tight fielding, the Cincinnati Reds, leaders for the cellar position of the National League, had little trouble defeating Brooklyn in both ends of a double-header this afternoon. The score of the first game was 4 to 2, and that of the second game 6 to 3. A double and triple, followed by a sacrifice fly, gave the Reds the first game in the sixth inning. In the fourth inning of the second game, the veteran Jack Coombs issued two passes, was touched for four singles, which combination, intermingled with a sacrifice hit and a stolen base, netted the locals four runs and the game. Scores:

RACING SQUADRON IN CRUISING TRIM

Seawanhaka-Corinthian Yachts Reach Morris Cove After Easy Sail.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Aug. 1.—The big Seawanhaka-Corinthian racing squadron is anchored tonight at Morris Cove, the myriad of lights from the yachts blinking like a thousand fireflies on the placid waters of the snug little harbor where the fleet is waiting for its race to New London tomorrow morning. It was an easy, go-as-you-please run up the Sound today. The schooners, sloops, yawls, and ketches started from the clubhouse early, loafing along in an easterly wind.

The steam and power boats did not start until later, and were the first to arrive in the cove in front of the New Haven Yacht Club. Some of the larger boats anchored outside the breakwater. Today's run came after the rendezvous of the fleet at Oyster Bay. The clubhouse and the yachts were illuminated and long strings of lights were strung among the trees at Rouse Point. Commodore Daniel Bacon held a reception for the Captains, after which the annual dinner dance was held.

The annual regatta has attracted more yachts than in other years, and the yachtsmen are looking forward for a brisk easterly breeze tomorrow for the race to New London. The yachts coming up the Sound today, all in cruising trim, made an attractive picture.

It is the first time in many years that the Seawanhakas have turned out for a cruise, and among the yachts ready for tomorrow's race of the fleet are Arthur Curtiss James's Aloha, Mrs. Arthur Curtiss James's Lanai, H. Wyeth's Tamiwah, J. G. Wilson's Lodona, Walter Pillincott's Lady Betty, R. W. Rouss's Tango, Edward G. Smith's Silver Heels, Clinton Mackenzie's Froude, Walter C. Hubbard's Edana, and Edgar Palmer's Gunevere. This list completed all the steam and power yachts.

Among the schooners were Harold S. Vanderbilt's Vagrant, Henry Whiton's Windward, George W. Scott's Miladi, E. R. Price's Clarissa, E. Pierpont Hicks's Edgemere, W. Clark's Trolita, W. H. Judson's Rival, and Howard Smith's Ahmakola. The fleet of sloop yawls and ketches included G. F. Baker, Jr.'s., Venture, J. P. Morgan's Grayling, Ralph Ellis's Iroquis II., John G. Cutler's Alera, J. W. Alker's Alerion II., Dr. C. B. Keeler's Alice, G. B. Granbery's Malita, George Higgins's Spitzahll, Ogden Mills's Reid's Lena, Herbert Prentice's Silhouette, J. Albert Mahlsted's Okee II., Daniel Bacon's Solita, C. H. B. Rouss's Arvia, Everett Dominick's Colleen, Paul Plunkett's Sapho, George Bullock's Cleona, Guy Norman's Iris, and Lyman C. Buker's Sakana.

The fleet will leave here tomorrow morning for the only squadron run of the cruise. The destination will be New London Harbor. Prizes for the run have been offered by Commodore Bacon, Commodore George F. Baker, New York Yacht Club, and former Commodore August Heckher. The start will be made off the Eastern Breakwater, and the finish will be off Sarah's Ledge bell buoy. If the wind holds from the same quarter as it is today the yachts will not be able to lay their course.

It is expected that the craft will arrive in plenty of time to allow the yachtsmen who are members of Morris Cove Yacht Club an opportunity of joining the rendezvous of the cruising squadron of the latter organization long before colors tomorrow night.

Whitted's Error Gives Cubs Game.

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—Whitted's fumble of Zimmerman's single in the tenth inning gave Chicago a 2 to 1 victory over Philadelphia today. With one man out, Zimmerman lined a hot single to centre and Whitted ran in too close. He touched the ball and it bounded away from him and went to the clubhouse, while Zimmerman circled the bases with the winning run. The game was a great pitchers' battle between Alexander and Adams, the former striking out four hits, one of which was Williams's homer in the fifth. Adams allowed five scattered hits. A fumble by McLarry, Becker's sacrifice, and a single by Cravath netted the only run in the sixth, and prevented Adams pitching a shutout. Both clubs fielded in spectacular style, Cravath's sensational catch of Williams's liner in the eighth inning, after turning a somersault, being a feature. Score:

Yankees Lose to Cubans.

Special to The New York Times.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., Aug. 1.—Manager Donovan accompanied the Yankees here today and saw them defeated by a rally of the local Cuban team in the ninth inning by a score of 2 to 1. Pieh was opposed by Acosta, the youthful Cuban wonder. It was a pretty duel, Pieh holding the Cubans helpless until the ninth, when he weakened and three hits in succession scored the winning runs. The score by innings:

Dell a Pitcher by Accident.

W. J. (Wheezer) Dell, the young pitcher of the Brooklyn Club whose excellent twirling has been a big factor in the recent climb of the Superbas to the fore rank of the National League, says that he became a pitcher by accident. Nine years ago, when Dell was playing amateur ball in Butte, his regular place was on the first-base bag. One day the team was short of pitchers and he was sent to the mound as an emergency twirler. Dell did so well that he was graduated to the hurling staff of the team. Wilbert Robinson, manager of the Superbas, is on the outlook for a few more made-over first basemen who can pitch as well as "Wheezer."

YACHTS IN ANNUAL CRUISE.

New York Y. C. Fleet Will Rendezvous Tomorrow at New London.

The annual cruise of the New York Yacht Club will be held this week, and will be the biggest event of its kind of the Summer. This season the fleet will gather at New London, proceed as far East as Gloucester and returning to Marblehead disband after a cruise of some ten days. One of the most interesting features of the cruise will be the passage of the fleet through the Cape Cod Canal. In former years the yachts have frequently encountered boisterous conditions off Cape Cod and in 1910 they were so badly scattered by a northeaster that it was several days before the fleet was reunited at Portland. Commodore George F. Baker, Jr., who is in command of the fleet for the first time this year, will lead the squadron through the canal on Aug. 6 with his flag on his flagship Viking. It is expected that the greater part of the day will be necessary to tow the yachts to an anchorage for the night in Provincetown, ten miles north of the entrance.

The fleet will rendezvous at New London tomorrow afternoon leaving later in the day for Newport, where the annual race for the Astor Cups will be held on Wednesday. This race is one of the oldest in the annals of the club, being instituted in 1883 by Ogden Goelet and continued after his death in 1898 by the late Colonel John Jacob Astor. The fleet will run up into Buzzard's Bay on Thursday starting early the next morning for Provincetown.

Three racing runs will be held in Massachusetts Bay, from Provincetown to Marblehead on Aug. 7, from Marblehead to Gloucester on Aug. 9, and from Gloucester to Marblehead on Aug. 10. The annual race for the King's Cup, an event begun in 1903 and usually sailed off Newport, will be held this year off Marblehead Neck. It is one of the few yachting races open to the large boats of any organized yacht club, with sloops and schooners, and sailing in one class. Owing to the war the race was not sailed last year.

MANY YACHTS COMPETE.

Forty Craft Timed in Annual Race of the Bergen Beach Y. C.

One of the largest fleets to take part in a regatta on Jamaica Bay started in the annual race of the Bergen Beach Yacht Club yesterday. Forty craft were timed. Owing to the light airs at least a dozen yachts did not arrive in time to take part in the regatta. The boats that raced did not have the best of sport, as the wind was light throughout. This caused the Regatta Committee to cut the course in half for the majority of the divisions.

Among the cabin sloops the winner was Marion. Owing to several of the knockabouts arriving late the division was divided. The regular class was won by Cis and the special class was taken by Clinco. The first of the cabin catboats home was Sindbad. Selfish scored a sailover prize among the large open catboats and Bill Nye won among the small open cats.

Mock Turtle was the first of the turtle boats home. Among the boats that raced from Gravesend Bay, Maxine took one division and Mouse was the winner in the other class. Among the cruisers Siren led home the fleet. In the cabin power boat class the first craft home was May H. Sunnyside led home the large open power boats and Anna Grace won among the small open power boats. Corrected times may change the awards in several of the divisions. The prizes will be awarded at the Bergen Beach Yacht Club on Aug. 14.

OARSMEN BUSY ON HARLEM.

Local Entrants Practice for National Championships at Springfield.

A large number of oarsmen were out on the Harlem River yesterday practicing for the national championships to be held at Springfield, Mass., on Aug. 13 and 14. The boathouses along the river were crowded with the friends of the oarsmen. Because of the heat there was no fast time made, but a number of trial spins were held. Waldo Smith of the New York A. C., Deering of the Nassau Club, and Pearse of the Nonpareils, all entrants in the senior singles at Springfield, were out sculling yesterday morning.

Captain Hart of the Metropolitan Club, who is entered in the quarter-mile race at the nationals, rowed the distance with the tide in fast time. Heller, the only other entry from the Metropolitan Club for the Springfield regatta, pulled a slow two miles and spent a lot of time practicing his turns.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 1.—In a double-header here today St. Louis lost the first game to Buffalo, 6 to 2. The second was called in the eleventh on account of rain with the score 1 to 1. This contest was a pitchers' battle, Ford for Buffalo, being taken out in the eighth to allow Watson to bat for him. Anderson replaced Ford and gave no hits. The first game was easy for Krapp, who held St. Louis to five hits. Buffalo got four runs in the first and held its lead. Scores:

Boxing for Eastland Sufferers.

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—Ad Wolgast, former lightweight champion, and Steve Ketchel of Chicago, boxed ten rounds at Forest Park, a suburb, last night. According to critics, Wolgast had the better of the bout. Proceeds of the show, the first professional boxing here in years, went to Eastland sufferers.

FAST TENNIS FOR EDGEMERE TROPHY

Four Survivors in Semi-Final Round of Singles — One Match to Decide Doubles.

Play in the men's singles invitation tennis tournament of the Edgemere Club yesterday on the dirt courts of the club at Edgemere, L. I., closed with four players to do battle for the trophy, in the upper section Alrick H. Man, Jr., the former Yale star, and Walter Merrill Hall of the Seventh Regiment will be the opposing forces, while the lower section brings together a veteran and a youngster, the former Hugh Tallant and the latter Vanderbilt B. Ward, the Central States champion.

It was expected that the tournament would reach a conclusion before nightfall but as the semi-finalists were about to take up their positions on the courts, the rain, which had been threatening for nearly an hour, fell in torrents and necessitated a postponement of the matches. Just when the finals will be decided is an open question

BLOCKADE AND CONTRABAND.

The questions now pending between the United States and Great Britain arising out of the interruption of our trade with neutral ports included within the British blockade lines cannot and will not be confused with the very different and graver questions which form the subject of our diplomatic correspondence with Germany. In the one case it is a question of blockade and contraband, of neutral rights of trade in all kinds of commodities with other neutral countries, and of our right to trade in innocent goods with Germany. In the other case it is a question of crimes against international law, of invasions of our right and privilege as to which there can properly be no argument, since the crime against which we have most vehemently protested involved the killing of more than 100 American citizens in a manner not easily distinguishable from murder. That murder is wrong admits, of course, of no argument, there is no question. With Germany there can be no adjustment save in accordance with law and right. It is not a case for arbitration. Our differences with Great Britain are of a juridical nature. If they cannot be settled by discussion they will be a proper subject for reference to an arbitral tribunal in accordance with the terms of the existing treaty.

Our position was taken in the note of March 30, delivered to the British Government by Ambassador PAGE, in which we said:

> It is confidently assumed that his Majesty's Government will not deny that it is a rule sanctioned by general practice that, even though a blockade should exist and the doctrine of contraband as to unblockaded territory be rigidly enforced, innocent shipments may be freely transported to and from the United States through neutral countries to belligerent territory without being subject to the penalties of contraband traffic or breach of blockade, much less to detention, requisition or confiscation.

While the British reply has been withheld from publication pending the arrival of a supplementary note, it is understood that for a justification of her position Great Britain places much reliance upon our procedures and the decisions of our courts upon cargo seizures during our blockade of the Confederate States. A leading case is that of the Bermuda, sailing from Liverpool, ostensibly for the British island of Bermuda, but, as appeared from the papers, with Nassau as the real destination. The neutral port of Nassau had been much used during the war by blockade runners. In this case the Supreme Court said:

> It makes no difference whether the destination to the rebel port was ulterior or direct; nor could the question of destination be affected by transshipment at Nassau, if transshipment was intended, for that could not break the continuity of transportation of the cargo. The interposition of a neutral port between neutral departure and belligerent destination has always been a favorite resort of contraband carriers and blockade runners. But it never avails them when the ultimate destination is ascertained. A transportation from one point to another remains continuous so long as intent remains unchanged, no matter what stoppages or transshipments intervene.

The cargo was contraband, articles suited for immediate military use, the bills of lading were deceptive. The court held, therefore, that "both vessel and cargo, even if both were neutral, were rightly condemned." The much-discussed case of the Springbok presented different questions. The Springbok was a British ship. She set sail from London and was captured about 150 miles east of Nassau while making for that port. The ship in this case was not condemned, the court being unable to discover that her neutral owners had any interest in the cargo. But in view of misrepresentations made by the master as to the nature of the cargo and because the contents of many packages were concealed, and since the papers did not disclose the true names of the owners, it was evident that the real destination of the concealed contraband was some port within the blockaded lines. A part of the cargo being contraband, the residue, belonging to the same owners, said the court, must share the same fate. The opinion continues:

> But we do not now refer to the character of the cargo for the purpose of determining whether it was liable to condemnation as contraband, but for the purpose of ascertaining its real destination; for, we repeat, contraband or not could not be condemned if really destined for Nassau and not beyond, and contraband or not must be condemned if destined to any rebel port, for all rebel ports were under blockade.

Dissent from the doctrine laid down in this case has been frequent and emphatic, and the assertion has repeatedly been made that there can be no confiscation of noncontraband goods of neutral ownership in neutral ships because of the probability that the goods may from some intermediate port be transshipped to a blockaded port. It is to be noted, however, that the Claims Commission, before which Mr. EVARTS made the argument against our position, unanimously affirmed the condemnation.

Still other questions arose in the Matamoros cases, questions very similar to those to which the interruption of our trade with Holland and Sweden has now given rise. Matamoros is a Mexican town on the Rio Grande opposite Brownsville, Texas. It was a favorite port for blockade runners. The Peterhoff, a British steamer, cleared from London for Matamoros, was condemned in the District Court as a blockade runner. The Supreme Court on appeal held that "neutral trade to or from a blockaded country by inland navigation or transportation" is lawful, and "trade between London and Matamoros, even with intent to supply from Matamoros goods to Texas, violated no blockade and cannot be declared unlawful."

Such trade with unrestricted inland commerce between such port and the enemy's territory impairs undoubtedly, and very seriously impairs, the value of the blockade of the enemy's coast. But in cases such as that now in judgment we administer the public law of nations and are not at liberty to inquire what is for the particular advantage or disadvantage of our own or another country.

A great part of the cargo was contraband, however, goods intended for military use. Of these the court said that if really intended for sale in the market of Matamoros they would be free of liability, "for contraband may be transported by neutrals to a neutral port if intended to make part of its general stock in trade." Nothing in the evidence convinced the court that Matamoros was the intended market for this contraband, all the circumstances showed the real destination to be Brownsville, then occupied by the rebel forces. "We are obliged to conclude," said the court, "that the portion of the cargo we have characterized as contraband must be condemned." The restitution of the ship was decreed.

The principles laid down in these decisions of our court and then for the most part accepted by British authorities in international law will, it is understood, be made the bases of Great Britain's contention that her interference with our trade since the declaration of her blockade is justified by our own acts and by our own jurists. Readers of THE TIMES will doubtless be interested to know upon what American judicial decisions the British Government relies for the support of its present position. The questions are of the deepest interest, of very great importance, for their decision or adjudication will go far to determine what practice will be considered lawful in future. It is to be noted that a clear distinction must be made in the law and the principles applicable to blockade and those applicable to contraband. It is, of course, desirable and necessary that the British question should be kept wholly free of complication with the German dispute, although strenuous efforts are making to confuse the issues. They are totally dissimilar.

A DUTY OF THE STATES.

The work of building up the National Guard in the States that have been hitherto very inadequately represented in that organization in proportion to their population has begun with spirit. Recognition of the duty of the States in this matter is general and the officers of the Guard are doing all they can to arouse public sentiment in favor of an increase in the force. It will be a long and difficult task, however, requiring patience and energy and a great deal of forcible argument. The old idea of the militia regiment as a social organization still prevails in many States. It has not been wholly suppressed in this State, as the frank remarks of a National Guard officer printed in Friday's TIMES indicated. Federal control of the citizen soldiers under the Dick law has produced good results, especially in the East, where our militiamen are learning to be soldiers rapidly, but the control is limited and measures introduced in the next Congress to increase the authority of the War Department over the State troops are sure to be hotly debated.

It seems that the impetus for National Guard development should originate in the States themselves. Their citizens and their officials must be awakened to a sense of the absolute need of co-operation with the National Government to provide for the nation's defense. That Wisconsin, for example, with a population of about 2,500,000, should have an organized militia of less than 3,000 shows that some of the most progressive States have paid small heed to their obligations in this matter. The first thing to do is to arouse the people of the States to action. The National Guard should be recruited to its full strength throughout the country. Defects in the system can be more readily attended to. If the bill authorizing the War Department to pay members of the Guard is passed next Winter the stipend of each man will be small, but sufficient to pay all the expenses the service imposes upon him, including his company dues. It is not at all certain, however, that this bill will become a law. There is much to be said against it, much has been said against it as possible means of putting the National Guard under political influence.

The question of the proper development of the State soldiers, to fit them to fulfill their duty as a part of the nation's first line of defense, is one of the most pertinent in this hour, and one of the gravest. The opposition of employers and the labor unions must be overcome and the relative importance of the National Guard must be fixed in the minds of all the citizens of all the States.

NOT THE GOVERNOR ONLY, BUT THE PEOPLE INSULTED.

It is not conceivable that the Roman Catholic authorities would permit a coffin to be carried in any church of that denomination bearing the inscription that was placed upon BECKER'S. But the offense cannot be palliated by the removal of the plate, temporarily or otherwise. The libel upon the Governor, publicly proclaimed, is an insult to the people of the State and such a defiance of the majesty of the law as ought not to be ignored. Primarily, of course, the people themselves are responsible for the lack of respect for law which is so often manifested, and in this case is explained but not excused by the emotional excitement which prompted the shameful action. But that state of mind, and all the deplorable proceedings which produced it, are directly due to the lax administration of criminal law in this community.

It is well that no man shall be unjustly punished; but a trial for murder should be so thorough that no appeal from the verdict, except in the extremely rare case of the discovery of important new evidence, could be taken. Sentence having been passed it should be executed with as little delay as possible. In that way only can respect for the authority of the law be made so common that nobody will dare to dispute it. It would be well, too, if the bodies of criminals who pay the penalty of the law with their lives are not to be disposed of by the prison authorities, by cremation or secret burial, that public funerals should be prohibited. They serve no good purpose.

THE WAR SEEN BY A POET.

It is twenty-seven years since the one poem on Gettysburg adequate to the theme was written by a then unknown author, described as "an ex-Confederate soldier." "The High Tide at Gettysburg," written by WILL HENRY THOMPSON, a fighter at 16 in the Army of Northern Virginia, has climbed to higher fame ever since, and is as sure as any poem can be of an American immortality. But those who thrill at its noble lines know little or nothing of its author, and probably suppose that he is dead.

He is alive; and at Portland, Ore., he delivered a few days ago an address before the Sons of the American Revolution, called "The Shadow of a Flag." The meaning of a flag, the unaccountable love men have for it, was his theme; and he told how, in the tramp homeward from Appomattox, he and his boy comrades "sat down in the dust and ashes of "SHERMAN'S awful path and divided "a small square of bunting which "one of them had torn from his regimental flag and, hidden in his "bosom, had borne it away from the "field of his last despairing battle." He told how, in the fight at the Bloody Angle, a Federal flag was planted on the flimsy log breastworks he and his comrades—he was a Georgia boy—were defending:

> Its folds were riddled and its staff was splintered, but it placidly waved above friend and foe alike, whose bayonets were tangled together above the works. And once the shadow of the foeman's flag fell upon the young Georgian's face, and as he looked up his heart gave a startled leap as he saw that Georgia's star was on the old banner yet.
> And he saw "Ticonderoga and "Yorktown, Monterey and Chapulte-"pec fluttering in its folds as the "radiant thing stood in the shriveling "mouth of hell and waved and "waved." We begin to see that it is a parable of nationality he is telling, and to see that the love of the flag is as little to be analyzed and as proof against argument as the love for a mother. He told the same story in his poem—the Confederates lost, they could not win:
>
> They smote and fell, who set the bars
> Against the progress of the stars,
> And stayed the march of Motherland!
> And the love of the flag, which is the love of the nation, is strong whether what the nation stands for is good or bad, for liberty or tyranny; so he argues, and he says "This "spirit of nationality, well symbolized "by frenzied loyalty to a nation's "flag, is both a lofty and a danger-"ous thing." He finds in it the true explanation of the mysterious outbreak in Europe, and waves aside the White and Red Books and other books and all the labored arguments of statesmen. What brought on the war was "the proud pose of republic "or empire which says, 'Everything "for our people, nothing for those "beyond the border.'"

> "My country, better than yours! My "destiny greater than yours! My cul-"ture higher than yours! A place in "the sun for me, but not for you!". These are the cries that the rifles are speaking, and the cannon have thundered them until their brutal lungs are hoarse. * * * Some day this fever of nationalism must cool. No imaginary line can make one man better than another. The shadow of no flag should be a sanctuary for one and a menace to another. Yet because of this mad spirit of nationality the earth is drinking blood with a hot thirst.

A poet's explanation, but poets are often seers, and this one sees beyond the murder at Serajevo and the confusing political ratiocinations about the causes of the war. He turns to our flag, with "the comrade stars "assembled upon it, bound in a "mighty bond of indissoluble brother-"hood, and no star differs from an-"other in glory." Again one is reminded of "The High Tide at Gettysburg":

> They smote and stood, who held the hope
> Of nations on that slippery slope
> Amid the cheers of Christendom.

Nationalism, a violent and selfish nationalism, the deep cause of the mad scene in Europe; America in the shadow of the flag that holds "the hope of nations." "We hope that the "careworn, patient man, to whom we "have confided its vast destinies, "may keep our flag in the clear sky "—out of the smoke and flame of a "delirious world. But, whatever fate "wills, we will stand by the land and "its honor, and under the shadow of "its dauntless flag—wave where it "may."

TEAR DOWN THE FIRETRAPS.

The Board of Education cannot afford to make further use of the frame buildings connected with the Erasmus Hall High School in Brooklyn. They have been condemned, in unmistakable terms, after examination, by Fire Commissioner ADAMSON, and five chiefs and deputy chiefs of the Fire Department. The head of that department does not consider it within his province to order the demolition of the buildings, or to dictate action to other city departments. But the warning must be heeded. The buildings should be removed and provision made for the accommodation of all the pupils in the new fireproof structure until other arrangements can be made.

As Mr. ADAMSON says: "It would "be much better to have double "classes in the schools than to con-"tinue the use of buildings which "have been repeatedly pronounced "dangerous by the best expert au-"thority of this department." We may go further and say that it ought never to be necessary to give such warnings "repeatedly." We seem to be living in an era of great calamities. One possible calamity may be avoided by prompt and reasonable action in this matter.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Americans Are Not Intolerant.

German-Americans and the few other Americans of pro-German sympathies are making frequent complaint in and out of the newspapers about what they call the "intolerance" with which they are treated here—the systematic refusal to hear their arguments and the wholesale denunciation of Germany and the Germans to which they are obliged to listen wherever they go.

That occasional excuse for these complaints is given could not safely be denied, for kindness and courtesy are not the invariable characteristics of this country's inhabitants. Oftener than not, however, and very much oftener, the pro-German has himself to thank for the harsh language he encounters—he invites and compels it by the persistent bringing up for discussion of those questions relating to the war on which he perfectly well knows his neighbors disagree with him—on which he as well knows their convictions to be as strong as his own. As a rule, certainly, he would be let alone on these subjects if he would himself consent to be silent concerning them, and there are, as a matter of fact, innumerable little American groups containing one or more pro-Germans who have preserved quite unchanged the personally friendly relations of the past by the simple method of ceasing to talk about the one thing on which they know agreement to be impossible.

That is only to follow in this matter a course the necessity for which has long been recognized as necessary to social harmony in many others. It is the plan that has almost put an end, for instance, to the acrimonious religious disputes that not long ago raged in every community and made enemies of neighbors who now, without having changed their minds at all, get along together harmoniously.

Press and platform discussion of the war and its rights and wrongs is quite another matter. There the expression of opinion ought to be, as it is, entirely free, as long as it is decent, and as long as the presentation of both sides is permitted. In the latter respect the pro-Germans have no grievance whatever, and they have exercised a liberty that in Germany itself would have been punished as intolerable license. And all too often the German sympathizer shows a sensitiveness to criticism and opposition that he denies to his neighbor, and when he says that his neighbor will not listen to him he really means, usually, that the neighbor refuses to accept all his statements as true, all his logic as sound.

No Advice Wanted from Them.

That the occupants of the "deathhouse" in Sing Sing should be unanimous in their disapproval of capital punishment is so natural, so much a matter of course, that the expression of their opinions on the subject would be merely amusing if it were not impudent. Their particular and personal interest in the abolition of the death penalty is so obvious that the well-turned sentences of the document in which one of their number has formulated their demand for it will be read with impatience even by the very considerable number of people who oppose capital punishment, not because it threatens their own lives, but because they consider it at once barbarous and useless.

Plea for a more tender consideration for the sacredness of human life are half amusing and half disgusting when they come from convicted murderers. Their own acts have disqualified them from taking any part whatever in discussion of the question, and they are the very last who should criticise "society" or "civilization" for decreeing that resort to the desperate expedient of slaughter is sometimes either necessary or judicious.

The real problem of capital punishment is little or not at all concerned with the fate of those who, as they were told long ago, could abolish it as soon as they pleased by stopping the commission of murder. What troubles a large, and probably increasing, number of good citizens is not that the death penalty reduces the world's population of undesirables by a fraction so small that decimals can hardly express it, but because these killings in cold blood constitute a task utterly repugnant to modern sensibilities, because contentions as to its deterrent effect—the only ones now seriously made—are very dubiously true, and because of a slowly spreading willingness to confess that responsibility for murder, as for other crimes, lies at least in part further back than the individual who commits it.

That last consideration affects and qualifies the once unquestioned right of society to punish its evil-doers, and it is turning its mind more and more to the possibility and the duty of preventing criminality by a wiser control of heredity and environment. Every execution is an admission of social incompetence, just as every whipping of a child is an admission of incompetence on the part of parent or teacher, and such admissions have come to be humiliating.

Let Us Do Justice to Sharks.

So many years ago was it—some twenty or more—when the late HERMANN OELRICHS started the papers all over the country to discussing sharks that it would seem to be time to revive the controversy he excited.

Mr. OELRICHS contended that the ancient and widespread fear of sharks had little or no support in the shape of verified or verifiable cases in which they had killed or even injured a human being. So convinced was he of the harmlessness of this family of fishes that not only did he utilize such opportunities as chance provided for going in swimming among them, but he advertised a reward of $500 for such proof as a court would accept that in temperate waters even one man, woman, or child, while alive, was ever attacked by a shark. He limited the offer to temperate waters because he had little knowledge of shark habits in the tropics, but even there he thought them harmless scavengers.

The reward was never claimed. Yet to this day there is nothing that will so quickly set a crowd of swimmers scurrying for our beaches as the sight of a shark's fin in the offing, and the officers at Fort Totten have felt it their duty to make wide announcement of the fact that they saw and vainly tried to catch a shark there last week.

Some years ago there was published a photograph, said to have been taken from a steamer in the Red Sea, and seeming to show a shark in the very act of closing his jaws on a man, and the bitter hate that every sailor feels for the whole shark tribe can hardly be wholly baseless, for hate is always the exact measure of fear, and all fears have reason of one sort or another. But that sharks can properly be called dangerous, in this part of the world, is apparently untrue, and at least one traveler who asked questions on the subject all through the West Indies was unable to get any first-hand evidence of death or injury inflicted by them.

How the Guard Benefits Employers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Being myself a member of the National Guard and in a position to realize the truth of the statements made in your recent editorial "Employers and Militiamen," I wonder whether space could be allowed me in your paper to bring to the attention of such employers the following:

A man who is a member of the National Guard for five years is exempt from jury duty. During that period of five years his duties as a member of the Guard require that he shall go twice to camp, which means that he must be excused from his occupation for a week each time, and in addition must devote one day a year to rifle practice. That makes a total of nineteen days in five years. The ordinary citizen is liable for two weeks' jury duty each year, or a total of ten weeks in five years. Leaving patriotism aside, as a purely business proposition, doesn't the above show a net saving of time for the employer greatly in favor of the National Guardsman as an employe? Why can't they see it?

Get a Lemon.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

One of your correspondents speaks of diverting the street bands from their willful ways by the use of foreign pennies. If he will take my advice he will save his pennies and use lemons instead. A good fat lemon sucked before any street band is sure to put it out of commission in short order.

THE QUIET HARBOR.

"No harbor is so sheltered but that the ship of death may sail in."—Old Scotch Proverb.

Far, far away I just can see
A little boat sail toward the quay.
What does it bring—whose can it be?
It looks so small across the sea,
The cold north-sea that runs, ah, me,
Between my soldier-love and me!

I see it now beyond the lea,
Now near, now far, it seems to be—
Perhaps it brings my destiny;
Perchance it bears the mystic key
That unlocks pain or joy for me.
Oh, bring me joy, not pain—woe's me,
Nor man, nor maid e'er loved as we!
I could not bear his death—but, see,
They hail us—Jamie, where are ye?
And Jock, run quick, here's twice yer fee
If ye bring back good news to me—

Look, look! they wave—they call for me!
They stand with bared heads by the sea!
They've heard bad news—what can it be?
Oh, for winged feet that I might flee
As swift as sight across the lea
To see what they have brought to me!

They laid it at the feet of me
Upon the gray sands of the lea,
The long black box that came by sea,
And I cried in my agony—
"God, God, explain the mystery
Of Death!" . . . But silence answered me,
When they brought back my love to me—
Brought my dead soldier home to me!

CAROLINE RUSSELL BISPHAM.

A WOMAN'S HIDDEN GENIUS.

One Invented a Wonderful Oven and Might Have Got Very Rich.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your July 20th Topics of the Times editorial, "Questions for the Women," summoned to my mind's eye an old grievance that will not down, but daily urges me to "speak out after these many years!" This old grievance is connected with the oven to the old first gasoline stove, which was manufactured by a Mr. Hull in Cleveland, Ohio. The house we occupied at that time was not piped for gas, and my mother was one of the first purchasers of this gasoline stove. The oven was a portable affair to be placed over one burner when in use. After two or three weeks' experimenting with the oven, which was a single-walled tin box, with a door in one side, my mother sent for Mr. Hull and told him she wished him to make her a larger, double-walled oven; the outer wall (of both oven and door) to be of the best Russian sheet-iron; the inner wall of the best quality of tin—the two walls to be separated by a narrow air chamber, and the oven to be widened to cover two burners on the stove. Mr. Hull flatly refused. He couldn't waste time on such a fool contrivance. My mother's illimitable patience, and her assurance that she would "pay him his price," resulted, after many days, in the double-walled oven made according to her specifications. Afterward Mr. Hull took out a patent on that oven. My mother, at the time she invented the oven, had six of her seven children in school or college, and one, the seventh, most of the time bed-ridden, and all the time a great care and anxiety. She simply wanted an oven to do perfect work in baking foods for her family. She got it!

As for bread in cold storage. Twenty-five years ago my mother put bread and cake into tight tin boxes which she placed in her icebox. "That keeps them perfectly fresh," she would contentedly remark. She certainly invented the perfect working portable oven for gas, gasoline and kerosene stoves, though she never got the credit for it. It may be that hundreds of other intelligent women practiced cold storage for their bread, but it was not published abroad. Probably real women, rich in big families, absorbed in the fine accomplishment of the most important, the most complicated, the most noble work in the world, have not been able to spend the time, have not—like my mother—even thought of advertising or commercializing their inventions. These results of my mother's mind were by her quietly characterized—if spoken of at all—as: "This is my way," or, "This is, I think, an improvement."

Just one instance in another field: In 1880 my mother went up the great lakes from Cleveland to Duluth, then on into Dakota. She was impressed with the possibilities of investment in Duluth real estate. Duluth was then "down." The whole of Minnesota Point was offered to her for $400. She wrote to her business manager for the money, telling him, briefly, what she wanted it for. He refused to send it to her. He wrote to her: "You'd better throw it into Lake Erie, or burn it." In this case, other matters pressed so insistently that she gave up the fight. She said to me: "If I could only take the time to attend to it, I'd have it! It's a pity! but I'll have to give it up!" A few years ago I was in Duluth and inquired the value of Minnesota Point. "Oh, seven or eight million dollars." This trip up the lakes was one of my mother's rare vacations from the active personal conduct of her household, and the instance only goes to show the readiness and comprehensiveness with which her mind grappled with unfamiliar conditions—given a comparative freedom from usual details.

SPANISH WAR VETERANS.

What They Ask Is Preference After Their Eligibility Is Pronounced.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Spanish war veterans do not wish to let down any bars to civil service employment, much less to cut them up for firewood; they do not view public office as a gift instead of a service; they do not regard public service as something to be done not with the welfare of those served, but with the welfare of the server as the prime object; they do not seek to fill places with the unfit or serve well or ill employers who have no remedy; least of all do they seek to degrade the character of the public service. You charge them with all these improper motives, when, in fact, they seek through the proposed constitutional amendment only the same preference in promotion now given civil war veterans by Article V., Section 9, of the present Constitution. In interpreting that section, the Court of Appeals said:

> It seems to us clear that this section of the Constitution, read according to its letter and spirit, contemplates that in all examinations, competitive and non-competitive, the veterans of the civil war have no preference over other citizens of the State, but when, as a result of those examinations, a list is made up from which appointments and promotions can be made, consisting of those whose merit and fitness have been duly ascertained, then the veteran is entitled to preference, without regard to his standing on that list.—From opinion of Bartlett, J., in matter of Keymen, 148 N. Y., 219, 225.

The Spanish war veterans ask nothing else. They do not wish to escape examinations. They are willing to meet other citizens on equal terms in any test, but when, as a result of that test, however applied, they have proved their merit and fitness and find their names on the eligible lists, they believe they are entitled to preference in appointment therefrom and in promotion afterward.

These are matters concerning which I have had many conferences with department officers and other veterans in the past few years. I know their views and aims. I feel sure you would not willingly misrepresent anything. Yet the editorial mentioned conveyed ideas so contrary to the intent of those advocating the amendment that I respectfully ask you to give this a place in THE TIMES as a statement of fact.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Let me enlist your co-operation in an effort to correct a standing abuse which amounts to a public nuisance at the Harlem end of the Third Avenue Bridge. I refer to the practice of dry-sweeping the asphalt at the trolley loop near East 128th Street. On Sunday mornings, especially, crowds of women and children in holiday attire take the street cars at this point between 8 and 9 o'clock. These helpless people flock in near the little waiting booth, a shelter for perhaps a dozen, and while they stand there facing the car lines the employes of the Bridge Department sweeps the filthy dust into their faces—dried mud, expectorations, ends of cigars and cigarettes, and the rotten refuse of the garbage of fruit and vegetable stands are not pleasant things to breathe, as I have found. You must be choked and fouled by this dust or miss your cars. It is an outrage. This space should be clean by 8 A. M.

Four Walls.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May I inquire what force, if any, militates against the purchase of Madison Square Garden by the city, to be used as an all-the-year-round garden for the city's entertainment? The square, without, is an apparent perpetual possession of the people. Need the fact that the block at the northeast corner is inclosed by four walls disqualify it as a public possession?

Chickens Packed Alive.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I just saw a sight on the street which filled me with horror. I certainly do wish the practice could be stopped. Why do we allow chickens to be crated alive like sardines and then transported all over the City of New York? I know we need food, but why should we inflict torture on helpless animals?

SNATCHING LIFE FROM THE JAWS OF WAR.

A Tense Description of the Brave Work of the American Volunteer Motor-Ambulance Corps on the French Front.

A letter from William R. Berry to a friend in New York.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I inclose you a letter addressed from the "front" to Elliott Norton of this city. In view of the letter published in THE TIMES today from Mme. Mendes, I think it would be timely to print Mr. Berry's letter as an evidence of the high regard in which Americans are held by the men in the trenches.

PAUL FULLER, JR.

New York, July 30, 1915.

The Letter.

Baisieux, Somme, France,
June 1, 1915.

My Dear Norton: I am sure that you will be interested to know that the American Volunteer Motor-Ambulance Corps, which has been attached to the Second French Army in the north of France since the beginning of October, has, in obedience to orders from headquarters, removed to a new base less than six miles behind the lines. An immediate result of this movement has been the establishment of single "guard cars" at three points directly on the line and in front of the guns. Each guard car, equipped with two men, their rations and sleeping kit, remains at its post during twenty-four hours, a relief car taking up the work at each noon. These "Voitures de Garde," as the French call them, carry wounded from the actual trenches or from shell-proof dugouts, which by courtesy are called "first aid dressing stations," to the field hospitals (often tiny churches) situated in small villages just out of cannon range, and, in the event of a sudden attack or explosion of trench mines, also act as messengers to bring up from our base the remainder of our twenty-odd cars.

Perhaps I can best give you an idea of the kind of work the guard cars do by a description of my first twenty-four hours at a post less than half a mile or so behind the trenches.

Two of us, on a two-stretcher, three-sitter De Launey-Belville ambulance, arrived at the appointed village a little after midday, but still in time to bid good-bye to the French guard car which we were to replace. We found the doctors and stretcher bearers of two of the four regiments we were to serve installed in a one-story farmhouse, the covered barnyard entrance to which was the shelter our car was to occupy while awaiting orders.

At 2:30 P. M. there came a telephone order from the "Premier Poste de Secours" at the trenches for the "Voiture Americaine" to report there immediately. At once the car was gotten under way. Slowly we crawled through streets littered with the débris of shell-shattered houses and walls, and by sentries who demanded the password at the bayonet's point. Further on a clutter of supply and ammunition trains in a country lane kept us back, but a sudden turn to the left showed a white ribbon of empty road that wound up over a high ridge before us.

Innocent it looked, and inviting. We opened the throttle wide, and rushed to the summit—to find ourselves in full view of the German guns and trenches, while in the surface of the road we jolted over old shell marks gaped at us like manholes. Down the far side of the ridge we dropped at full speed, holding our breath. But no shells fell, and no bullets, and we inwardly congratulated ourselves as we drew up near the dugout shelters hidden in a hollow behind the French second line, where we found an orderly waiting for us beside a final sentry. Here the car was turned round and the stretchers shouldered, for we had reached a point beyond which the ambulance might not go, since the road, which led straight on to the German lines, was heavily barricaded at intervals of fifteen meters. The "Premier Poste de Secours," was some way down the road and we hurried toward it with the orderly.

When we reached it, this first-aid dressing station proved to be a dugout chamber five feet below ground, reached by an inclined plane much as one enters to the tomb chamber of the Great Pyramid of Cheops. Here we found our men, wounded but fifteen minutes before, ready for us. One had a rifle bullet through his head; the other was riddled with shrapnel. Both were in pretty bad shape, the shrapnel case especially, but as we lifted the first onto a stretcher his eyes opened and he smiled at us, while from the distorted bundle of light-blue uniform and red bandage which was the second, a weak and bloody hand crept out and closed over mine as we lifted him, and from a mouth which I could not see came the whisper, "Les Americaines!"

Back through the narrow openings in the barricaded road we moved again. But slowly this time, for even a light man on a stretcher seems to put on pounds with every footstep when the carry is a long one, and in this case too, red drops dripped from the second stretcher while the body on it writhed unceasingly under the canvas straps that bound it down. Back again over the high ridge, and down through our post village; out the other side through more sentries, and so on for five slow kilometers until we reached a little church in the centre of a little hamlet, where we laid our wounded down on home-made wooden operating tables that stood before the chancel near the altar steps.

At five o'clock we had our second trip, which brought us back in time for dinner at the doctors' mess. At seven-thirty the house trembled and our glasses rang again as the first of a series of heavy shells fell in the village. A bugle rang out in the shadowy main square—three sharp notes, "gardez vous"—and we knew that in every building in the village blue-clad figures were scurrying into the black cellars—thousands of them.

Boom! A sudden explosion on the other side of the town that sounded like stage cannon in "Shenandoah"; a sudden high-pitched wail with an intermittent hiss in it like a rocket with a crooked stick, and—bang! a shell burst less than a hundred yards from us with a tearing, shattering report that bowed us over our plates as though a leaden pipe had been dropped across our necks.

And so it went for thirty minutes until the shelling ceased as suddenly as it had begun. The Medecin Chef gave us each an extra glass of cognac, which we gratefully swallowed in one gulp. "Les boches on dit, 'Bon soir!'" he said, laughing—and it was a pleasant thing to find one's self laughing too.

As the church bell was tolling 11 o'clock that night a sudden light shone into our eyes, and we looked from our blankets at a sleepy orderly who stood in the stable doorway and beckoned with a ghostly forefinger.

"Hill 71, at once," he said hoarsely, and clattered away down the courtyard, looking gigantic behind his candle flame.

Without a single light, but with a cloudy moon to guide us, the car moved along the deserted streets, feeling its way through the tree shadows. Sentries are jumpy folk at these hours, and a moving lantern in the middle of the road brought us to a dead stop while a throaty "Qui vive!" from the darkness at the side marked where a rifle probably covered us.

The password—and then on again until "Hill 71" was reached. This time we left the car as close against the nearest dugouts as possible, for now the stray and wild bullets were zip-zapping overhead and along the road as thick as June bugs around a candle, and though most were stopped by the barricades or flew too high there were plenty looking for a billet. A dim red light showed us the "Poste de Secours." We shuffled down its passage and entered. One of two lanterns was smoking badly, and it was through a haze that we saw, at one end of a chamber perhaps forty feet long by ten feet wide in which one had to stoop, five or six slightly wounded infantrymen asleep on the straw which covered the earthen floor; at the other end, a rude operating table from which two orderlies were lifting the cause of our journey. In a corner the surgeon was washing his red hands in a basin. That was all.

But perhaps not quite all.

The orderlies whispered encouragingly into ears that did not hear as they strove to quiet the rolling to and fro of the bundle of red and white bandage which was a head, or bound to the stretcher the twitching arms and legs in which the broken nerves were struggling. Presently, however, they stooped, lifted, and passed out under the stars. We started to follow with the accoutrements and rifle, but the surgeon dried his hands and stopped us. In silence he picked up an infantry tunic, blood-stained and cut into ribbons by shrapnel and his scissors. From an inside pocket he drew a letter, creased and smeared with red.

"Gardez bien pour lui," he said as he handed it to us, and just inside the envelope we could see a piece of pressed white lilac, as clean and unspotted as on the day some one who had been left behind had put it there.

We were glad, after all that one of the lanterns was smoking.

HOW TO SAVE BROOKLYN.

The Transit Plan Proposed by the Committee of One Hundred.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The reports which have appeared in the press concerning my appearance before the Thompson Legislative Committee on Thursday have been so garbled and inaccurate as to justify me in asking space in your columns for the following:

At the request of Senator Thompson I appeared before his committee to explain the plans which are being urged upon the city by the Committee of One Hundred, which, if adopted, will avoid the rebuilding and provide for the removal of the elevated structure on that part of Fulton Street in the central section of Brooklyn. I left with his committee copies of the briefs and other communications which have been submitted both to the Board of Estimate and Public Service Commission; outlined briefly the numerous conferences which have been had on the subject to which the Board of Estimate, the Public Service Commission, and the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company have been participants, and the assurances which have recently been obtained from President McAneny that the alternative plan which we have been urging will receive careful consideration.

This plan makes provision for three essential things:

(a) It removes the elevated structure from Fulton Street for a mile and a half through the central section of the Borough.

(b) It articulates the Fulton Street elevated, after it is submerged, with the great six track dual subway already built at Flatbush Avenue and Ashland Place.

(c) It relocates the present two-track elevated now on Fulton Street beneath the surface on a parallel street, (Livingston Street,) which safeguards and enhances the present retail shopping and financial districts, and duplicates the present connection to the Brooklyn Bridge.

These accomplishments can be had for the sum of five and one-half million dollars, and as there will be saved to the city and the railroad company proposed expenditures of over one million

ROCKEFELLER BUYS APHRODITE STATUE

Famous Object of Art Controversy to Stand in the Temple of Love

IN THE OIL MAN'S GARDENS

Exhibited as Work of Praxiteles at National Art Club in 1905, It Caused Critics to Clash.

On a pedestal in the centre of the Temple of Love in John D. Rockefeller's gardens at Pocantico Hills will soon stand the famous statue of Aphrodite about the creation of which artists and art critics argued in high disagreement when it was exhibited at the National Arts Club here in the Spring of 1905. Frederick Linton, the former owner of the statue, exhibited it as a genuine work of Praxiteles, chiseled, approximately, in the fourth century B. C., and this claim was defended and disputed for years afterward.

Now Mr. Rockefeller has bought the statue as the central adornment of his Temple of Love, and the old clash of art critics may be revived with all of its intensity. The fact that Mr. Rockefeller has purchased the work, however, will guarantee it to many as genuine, for few will admit that Mr. Rockefeller would have paid money for an art object of spurious authenticity. The price paid for the statue has not been made public, but the report that it was $75,000 was not denied yesterday by a man familiar with the purchase.

Statue Is Bought Abroad.

The statue was bought abroad, probably in London, and has been consigned to Frank G. Montag, of Montag & Cassidy, Custom House brokers with offices in the Produce Exchange. Mr. Montag is acting only as an agent, however, for the law firm of Hornblower, Miller, Porter & Earle, who acted for Mr. Rockefeller, it was learned yesterday. Henry M. Earle, a member of the firm, declined to discuss the matter, explaining that, as a lawyer, he could not discuss the business of a client.

The man responsible for the purchase of the statue, it is said, is William Wells Bosworth, the architect, of 527 Fifth Avenue, who designed Mr. Rockefeller's gardens with a place for the statue in mind. When the statue was removed from the National Arts Club in 1906, it was Mr. Bosworth, a member of the club, who signed the receipt for it. It is not thought that he owned the marble at any time, but it is said that, figuratively speaking, it never got out of his sight. He was desirous, according to a report, of finding a suitable place for mounting it and is satisfied now that he has found such a place in Mr. Rockefeller's gardens. Mr. Bosworth was not in the city yesterday.

The history of the statue, known as the Linton Aphrodite because of its previous ownership, is a baffling medley of fact and mystery that has contributed little to the dispute over the statue's authorship. As far as is definitely known, it appeared first in America in 1893, when the owner shipped it to Chicago for exhibition at the World's Fair. Through some mistake it did not reach its destination until after the medals for the week of hanging awarded, keenly disappointed, Mr. Linton withdrew it from public view after a short exhibition of it in 1897. From that date until 1905 it lay unnoticed in a storage warehouse in Manhattan.

Its Authenticity in Dispute.

As soon as the Aphrodite was put on exhibition in the National Arts Club it commanded attention beyond and at the expense of all other art objects in the city, even in the country. Great crowds of artists, art experts, and merely curious people flocked to the club. The discussion, often heated, of the statue's authenticity, began at once, and while it went on nearly every one who viewed the silent woman in marble became enthusiastic in praise of her beauty and grace. Even those who ascribed the statue to the Renaissance or some later period, admitted that it was genuine, at least in its loveliness.

Many theories of the origin and history of the statue were advanced by the disputants, one that attracted much comment being offered by Charles Edward Cookman. After seeing Aphrodite he identified her as the same lady who had been purchased in 1901 by a friend of his at a fire sale of art objects in Jersey City. One of the striking characteristics of the statue is a peculiar bronze-like coloration, or, in the opinion of some, discoloration, of the marble. This, according to Mr. Cookman, was due to the fact that the Jersey City purchaser of the statue boiled it in acid to remove stains caused by the fire, with the result that the stains spread all over and permeated the entire statue. When this testimony was advanced those who had accepted it nicknamed the statue the "fire sale," the "boiled," the "caffeine," and the "mulatto" Venus.

Linton Under Oath, He Said.

Mr. Linton indignantly denied Mr. Cookman's story, but he gave only the barest details of the history of the statue as he knew it, explaining that he was under oath to keep silent.

"When I purchased the Aphrodite on the deck of a ship in Italy from two sailors," Mr. Linton said, "I was put under the most sacred of oaths not to reveal whence it came, and I have kept that oath, and shall always do so, for to tell the details of the purchase would reveal to the Government the secret and entail all manner of trouble for the men who sold it to me. Would the world have me make trouble for them and their families after taking an oath that the secret should always be inviolable?"

Little is known of the statue after it was removed from the National Arts Club, save that it was subsequently taken to Euorope. The statue is of one piece of marble and is life size. The exact date of its arrival here has not been made public.

AMOS PINCHOT BACKS LABOR

Attacks "Industrial Absolutism" in Speech to Colorado Miners.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Col., Aug. 1.—"Labor and the Future" was the subject of an address by Amos Pinchot of New York at a labor mass meeting here last night. The meeting was held as a protest of the conviction of John Lawson of the United Mine Workers.

Mr. Pinchot said he was not an apostle of labor, and really belonged to the "other camp." His address, however, was filled with denunciation of the methods of certain employers.

"Industrial absolutism," he said, "ushers in a reign of blood and horror and turns to the world and cries, 'How long, O Lord, will labor raise the sword and perish by the sword?' The unlawful violation of the strikers' rights or liberties to a point beyond endurance has become a trump card that is almost invariably played to divert the controversy from the real issue.

"If the great employers of labor in Colorado had even a brief sparkle of vision or imagination they would see by the conviction of John Lawson that they have gone too far. They are sowing the wind. In trying to bind down labor by brute force, without regard for justice, absolutism is wearing a rope of sand which will part even before it is securely in place."

Mr. Pinchot also said that in the Colorado act authorizing the appointment of a special Judge to try the miners' cases, "and the selection of a Colorado Fuel and Iron Company partisan, the full height of hypocritical unfairness has been reached."

GREAT TEMPLE UNEARTHED.

American Egyptologist Reports Its Discovery in Ancient Memphis.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 1.—The unearthing of a great temple at Memphis, Egypt, was announced tonight by the University of Pennsylvania Museum. Dr. Clarence L. Fisher, Curator of the Egyptian Section of the museum, was the leader of the Eckley B. Coxe, Jr., expedition to Egypt, which made the discovery.

The temple, it is estimated, is of the period of Rameses II., and was erected more than 3,000 years ago. While no definite data can be given out at this time, Egyptologists are inclined to believe that the temple is one that was built by Seti I., and the same one as described in Herodotus.

BIDE-A-WEE HOME TAXED ON LEGACIES

Surrogate Decides It Is Not Exempt Under the Transfer Tax Law.

AFFECTS MANY OTHER CASES

Decision Holds Society Not Exempt Because It Does Not Aid in Enforcing the Law.

The Bide-a-Wee Home for Animals, in East Thirty-eighth Street, is not exempt from taxation under the transfer tax law, according to a decision handed down recently by Surrogate Cohalan in the matter of settling up the affairs of the estate of Helen D. Winans. Contrary to the accepted interpretation, the home must pay a State tax on any legacy it receives for humane purposes.

The decision is of importance, not so much on account of the amount involved in this instance, but because of the numerous bequests that lovers of animals have made to the institution, the total of which cannot be estimated readily.

Under the will of Mrs. Winans, the residuary estate, amounting to $6,021, goes to the home. When the estate went to the State Controller's office for appraisal, Transfer Tax Appraiser Albert J. Berwin fixed a tax of $251 on the legacy to the Bide-a-Wee Home.

Fred G. B. Champion, Treasurer of the home, took exception to the tax, and appealed to the Surrogate. The appeal contained the "purposes" clause of the home's charter, which reads:

"To provide shelter, homes, drinking places and other comforts and accommodations for animals; to alleviate the sufferings of distressed animals, and to supply medical care and attendance for sick and distressed animals; generally to improve the condition and treatment of animals by all lawful means and to promote, foster and encourage the spirit of humanity toward the condition of dumb creatures by mankind."

The Surrogate, in sustaining Appraiser Berwin and dismissing the appeal, says in part:

"The appellant, under the terms of its incorporation, does not appear to have the right to engage in the work of enforcing the laws relating to cruelty to animals; lacking this right, it is not entitled to an exemption from tax on a transfer of a legacy to it."

Another case that will follow the decision of the Surrogate is now before the Appraisers in the State Controller's office in the estate of Alice Maud Howard, who left a cash bequest of $2,000 to the home.

Under this ruling of the Surrogate, the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals is regarded as exempt from any tax by the State on bequests to the society.

SULZER WANTS COUNTY JOB.

Ex-Governor Would Like to be District Attorney.

William Sulzer, who is in Seattle, will return in two weeks and begin a campaign for District Attorney. His friends say he will be an independent candidate, but he may enter the Democratic primaries also. Those talked of at Tammany Hall for this office include Magistrate Joseph E. Corrigan and Thomas W. Churchill, President of the Board of Education. Frank Moss's friends say he will enter the Republican primaries against District Attorney Perkins, the organization candidate.

It is said that Tammany has decided to nominate Senator Robert F. Wagner for one of the six places on the Supreme Court Bench. This decision, if correctly reported, will disappoint Assemblyman Alfred E. Smith, who wanted the nomination for Sheriff.

City Court Judge John V. McAvoy is to have a Supreme Court nomination, it is said.

County Clerk Schneider, who conducts the Cleveland Democracy, said yesterday that Tammany would have to face several fights in the Assembly districts this Fall.

TO WED DAUGHTER'S FRIEND

Federal Judge Evans Engaged to Miss Louise Wood of Worcester.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Aug. 1.—The engagement of Federal Judge Walter Evans of Louisville, Ky., to Miss Louise Wood, daughter of the late Cyrus G. Wood, a manufacturer of Worcester, Mass., was announced last night. Judge Evans met his fiancée in Pittsfield, where the Judge spends the Summers. Miss Wood was a close friend of the Judge's daughter, Miss Fannie Evans, who met a tragic death two years ago.

Judge Evans is 73 years old, and has been prominent in Republican politics in Kentucky for forty years. He was a former United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and was a member of the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-sixth Congresses. He was appointed to the Federal bench by President McKinley in 1899. For the last sixteen years Judge Evans has presided over the United States District Court of Western Kentucky. Miss Wood is active in charitable work in Worcester. THIMBLE THEATRE OPENING.

First Performance Tonight for Uplift of Greenwich Villagers.

Charles Edison's Thimble Theatre, 10 Fifth Avenue, planned to give hearing to young persons striving for recognition as well as to furnish entertainment for Greenwich Villagers, will be opened this evening for the appearance of Miss Helen Dutton, singing selections from Robert Louis Stevenson's nursery rhymes and sea songs set to music by Dwight Lewis Fiske, and John W. Draper, a college poet. Miss Dutton will be accompanied by Mr. Fiske, one of the youngest American composers. He dedicated his Stevenson songs to Mrs. Stevenson, by whom they were accepted with praise. Mr. Draper, a nephew of the late Mrs. Cortlandt Draper, is a student of New York University and the author of two books. In addition to these selections there will be classical and contemporary music on an Edison phonograph.

Mrs. Le Gallienne to Act Here.

Mrs. Julie Le Gallienne, the second wife of Richard Le Gallienne, the English poet, whom she divorced in June, 1911, in South Norwalk, Conn., arrived yesterday from England on the liner St. Louis, accompanied by her 16-year-old daughter, Miss Ena. She said that her daughter had already made her début on the stage in the "Laughter of Fools," and would appear under the tutorship of William Faversham while in this country. Mrs. Le Gallienne and her daughter left the pier at the foot of West Twenty-second Street in an automobile for the Faversham home in Long Island.

Miss Helen Hamilton of New York is the guest of her grandmother, Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, at the Jaques cottage.

Moses Taylor Pyne of New York will spend the rest of the season at the Malvern.

MISS ELSIE JANIS RETURNS.

James Matthews, Hippodrome's New Director, Also on the St. Louis.

Elsie Janis returned from London yesterday on the American liner St. Louis to play the leading rôle in "The Missing Link," at the Globe Theatre, under the management of Charles B. Dillingham. The actress said that she had recited her poem, "Where Are You, God?" to the wounded soldiers in England, and had sung to them.

"I am not quite what one might call a gifted coloratura soprano," Miss Janis explained, "but I did my best with what voice I have. Wherever I sang in the convalescent camps the soldiers all yelled, 'Back to the trenches!' but I managed to collect $2,500 for the blind soldiers' fund by the sale of my poem."

Another passenger on the St. Louis was James Matthews, who has been engaged by Charles B. Dillingham to produce the new spectacular play "America" at the Hippodrome in the Fall. For the last eighteen years Mr. Matthews has been stage manager of the Duke of York's Theatre, London, for the late Charles Frohman, and he has never been in America before.

"I often wanted to visit New York," he said, "but Mr. Frohman would not let me come over, as he wished his London theatre to be run strictly on English lines."

With Mr. Matthews were six English boy choristers who will take part in the production at the Hippodrome.

PRAISES GERMAN SCHOOL SYSTEM

Dean Russell Says Nation's Strength Is Due to Teaching Obedience to the Young.

RESPECT FOR AUTHORITY

Commends Plan Which Makes Every Child the Educational Ward of the State.

Dr. James Earl Russell, dean of the Teachers College of Columbia University, a few days ago told the teachers who had come from all over the United States to the summer school, that the secret of the German success in anything the nation chose to make the object of its energies lay in the German system of education.

In two lectures, "Education for Citizenship" and "Education for Leadership," he pointed out the values of a system that taught everybody in the nation how to be obedient and then selected the ablest and trained them to become leaders who would be obeyed; and contrasted it with the English system which until recently made no particular provision for the masses, and developed leaders who would be brilliant individuals and all-round men rather than devoted servants of the state.

The nature of the training of the entire school population, rich and poor, which molds the German people into a unit he tells in the lecture on "Education for Citizenship," and gives as well a sketch of the circumstances which made this education necessary.

Made Masters by Education.

"Never at any time," says Dean Russell, "have I been so confident of the strength of our profession as in these days when western civilization is crumbling like a house of cards. My confidence is begotten by a study of that system of education which has made Germany what it is today. Whether you hate the Germans, love them, or fear them, you must admire the perfection of the machine which more than all also enables that empire today to defy the world. I deplore German militarism as I dislike the English navy. With both out of the way there would be no war; with both present the problem is to find what makes the Germans willing to sacrifice everything that they prize most in private life that they may succeed on the field of battle.

"Now imagine yourself a Prussian in 1810. Listen to Fichte's addresses to the German nation, an appeal to his downtrodden countrymen to throw off their shackles by their own moral strength and to rise as a nation on whom the future of the world depended. If red blood flows in your veins you will respond to the appeal; when the time comes you will strike and strike hard, and then when the invader is driven out you will keep up your military training and make your son a soldier against the day when some foreign foe may seek again to enslave you. What you want is a chance to work and a right to the harvest, time to think and take pride in your intelligence, opportunity to create and enjoy your creation. But all these things will not be given you for the asking; the price you must pay is military efficiency. You must be ready for war in order that you may have peace.

Training Starts at Birth.

"The first article in the German creed is 'I believe in military power.' Those who know what it means not to have it need no instruction; successive generations of young Germans must learn its significance. Hence the first duty of the school is to prepare boys fit in body and mind for military service.

"The German boy's education begins with his birth. That event is recorded in the police records and with it not only his pedigree, but his father's social status. Throughout his school days in every official document is given not only his father's name, but the fact that his father was a prince or a peasant. At 6 years of age the police report him eligible for school. During the next eight years he must be in school or accounted for to the satisfaction of those in power.

"The German schoolboy does not recite lessons; he receives instruction. He is never assigned tasks wholly new to be worked out at home. What he learns at school is given him by his teachers. He is never encouraged to guess at anything. It is the teacher's business to teach, not to waste the pupil's time in haphazard guessing. The child is the ward of the State; teachers and schools exist that the child may be developed into the man that the State would have him be.

"In the making of Germans little weight is attached to the contents of the curriculum. The peasant attends one kind of school, the business man another, and the future scholar still another, but all must first be made Germans. The secret is in the methods rather than the contents.

"The German teacher is not only master in his classroom but a man of consequence in the outside world. He is a civil servant, an officer of the State, who has been trained by the State, is paid by the State, and will until death be supported by the State. By example and precept, by persuasion if possible or force if necessary, the German teacher attains the end expressed by the legend at the head of every official document issued by the Prussian Ministry of Education for the guidance of teachers—'The making of God-fearing, patriotic, self-supporting subjects of imperial Germany.'

Teach Respect for Authority.

"The gist of the ideal is summed up in the word 'subjects,' but the qualifying terms 'God-fearing, patriotic, self-supporting' play an important rôle. The master-minds of Germany fastened on the Christian religion as one great means of reconciling the masses to the strenuous life of a modern state. Every nation now at war, for that matter, unless you except France, which is officially but not actually non-religious, has made the teaching of religion a fundamental article of its educational course. And the end sought by the state is unquestionably respect for authority and confident reliance upon a power above and beyond the individual.

"A State that aims at military supremacy must have money to spend and plenty of it. A people that sets itself the task of creating wealth sufficient, not only for private needs but also for public consumption on a vast scale cannot neglect vocational training. So Germany leads the world in its provision for industrial, commercial, and agricultural education.

"If anywhere in the world, or at any time in history, a parallel can be found to this superb machine for the education of a nation I do not know of it. The State that depends on military power for its security and advancement must imitate, and so far as I can see any variation from the German form would be a confession of weakness. But if other ideals control, such as the theory that the greatest good of all is best subserved by the highest development of each, some other system of education must be found that will assure civil order and social stability. The elaboration of such a system, comprehensive in scope and efficient in operation, is the supreme task of all God-fearing, patriotic, self-supporting American citizens."

DR. W. A. CROFFUT DEAD.

Editor and Traveler Expired in Washington After a Long Illness.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—Dr. William A. Croffut, editor and traveler, died at his home in Washington on Saturday after a long illness. He was born in Redding, Conn., in January, 1835. At 19 he was a reporter for The New Haven Palladium. In the civil war he served as a private of the First Minnesota Regiment and as a field correspondent of The New York Tribune. After the war he resumed newspaper work, mostly of an editorial character. He was employed at various times by The Rochester Democrat, The St. Paul Times, The Minneapolis Tribune, The Chicago Evening Post, and The Graphic, Tribune, and World of New York. In the first Cleveland Administration he was editor of The Washington Post.

Dr. Croffut traveled extensively. Some of his travel letters were written in verse and were printed under the title of "A Midsummer Lark." He wrote the libretto of a comic opera, "Deseret," the music by Dudley Buck, which was produced in New York in 1882. It was a burlesque on the Mormons. Among his books were "The Crimson Wolf," a novel; "The Vanderbilts," "A History of Connecticut in the Rebellion," and "Bourbon Ballads," a collection of political poems written in 1880. He wrote the opening ode for the Columbian Exposition held in Chicago in 1893.

From 1888 to 1894 Dr. Croffut was executive officer of the United States Geological Survey. He organized the Anti-Imperialist League in 1899, and was afterward President of the Liberty League. His first wife was Miss Margaret Marshall of Danbury, Conn. His second wife, who survives him, was Miss Bessie B. Nicholls of Washington.

SOME SHIFTS OF FOREIGN TRADE

Indications That Are Shown by the Government Figures for Eleven Months.

EXPORTS OF EXPLOSIVES

The Dyestuffs Imports and Those of British Cottons—Shipping Statistics.

Details of the abnormal shifts in foreign commerce now prevailing as a result of the upset of peaceful trade conditions by the European war are shown in the Government's statistics for the eleven months of the last fiscal year ended May 30. While the Department of Commerce has issued a brief summary of outward and inward trade for the full year, the increase or decrease is merely proportional. The eleven months' statistics give an excellent idea as to the war's effect on various lines; as well as an indication of what may be expected in a trade way during the continuance of the conflict.

It is shown, for instance, that in the eleven months ended with May, coal-tar colors from all sources of foreign supply were only $5,800,479, against $6,628,-145 in the corresponding period of 1914 and $6,607,272 in the eleven months of 1913. Germany, of course, supplied the great bulk of dyestuffs in the past. The Government report shows that in the eleven months covered by the period under review the coal-tar entries from Germany totaled $4,241,351, compared with $5,445,970 in the eleven months of last year. In the same period of 1913 the color imports from Germany were appraised about $100,000 below the 1914 period. Color imports from Germany in May were down to $1,056, against $567,-149 in May, 1914.

It is interesting to note that in the eleven months of this year Swiss colors took a spurt compared with the same period of last year and reached a value of $895,079 against $707,333 in 1914. Coal-tar colors from the United Kingdom, which in the eleven months of 1914 were valued at $224,656, were down to $152,-307 in the corresponding period this year. The supplies drawn by American manufacturers from "other countries," as the report puts it, grew in the eleven months to a total of $511,472 against $250,186 in 1914. This would seem to show that users here have made strenuous efforts to replenish their supplies from countries having small stocks on hand, but not identified with dyestuff manufacture.

Another fact of interest revealed by the Government's statistics is that indigo imports, both as regards quantity and value, exceed last year's record in the eleven months. For the period this year the entries were 7,768,704 pounds, valued at $1,200,614, against 7,628,530 pounds, worth $1,028,071 in the period of 1914. As returned by the Government, the above figures cover both natural and synthetic indigo, no line of demarkation being made between the two kinds. General chemical imports as classified in the report show that the eleven "months' imports totaled $75,-296,730, compared with $86,221,601 in 1914.

One of the surprises of the present import situation is the way the United Kingdom has managed during the stress of war to maintain its imports here of cotton goods. Switzerland in the period shows a steady gain, while French imports declined sharply. While Germany managed to get some goods over here, the total for the eleven months is far below normal, and apparently growing lighter from month to month. The total cotton goods imports, including hosiery and knit articles, into this country from all sources in the period aggregated $4,011,092, compared with $5,239,815 in 1914.

Wool cloth imports are falling, as in the period their value was only $9,382,-766, compared with $10,884,647 in the eleven months of 1914. Carpets and carpetings were brought in heavily diminished quantities and values. Their value in the period was $2,765,758, while in the period a year ago they amounted to $4,060,978. Silk entries are holding up relatively better than any of the other textiles. While there were some declines in May of imports in the piece and laces and embroideries, the totals for the eleven months do not compare as unfavorably with the corresponding period of 1914 as might have been expected. Raw and unmanufactured silk in the period had a value of $76,777,821 against $32,987,021 in the period of 1914.

How the export trade in explosives grew in May and in the eleven months is shown in the statement that in that month such products shipped out of this country had a total value of $29,786,444, compared with $5,877,915 in 1914. Cartridge exports in the period reached the unprecedented total of $15,246,827, while in the eleven months of last year their value was only $3,522,318. In May alone the cartridge export business reached $3,028,083, against a mere $299,003 the same month a year before. Gunpowder shipments in the period aggregated $1,-531,644, while in 1914 their value was put down at $241,027. There was a decline in dynamite shipments abroad.

Some of the striking changes taking place in the eleven months' exports, compared with the preceding period of 1914, are set forth in the following table:

	1915.	1914.
Automobiles	$46,889,000	$24,583,000
Rubber manufactures..	4,224,000	3,052,000
Metal working machinery	24,427,000	12,931,000
Wire	11,768,000	7,203,000
Leather (sole)	19,528,000	6,815,000
Boots and shoes	29,340,000	16,817,000
Printing paper	2,344,000	1,961,000
Paraffin	9,394,000	6,019,000
Wool clothing	7,384,000	2,055,000

Not all lines have fared as well in the matter of export as the above classes of products. The war has put a blight on many exports which naturally are most in demand abroad in times of peace. Some of the principal lines of American exports hurt by the conflict in the eleven months, compared with the corresponding period a year ago, are the following:

	1915.	1914.
Agricultural implements	$8,450,000	$30,301,000
Cars	3,234,000	10,409,000
Copper manufactures	87,280,000	123,423,000
Sewing machines	5,659,000	10,496,000
Typewriters	4,521,000	9,769,000
Rails	3,455,000	9,893,000
Lumber manufactures..	2,367,000	8,199,000
Lumber	52,570,000	83,030,000
Furniture	2,694,000	6,113,000

The Government's report shows that American ships made big gains in export commerce in the eleven months ended with May. It appears that American shipping increased $10,000,000 in the outward carrying trade in the period, a gain approximately of 68 per cent. Since War broke out last August, German and Austrian vessels have ceased to operate, such figures as appear in the report relating to the period just before the outbreak of hostilities. With the German merchant marine eliminated as a factor in the carrying trade between this country and Germany and other ports, other foreign countries gained in the tonnage from the United States.

The carrying capacity of the British merchant marine shows an expansion in comparison with the eleven months of 1914, but vessels flying the French flag gained nearly 100 per cent. in the carrying of exports from American ports. Norwegian vessels made a gain of 140 per cent.; Italian, 85 per cent.; Dutch vessels, 30 per cent., and the merchant marine of Japan, about 25 per cent.

$15,500,000,000 COST OF ONE YEAR OF WAR

National City Bank Figures That That Sum Has Been Borrowed and Spent.

INCENTIVE FOR SAVING HERE

Way Open to Buy American Securities and Make This a Creditor Nation.

The National City Bank devotes most of its August letter to a review of the first year of the war, with especial attention to financial developments. There are no signs, says the bank, that either side is running out of men or money, or that the people of any warring country are weakening in resolution or confidence. The letter continues:

"Excluding Italy, the war loans have aggregated approximately $15,500,000,000, and this about represents the governmental expenditures for the year. The total indebtedness of these countries at the outbreak of the war, including the debts of the several States of the German Empire, was approximately $23,-000,000,000.

"The cash expenditures of Great Britain are larger than those of any other country, as service in the army and navy is voluntary and the pay and allowances are much higher than in the continental countries. In March the extraordinary expenditures of Great Britain were stated to be about $10,-000,000 per day, but the Chancellor of the Exchequer recently stated that they had reached $15,000,000 and were still rising.

"The expenditures of the German Government are probably next to those of Great Britain. The government has realized $3,490,000,000 by means of two loans, which it is understood will carry the war into the coming Fall, but as its expenditures have been growing, it is probable that they are now as much as $10,000,000 per day. Altogether, the estimate of $50,000,000 per day for the outlays of all the governments is seen not to be improbable."

Commenting on plans for increased taxation in England, the letter says:

"Accompanying the demand for new taxation there is a call for economy—in public and in private affairs. Lord Middleton, last month, offering a resolution declaring for an immediate reduction of the civil expenditures of the Government, made a speech upon the growth of public expenditures that attracted wide comment in England and deserves a reading in the United States, where the same tendencies are seen.

"He said that in ten years the imperial expenditures had gone up from $710,000,000 per annum to $1,035,000,000, and local expenditures from $435,000,000 to $670,000,000. The report made a few days before the war broke out showed that in the last eight years 5,387 permanent officials and 10,000 temporary civil servants had been appointed in connection with various acts of Parliament. He said that twenty years ago the cost of the Home Office was $500,000; it was now $1,035,000; the cost of the Board of Trade had risen from $890,000 to $2,245,000, of the Local Government Board from $905,000 to $1,355,-000, and of the Board of Agriculture from $515,000 to $1,765,000; the total from $2,900,000 to $6,640,000. In fact, he declared that there was no end of waste in the Government service, and urged that the Government now should set an example in economy.

"It would be fortunate if knowledge of the destruction and waste going on in Europe would prompt the people of other countries, including the United States, to study practical economy, and its benefits, not only to the individual in saving something for a rainy day, but to society as a whole in providing capital for industrial advancement.

"There are other reasons especially applicable to ourselves for encouraging saving at this time. There is now afforded the best opportunity this country will ever have to buy back its own securities from foreign owners, thus coming into more complete ownership of the properties they represent, and there is also the opportunity to make the United States a creditor nation by means of investments in other countries, particularly the developing countries of this hemisphere."

FRENCH LOAN $43,000,000.

Success Influences England to Adopt the Same Plan.

The French loan in this country, which was negotiated two months ago with the Rothschilds of Paris by a syndicate headed by J. P. Morgan & Co., has amounted to date to $43,000,000. The loan was different from others placed here by the allied nations, in that it was based on French-held American railroad securities as collateral, and was not definitely limited in size. It was understood in the financial district for several weeks after its terms were closed that deposits of the railroad bonds in Paris, chiefly of the Pennsylvania and St. Paul systems, were increasing but slowly, and that the loan might fall rather flat. The largest sum expected then in some banking quarters was $20,000,000.

It was learned at the time the papers were signed that the French bankers hoped to raise as much as $30,000,000. The announced total of $43,000,000 indicates that the method employed was much more successful than had been expected, and it is believed that these satisfactory results will influence the British Government to employe similar means for floating a gigantic loan in the United States before long. In fact, cable dispatches from London on Saturday stated that American bonds were already being mobilized for the purpose.

The cause of the difficulties experienced at first by French bankers in securing enough railroad bonds to make the venture a success was the reluctance of French investors to part with them. The banks bought in several millions of the securities where they were found on the market, and sought to pursuade holders of others to exchange them for Government securities. Investors clung to the Pennsylvania and St. Paul bonds because they afforded stability of principal in times when world financial conditions were changing rapidly.

Local bankers have declined to discuss the Rothschild loan of late, except to say that progress in depositing the collateral was being made. The first that definite figures have appeared is in the August circular of the National City Bank, which will be issued today.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION IN AMERICA AND EUROPE

For four days last week prices advanced impetuously; then for two days they fell back, but only moderately, save in the few conspicuous instances in which speculation had run riot. Those whose voices were heard above the rumble of the market place did not talk about the country's forward stride in business nor about the likelihood of big crops nor even of the great ease in money. They did not talk about the prospects for improvement in the position of the railroads owing to a more friendly consideration of their demands for higher rates nor did they discuss the part which the United States is taking in world finance at a time when the attention of all the world has been centred upon the ability of this country to carry on much of the banking work which the great countries of Europe now absorbed in war have been accustomed to do in the past.

They talked of none of these things. They talked of war orders and of rumors of orders. They talked of the chances of making fortunes in the space of a week or of a day. No prediction of a rise in prices was too bold to go unbelieved, and until the uprush of quotations was checked it seemed as though only those who believed the predictions were right. It was a wild scramble for profits in which the late comers supplied the profits for those who had been quicker than they to accept the view that enormous war orders—even reports of war orders—were enough to assure permanent prosperity to the company whose shares they bought. People who knew nothing except that a stock had gone up 10 points the day before and was reported to be about to go up 10 or 20 points more bought blindly. Last week's operations on the Stock Exchange were given over very largely to out and out gambling. It speaks well for the market that the severe declines which later occurred in a number of the stocks which were most conspicuous in the wild speculation did not seriously unsettle the market as a whole. The fact that they did not do so was explained no doubt by the great strength of the financial situation and by the improvement which is taking place in business at large.

There have been very good reasons for an advance in the stock market, and they stood the market in good stead in the face of a sudden and large decline in some of the stocks which had contributed a very large share to the business on the Stock Exchange. But that does not render at all desirable the sort of speculation which led to last week's excitement. Such doings repel the investor instead of attracting him, and they appeal only to the man who wants to convert a thousand dollars into ten thousand dollars over night. If the undoing of such speculative movements—for their eventual undoing is as certain as any market thing is—hurt only those who engaged in the wild scrambling after quickly made fortunes it would be largely their concern only. The undoing of such movements, however, inevitably affect the whole market position and exert their influence upon those who had nothing at all to do with the upbuilding of an unsound speculation. That is ample reason why the Stock Exchange should do its utmost to check wild speculation. No one can tell when the end of such movements will come, but what is certain is that each successive wave of wild upbidding of stocks such as occurred last week increases the danger of serious marked unsettlement. If last week's experiences in some of these stocks puts traders under more caution it will have accomplished a very real good.

To find cause for concern in unrestrained bidding up of stocks accompanied by dealings out of all proportion to the available supply of stock is very far from taking the stand that conditions affecting the stock market are unfavorable. As a matter of fact they are in many respects very favorable, but at such a time as this it is even more necessary than in ordinary times to make cautious provision against the unforeseeable. Our exceptionally favorable position in world trade; the progress which is being made in business within the country; the lessening of regulative pressure on private enterprise and the great ease in money are all factors of constructive influence. On the other hand industry has already to face some of the immediate effects of war, including, as has already been seen, a rise in wages, and later will have to adjust itself to important changes which the war will almost certainly bring about but which cannot now be clearly foreseen. Besides that business and finance, and the stock market which reflects them both, have, if they would be at all prudent, to stand prepared for surprises which may yet come out of this war. The sinking of the Lusitania was one such surprise. It would be rash to assume that other disturbing surprises will be avoided. They may be, but no one can tell.

There is a difference of opinion in business circles regarding the accuracy of the view that business has greatly improved and that the outlook is favorable. These differences when analyzed are for the most part explained by the fact that different viewpoints are adopted. Those who consider the fundamental forces at work in the business world, who look to the source rather than to the mouth of the business stream, find solid ground for encouragement in the fact that the crop outlook is very good despite impairment since the crop prospects were first appraised, that the credit situation is unusually favorable, that improvement of so noteworthy a kind has taken place in the iron trade, which is so good a barometer of the future, and that the country for some time has been disposed to save prudently rather than to spend lavishly. These things are at the source rather than at the mouth of the business stream. It will be some time before the stagnant current at the mouth feels the greater speed which has been imparted to the stream at its source, but unless the unforeseen and the unlikely happen, the stream will in due course be hastened throughout its entire length.

These are conditions which promise well for the future. They are conditions which rightly make the investor feel more confident, and which in due time may be expected to bear fruit in increased railroad and industrial earnings, and in a larger share of prosperity for practically all sound enterprises. But again and always there looms up the unforeseeable influence of this war, and it is to be hoped that the people will go on saving and spending judiciously rather than extravagantly, and that each new step be solidly laid before we place the one above it. That is the very opposite of the course which has been taken by those who have rushed headlong into the market for the war stocks and without making any provision at all against the unforeseen or even against the ordinary hazards of business have attempted to capitalize the profits to accrue from supplying the needs of belligerents.

Many will think that it is useless to argue against wild speculation in the face of facts which tend to fire the imagination of those who think of the stock market as a place to make money by a simple turn of the hand. But that is not a fair viewpoint. Crime cannot be done away with, but it can be checked. So, too, can wild speculation. The Stock Exchange deprecates any suggestion that it can exercise salutary influence against gambling in the stock market. It asks how it could do so. The answer may not be as easy as the question, but the Stock Exchange has found it possible to fix commissions and to maintain them rigidly. If it as sincerely desired to temper speculation as it desires to maintain fixed commission rates, it probably could find some way.

LONDON FEELS CONFIDENT

But Caution Will Govern Financiers While War Lasts.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—The first anniversary of the financial crisis brought about by the war finds London confident for the future. Events have proved that fears prevalent a year ago of a collapse of Stock Exchange and financial houses were overdrawn. In the twelve months passed the outstanding speculative account of last July has been reduced 70 per cent., and, while business is rather slack, it is being conducted in a fashion to promote solvency.

Britain's overseas trade continues, with Lombard Street discounting bills as usual. The Government has borrowed in the year £1,200,000,000 without disaster, and what little inflation has occurred has been confined to bank credits and not to currency. Lest past results should be considered in too rosy a light, however, it must be said that the prospect of the war being longer than any but folk best informed of Germany's military resources expected is making the city cautious. Another factor to promote this sentiment is the knowledge of Great Britain's own financial demands and the increasing amount of imports from the United States.

There was evidence available last week that half of the war loan had been paid in. Dealings in the loan began on Thursday, but technical requirements restricted business, and only small amounts changed hands. Sales were reported at a discount after disturbing news came from the Russian front, and the recession was aided also by the absence of support. Available funds have been so closely contred in the loan that not much assistance, for the time being, can be accorded the security markets. Full dealings begin on Tuesday.

The successful flotation of the great loan has enabled the Government to repay the Bank of England £96,000,000 advanced in the early stages of the war. Business in discounts has been proceeding normally since the strain on the money market incident to the loan ended. Nevertheless, a 5 per cent. rate or thereabouts is likely for some months. One advantage accruing from the stiff rate is seen in the retention on this side of some American balances at this centre.

The only sensation on the Stock Exchange during the week was the rapid fluctuations of Canadian Pacific and of certain of the American industrials. Chilean Government bills to the extent of £2,000,000, due Aug. 4, will be paid off here. The abnormal strength of the New York security markets is distrusted in some quarters.

LULL IN PARIS MARKET.

Business Light, with Chief Interest in American Securities.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 1.—Business on the Bourse was light last week with chief interest in American railroad and copper shares. Pennsylvania rose 9 points during the week, being sentimentally influenced by the strength reported from Wall Street. The quotation at the close was 480. Copper issues also left off in good shape.

A syndicate of bankers held a meeting and decided to urge the Government to bring about liquidation in the security markets of a sort to clear the present situation and pave the way for the ready absorption of future Government financing. Rentes were firm throughout the week, closing at 69. Russian industrials were adversely affected by rumors that Warsaw was to be evacuated, and Russian Government securities became unsteady under reiteration of the reports.

London exchange closed at 27.12. Dollars were steady at 5.75. French bank and railway shares remained stable throughout the week.

Atlas Powder Bonds Redemption.

The Atlas Powder Company will redeem today at 102 per cent. of their face value, plus accrued interest to Aug. 1, all of its 6 per cent. 10-year income bonds outstanding at this time. The Guaranty Trust Company, as trustee, will take up the securities. The original issue of these securities, which was created in the Powder Trust dissolution, amounted to $3,000,000, but under the recent offer of new 6 per cent. preferred stock, nearly all the bonds were turned in as part payment, in accordance with the provisions of the offer made to stockholders.

BANKRUPTCY SALES.

NOTICE OF SALE.—UNITED STATES DISTRICT Court, Southern District of New York. In the matter of J. B. GREENHUT CO., (formerly Greenhut-Siegel Cooper Co., Inc.,) Bankrupt.

Pursuant to decree of Hon. Peter B. Olney, Referee in Bankruptcy dated July 30, 1915, the assets of the above-named Bankrupt mentioned in said decree will be offered at public sale by the undersigned Trustees at the place of business of the bankrupt, 6th Ave. and 18th St. in the building on the west side of 6th Ave., Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on August 17, 1915, at 12 o'clock noon, in accordance with and in the manner provided for by said decree. Bids will then and there be received by the undersigned Trustees pursuant to the terms of said decree, copies of which may be obtained at the offices of the undersigned Trustees or their attorneys. The properties offered for sale include the merchandise of the bankrupt estate (which merchandise may be bid for in bulk or in lots or departments to be parcelled by the undersigned Trustees as provided in said decree), its customers' accounts receivable, fixtures, delivery system, all the assets comprising the department store business and real estate of the Bankrupt.

The merchandise offered for sale may be inspected by prospective bidders at any time before the sale upon application to the Trustees, and inventories thereof will be available for inspection at the office of the Trustees at least five days before the sale.

All bids for separate departments or lots shall be subject to the contingency of the acceptance of any bid for bulk found by the Court to be of greater benefit to the bankrupt estate than sales of the merchandise in separate lots or departments.

After all bids are received, the Referee at said time and place or at such adjourned time as he may fix, will entertain application or motion for and will make such orders of sale or confirmation of sale or in reference to the administration of the estate of the above-named Bankrupt or the disposition of its assets or the adjustment, release, adjudication, or compromise of any matters affecting the administration of the estate as shall be proper.

The real property including leaseholds of the bankrupt estate which appears to be subject to the lien of a mortgage or deed of trust to Central Trust Company of New York, as Trustee, dated December 1, 1910 (which real property and leaseholds are described in parcels 1, 2, and 3) shall be sold free and clear of the lien of said mortgage or deed of trust.

The property will be offered for sale in parcels, as follows:

$2,102,089 NET GAIN FOR P.R.R. HALF YEAR

Gross Earnings Drop $5,852,504, but Expenses Are Reduced $7,954,594.

JUNE SHOWS IMPROVEMENT

Maintenance and Equipment Well Guarded, Report Says, Despite Economies.

The Pennsylvania Railroad system, including the lines east and west of Pittsburgh, for the six months ended June 30, had total gross earnings of $164,779,708, a decrease from the earnings of the first half of 1914 of $5,852,504. Under the strain of decreased business, however, the various departments of the system reduced expenses by $7,954,594, and thus the system was able to show a net increase for the six months of $2,102,089.

The lines east of Pittsburgh earned $112,761,730 gross, a decrease of $3,916,051. The net earnings, accounting for $5,076,899 saving in expenses, were $19,938,736, an increase of $1,160,847. The lines west of Pittsburgh earned $52,017,977 gross, a decrease of $1,936,452. Expenses decreased $2,871,694 on these lines and the six months showed net earnings of $8,810,578, an increase of $941,242.

Railroad men, generally, contend that the forced saving in the transportation departments of railroads should not be regarded as actual saving. They point out that the railroads of the country must ultimately make amends for the retrenchment which the business depression of the last few years has forced upon them. In the case of the Pennsylvania system, however, the report says, maintenance and equipment have been well guarded, and a recent bond issue supplied the funds for a large amount of new equipment.

The month of June showed an improvement in gross earnings on the system, an improvement which has been general on the trunk lines of the country. The gross earnings were $31,609,836, an increase of $631,340. The net earnings were $8,456,563, an increase of $1,041,540, the lines east of Pittsburgh contributing $684,122 of this increase.

The Pennsylvania Railroad for June had net earnings of $4,516,745, an increase of $848,882. For the six months the net earnings were $15,974,337, an increase of $1,116,877.

The Pennsylvania Company, for June, had net earnings of $1,731,843, an increase of $391,178. The net earnings for the six months were $4,613,225, an increase of $645,473.

The Long Island Railroad, in June, earned $461,191 net, and $1,105,529 net for the six months. There was a decrease in the June net earnings of $36,054, but an increase for the six months of $40,401.

Seven subsidiaries of the Pennsylvania system showed slight decreases in net earnings in June. They are the Long Island, the Cumberland Valley Railroad, the Maryland, Delaware & Virginia, the Vandalia Railroad, the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington, the West Jersey & Seashore, and the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis. With the exception of the West Jersey & Seashore, the Cumberland Valley, and the Maryland, Delaware & Virginia, however, increases in net earnings were shown for the half year.

THE WEATHER

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—High temperatures continued Sunday over the Central, Eastern, Southern, and Southwestern portions of the country, with the highest readings of the present Summer over the south portion of the Middle Atlantic district. It is probable that during the next two days temperatures will not be quite so high over the Middle and South Atlantic States. The weather will be generally unsettled, with quite general thunder showers, Monday and also Tuesday in the South, where pressure is once more low, with a disturbance over Central Florida.

HOTEL GUESTS HURT AS FLOOR CAVES IN Outdoor Dining Room on Rockaway Beach Boardwalk Collapses.

30 BURIED IN WRECKAGE

Bathers Dig Into the Debris at the Prince George and Rescue Nine Who Were Injured.

While thousands were enjoying the surf at Holland Station, on Rockaway Beach yesterday afternoon, and as many more were promenading on the wide boardwalk, they were startled by a splintering crash, followed by cries of pain. The big outdoor dining room of the Prince George Hotel at the foot of Oceanus Avenue and the boardwalk, had collapsed like a house of cards, precipitating some thirty diners to the sands fifteen feet below.

There were nine injured by the shock of the fall and the flying bits of wreckage. A hurry call was turned in and Dr. Victor of the Rockaway Beach Hospital answered it.

Injured.

The heat drove the diners at the Prince George to seek the cool, canvas-covered outdoor dining room, which is built on a level with the boardwalk, and extends over the sandy beach, which at high tide is covered by some five feet of water. They were seated there when they suddenly felt the floor gave way under their feet.

Platform Folded Like a Knife.

The women screamed and the men strove to brace themselves, but the dining room folded up like a knife, and waiters and guests mixed up with tables and chinaware were hurled in a heap to the beach.

The bathers were attracted by the screams and looked with amazement to see the platform topple to the ground. With the promenaders they rushed to the rescue and tore the wreckage aside to reach those buried in the debris. Their task was rendered easier by the fact that the tide was low, and so there was no water on the beach where the dining platform had fallen. Many women fainted and were not revived until after an ambulance surgeon arrived. All of those hurt left for their homes after their injuries had been dressed.

After the wrecked platform had been cleared away there was an investigation, and it was ascertained that the heavy planks and floor beams supporting the platform had become rotten from the action of the sea.

GEN. B. F. TRACY NO BETTER.

Reported to be in Critical Condition —Heat Hinders Progress.

General Benjamin F. Tracy, Secretary of the Navy under President Harrison, who is seriously ill at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Ferdinand Wilmerding, 14 East Sixtieth Street, was said late last night to be in a critical condition. It was reported that he had shown no improvement since Saturday, when physicians were in constant attendance.

He became ill about two weeks ago while dining, and the heat of the last few days has hindered progress. He was injured last Memorial Day, when a horse drawing a peddler's wagon ran away and the shaft of the wagon crashed through the limousine window and struck his head. General Tracy has felt the effects of his injury ever since, and it is said he suffered a slight stroke of paralysis several weeks ago.

SUICIDE FROM FERRYBOAT.

Man Dives Off the Richmond Coming from Staten Island.

While the Staten Island ferryboat Richmond was on its way to Manhattan last night shortly after 10 o'clock and was still a quarter of a mile from its slip at South Ferry, passengers saw a man about 35 years old run to the railing at the stern and dive overboard. The officers were notified and the boat stopped at once, but no sign of the man was to be seen. The boat proceeded to its slip, and the suicide was reported to the harbor police. A police boat was sent out to search for the body.

The man was described as wearing a neat dark suit and a derby hat. He was about 5 feet 6 inches in height and had a sandy mustache.

BATHERS SHOOT A SKIPPER.

Wanted Sand Boat Plank for Springboard and Resented Refusal.

When two naked men boarded Sand Scow 33 of the Phoenix Sand Company of 17 State Street, yesterday afternoon at the foot of East 103d Street, and started to walk away with a plank lying on the deck, Captain John Olson remonstrated even after they had told him they wanted to use it as a springboard to dive from.

Half an hour later they came back with their clothes on and when Captain Olson came on deck one of them shot him twice in the arm and once in the chest.

Olson's condition is serious.

Legs Cut Off by a Train.

Michael Ryan, an employe of a silk mill, who lives at 39 Morris Street, Paterson, was walking along the tracks of the Jersey Central Railroad at Nolan's Point, Lake Hopatcong, about noon yesterday when he was struck by an excursion train coming out from New York. The engine and the first car passed over both of his legs, cutting them off below the knee. The train was stopped and Dr. Romain of Long Island City, who is staying at a hotel at the lake, treated him, after which he was taken in an automobile to All Souls' Hospital, Morristown. He will probably die.

ANTI-AIRCRAFT GUNS ON NEW DESTROYERS

Secretary Daniels Also Approves Double Broadside Arrangement for Torpedo Tubes.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—A distinct departure in the armament of American torpedo-boat destroyers has been approved by Secretary Daniels in the design of six new destroyers authorized by the Naval Appropriation act of March 3, 1915. It is the introduction of anti-aircraft defense guns and a centre-line arrangement of the torpedo tubes. Each of these destroyers will carry twelve torpedo tubes. They will be arranged in four triple-tubed batteries along the centre line of the main deck instead of being arranged along both sides of the deck, as in the immediately preceding class of destroyers.

The new destroyers will each mount two 1-pounder anti-aircraft guns. These will be the first American destroyers carrying such weapons.

The advantage of the centre-line arrangement for torpedo tubes is that all of the tubes may be fired on either broadside. These vessels, therefore, will each have a broadside fire of twelve torpedoes on either side. Under the previous arrangement the destroyers had a broadside fire only of six tubes on each side.

In connection with the design of the destroyers now to be built, special effort has been made to utilize the information available as the result of the European war. The centre-line arrangement, however, is not of foreign origin, but is original with the American Navy. This plan merely marks the introduction in the destroyer of the median-line arrangement of guns, which was first introduced in any battleship in the American dreadnought.

For some months opinion has been divided among experts in the United States Navy over the wisdom of introducing the centre-line arrangement in the new destroyers. The main objection was that a torpedo fired from the centre line might not clear the deck. It has been decided, however, that this argument was not valid.

The new destroyers are designated Nos. 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, and 74. Plans for their construction will be issued tomorrow, and bids will be opened Oct. 6. These destroyers will be 310 feet long, the same as the class contracted for last December. The new boats will have a beam of 30 feet 7 inches, and a mean draft of 8 feet, compared with 29 feet 10 inches beam and 9 feet 5 inches draft in the preceding class. This increase of beam and decrease of draft are intended to guard against the tendency in most small light vessels to pitch and roll and to make the vessels more habitable in rough seas. The maximum sustained sea speed called for is 30 knots, as compared with 29.5 knots in the preceding class. There will be a large radius of action at cruising speed.

PARKER WANTS SUBMARINES

Advocates Strong Coast Defenses in Church Address.

BERKELEY, Cal., Aug. 1.—From the pulpit of the Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church here today Judge Alton B. Parker, Democratic candidate in 1904 for President, made a plea for stronger coast defenses

"I would especially ask your aid," he said, "in arousing public opinion that will force Congress to build enough submarines and submarine bases for the protection of both our coasts. It is simply a matter of insurance, not only for our wealth, but for our sons."

Judge Parker has been attending the Lord's Day Congress in Oakland.

GIVE WORKERS WAR BONUS.

Twenty Per Cent. of Earnings at International Motor Car Plants.

ALLENTOWN, Penn., Aug. 1.—The International Motor Car Company, operating the Mack Brothers plant in this city, and the Saurer Motor Car plant at Plainfield, N. J., announced today that it would pay its employes a "war bonus," aggregating 20 per cent. of their total monthly earnings, payable on the first of each month.

In a statement, the company says it recognizes that the manufacture of munitions of war "has caused an unprecedented condition in the metal trades, and, being encouraged by the demand in domestic markets and at the promise of an increased business after the war, we wish to keep our good men and to build up a strong and permanent organization for the future."

The company employes about 500 men at each of the plants.

MILITIAMEN ROUT MOB AT MASSENA

in a call to Governor Whitman for the militia. It became so hot for the Sheriff's men at the Massena end of the bridge that they withdrew a bit and waited for reinforcements.

Strikers Drive Off Company Officials.

When officials of the company went to the bridge today to try to enter the plant and find what damage had been done to the extensive works they were driven off by the strikers, who seemed to be excellently organized.

Several attempts were made tonight by the strikers to break through the cordon of soldiers about the plant, but they were beaten off without the soldiers firing a shot, according to the militia officers.

Labor agitators who have been here at work for several weeks say the soldiers fired at least a part of the shots which have been flying today over this usually peaceful town.

Labor leaders said tonight that the trouble at the plant was due to the refusal of a demand recently made by the men for an increase in pay. However, it is known that the question of payments for cottages has been a sore subject for some time.

Officials of the company had not succeeded up to a late hour tonight in effecting a meeting with any of the strikers, the men regarding all invitations to a parley as a ruse to effect their arrest, the Sheriff believes.

Tonight the troops are encamped in the lots about the aluminium plant.

ALBANY, Aug. 1.—Governor Whitman said tonight that he had been in communication with Massena several times today and that all was quiet.

No clashes between the troops and strikers have occurred, but another company from the First Regiment will be sent to Massena tonight or tomorrow as a safeguard against further violence.

BANKER DISAPPEARS; GIRL AND $2,000 GONE

A. Cornelius, Jr., Cashier of Citizens' National, at Englewood, Leaves Family.

A LEADING BUSINESS MAN

Stenographer Who Is Missing in His Employ Five Years and a Friend of Family.

Special to The New York Times.

ENGLEWOOD, N. J., Aug. 1.—For nineteen years A. Cornelius, Jr., has been cashier of the Citizens' National Bank here, and has been one of the leading business men of the town. He is 48 years old, and has a wife and three children, the oldest daughter being married. There was, then, much surprise when it was learned on Friday that he had disappeared, and when it became known today that there was a shortage of about $2,000 in the bank's funds.

At the same time Miss Loretta Adelgais, who had been Mr. Cornelius's stenographer for about five years, but left a month ago to take a position with the Englewood Board of Trade, also disappeared. The girl's family are convinced that she has gone away with her former employer, and her mother said last night that the girl had resigned four or five times on account of the attentions which she said Cornelius was paying to her, though she had been on friendly terms with his family.

"Every time she quit," said Mrs. Adelgais, who lives in Rochelle Park, "Mr. Cornelius drove out to our house in his automobile and persuaded her to come back to work. Once he even brought his wife with him. So every time she went back. A month ago she resigned to go to the Englewood Board of Trade because it was said the bank wanted a man stenographer. Mr. Cornelius gave her a recommendation which obtained the new place for her."

Clinton H. Blake, President of the bank, admitted today that the cashier had been missing since Wednesday night, and that experts had discovered the errors in the bank's books. "The bank, however," said Mr. Blake, "is not affected at all. Mr. Cornelius was bonded, of course, and the bank's securities were kept in New York, where he had no access to them. We have not put the matter in the hands of the police, for we still hope that he will come to his senses of his own accord. Now that he and the girl have both disappeared we are beginning to hear stories of his attentions to her. We had always found her a very efficient employe."

Mrs. Cornelius and her younger daughter, who have been staying at Camp Englewood, their bungalow on Greenwood Lake, were not aware of the disappearance of the cashier until yesterday afternoon, when his son, an employe of a New York bank, came out and told them about it.

Miss Adelgais went to her work as usual on Wednesday, and telephoned home that night that she was going to stay with a friend in Englewood. The first news that her family received of her disappearance came on Friday, when President Bell of the Englewood Board of Trade wired to them asking what had become of her.

KNOWN EASTLAND DEAD, 839

Three More Bodies Recovered—List of Missing Remains 142.

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—While investigation of the capsizing of the steamer Eastland rested over Sunday, divers today recovered three more bodies from the wreck, making the total known dead 839. Coroner Peter M. Hoffman tonight said there probably were only a few more bodies in the river, although the missing list of the Western Electric Company, whose employes arranged the excursion aboard the Eastland, remained at 142. The Coroner today advertised for the names of any who might be missing as a result of the catastrophe, but received no answers.

Secretary of Commerce William C. Redfield and Solicitor A. L. Thurman spent Sunday in a suburb, but promised to proceed with the investigation of Steamboat Inspectors tomorrow, according to legal requirements, despite the order of Federal Judge Landis that witnesses desired by the Federal Grand Jury could not be heard before other investigators, and the fact that adverse criticism has been voiced against Secretary Redfield's inquiry.

The Federal Grand Jury, instructed by Judge Landis to dig into every detail of the Eastland, regardless of whom any finding might affect, will resume its examination of witnesses tomorrow.

PROPOSES A NEW CALENDAR.

Curate Puts 28 Days in a Month, with All Holidays on Monday.

The Rev. H. P. Hames, curate at All Angels' Episcopal Church, Eighty-first Street and West End Avenue, has a proposal to change the calendar which he says several influential New York clergymen favor. Novel features of this Hames calendar provide that all the holidays shall come on Monday. This, he says, will give the tired man two whole days and a half of rest. Again, there will be only twenty-eight days in each month and the remaining days will be put into another month, named "Holiday," which will come in between June and July. The extra day still unprovided for—two in leap year—will be put at the end of December for more holidays.

"The fact that each month will begin on Sunday and end on Saturday will go far toward regulating our haphazard method of present day computation," said Mr. Hames. "Also, joy will be felt by the trader and the social set alike that Easter will be uniformly the third Sunday in April instead of following the vagaries of the wandering moon from early in March to late in April. Another convenience is that Christmas will always arrive in the middle of the week."

Mr. Hames said his innovation had been based in part on the Church calendar.

"It is not new to change the calendar," he went on. "It is not so hard, either. People whose birthdays come after the 28th of the month will have to change them, but the others will not be affected. The extra day may come in at the end of the year or not. It will not matter, for no one will have to work on it."

Mr. Hames is a native of England who came to the United States twelve years ago. He is Vice President of the Junior Clergy Association of the New York Diocese.

BRONX ZOO GORILLA DIES.

Dinah, Three-Year-Old Captive, Had Refused to Eat.

Dinah, the gorilla captured in Africa by an expedition sent by the New York Zoological Society and brought to this country last September, was found dead in her cage yesterday morning by Keeper John Engelhoim.

The gorilla, which was about 3 years old, did not take kindly to captivity and for long periods refused to eat. Recently it had been forced to take food.

Dr. W. Reed Blair, who examined the gorilla, said yesterday that death had been caused by malnutrition.

Dinah was the only gorilla in the Bronx Zoological Park, and very few gorillas have ever been in captivity.

MIDDIES AT SAN FRANCISCO.

On Battleship Squadron They Arrive in Golden Gate.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 1.—The battleships Missouri, Ohio, and Wisconsin steamed into San Francisco Bay this afternoon and, amid the cheering of thousands of spectators, dropped anchor off the Panama-Pacific Exposition. The squadron, which came through the Panama Canal, brought 860 midshipmen on their annual practice cruise.

The Ohio broke a propeller blade coming up the coast, and will proceed to Mare Island tomorrow for repairs.

FIRE IN WEST SHORE SHOPS.

Brilliant Blaze Seen from Newark and Manhattan.

Shortly after 11 o'clock last night a fire started in the machine shops of the West Shore Railroad at Granton, in the North Bergen district of New Jersey, on the Hackensack River.

The blaze could be seen for miles around and was plainly visible from Manhattan, Newark, Jersey City, and other places hereabouts. The origin of the fire is not known.

PHILIPPINE TRADE BECKONS TO JAPAN

Merchant Scout Declares Filipinos Would Welcome Closer Relations with the Empire.

FOUND FRIENDLY SENTIMENT

Almost Unlimited Demand for Japanese Labor—Thinks Japan Should Supplant Germany.

Dr. K. Miyama, a Japanese merchant, recently visited the Philippines and studied the possibilities of a more extensive trade between the islands and Japan. He reported on his return to Tokio that the possibilities were much greater than he and other Japanese had believed them to be. He added that he found that there was no feeling hostile to the Japanese in the Philippines, and he believed that the Filipinos would welcome closer trade relations with the island empire.

From Manila, Dr. Miyama journeyed southward to the Island of Mindanao, where Japanese agricultural activities are greater than in any other part of the archipelago. In the foreign trade of the islands the United States ranks first, England second, and Japan third, with Germany and China fourth and fifth, respectively. In the islands themselves the Chinese are in the ascendant so far as business is concerned.

"The most striking phases of Japanese development," writes Dr. Miyama in the Japan Magazine of Tokio, "are in the direction of agriculture, their influence being particularly prominent in Dabao in Mindanao, where soil and climate are especially favorable.

"Miles from Dabao there is a village called Jaromo, where, from the coast to the hills, there is a large Japanese population of hemp planters. Here there are eight Japanese companies dealing in hemp, the largest being the Ota Kogyo Kaisha, with a capital of some $250,000. At Jolo, a small island where pearl fisheries are carried on, there is also a prosperous Japanese colony, who fish by diving. These are chiefly seamen from the Province of Kii in Japan.

"There are Japanese scattered more or less among all the interior ports of the islands, acting as barbers, carpenters, and petty merchants of one kind or another. In the two centres named the Japanese are most numerous and successful, but on the whole they occupy a very inferior position in the trade and development of the Philippines. As Japanese steamers now call at Samboanca the Japanese are able to get supplies from home, which is a great convenience to them.

"The anti-Japanese sentiment so lamentably frequent in parts of the United States proper, happily finds no place as yet in the Philippines. The natives, suffering to some extent from white oppression, have little real respect for their masters, nor have they much for the cunning Chinese whose ways they do not like. In fact, there seems everywhere to prevail a warmer friendship for the Japanese than for any other race, even the savages showing them kindness.

"Thus both the American authorities and the natives welcome the Japanese and treat them with due consideration. The authorities are specially anxious to introduce more labor from Japan, as the Japanese prove more satisfactory in this respect than do the natives. The white hemp companies utilize Japanese labor as far as they can, with very satisfactory results. Thus the demand for Japanese labor in the Philippines is almost unlimited at present. New plantations are always being created; and the new industry of abaca promises a phenomenal development that will still further increase the demand for labor.

"Owing to customs duty the imports from Japan are not large, the chief items being coal, which competes well with that from Australia, owing to less freight; and cotton yarns and fabrics, more especially cotton underwear. The native women prefer German-dyed cottons for waists, as well as red cotton yarns for other purposes. There is no reason now why Japan should not supply to the Filipinos what was formerly supplied by Germany. There is a great demand for Japanese matches in the islands, most of this import going through the Mitsui Company. There is a good demand in the islands for cement and leather goods of all kinds.

"Most of the shoes worn are imported from the United States, but the natives have wide feet, to which shoes made in Japan are more adapted. Shoes which sell in Japan for 4 yen a pair sell for 9 yen a pair in the Philippines. There is plenty of room for development in trade between Japan and the islands. At present many things which are going to waste in the Philippines could be very profitably exported to Japan and made good use of. Also, Japan would import much raw material from there, and after turning it into manufactures could export them abroad."

PRESIDENT SEEKS PAN-AMERICAN AID FOR MEXICO MOVE

Calls A B C Ambassadors and Three Ministers to a Conference.

FIRST TO BE "INFORMAL"

But Support of Other Latin Republics for Peace Program Is Aimed At.

NEW PRESIDENT IN VIEW

As Well as Immediate Relief for Mexico City and Guard of Railways If Necessary.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Its patience exhausted, the United States Government has determined that the time has arrived when it must take action to restore order and constitutional authority in Mexico. A program to that end has been considered, but before putting this into effect the Government will consult with the Republics of South and Central America, which will be asked to adhere to its purposes.

The following announcement indicating that an important move in the Mexican situation is at hand was made by the State Department tonight:

On Thursday afternoon there will be an informal conference at the State Department to consider the Mexican situation.

Those taking part in the conference will be the Ambassadors from Brazil, Argentina, and Chile, and the three ranking Ministers of the American Republics, namely, those of Bolivia, Uruguay, and Guatemala.

As for the details which will be considered nothing need be said at the present time, as the conference will be entirely confidential.

The destitution and starvation existing in Mexico City have brought matters to a head with respect to the United States Government's dealings with Mexican affairs. The first effort of this Government will be to relieve the distress prevailing there, and while there is no official authority for the assertion, it is believed that the Wilson Administration has reached the point of being willing to go to extremes to insure freedom of communication between the Port of Vera Cruz and the Mexican capital, so that food supplies can be transported to Mexico City for distribution by American agents. Consideration of a project to this end is expected to take place at the conference at the State Department on Thursday.

The consent and possible co-operation of Latin America toward the end desired will, it is believed, strengthen any movement taken and given assurance to the Governments and people of South and Central America that the United States has no intention of acquiring territory or taking any action that will in any way interfere with the political integrity of the Mexican republic.

Positive action, however, would be dependent on whether the Carranza, Villa and Zapata factions refuse to complay with the strong and urgent representations sent to them last week by Secretary Lansing with respect to keeping open the railroad from Vera Cruz and permitting relief supplies from the United States to pass freely to the stricken people in the capital. No disposition has yet been manifested by any of the factional leaders to concede what is desired by this Government. But beyond this important question, the conference of Thursday is expected to be devoted to a general consideration of the Mexican situation and particular consideration of the American plan of procedure, to which the assent of the Latin-American nations is to be sought.

Support for a President.

No formal statement as to the details of this plan has ever been made. It is well understood, however, that the plan which was outlined in THE NEW YORK TIMES of July 31, contemplates the selection of a provisional President of Mexico, preferably a member of the Cabinet of the last Constitutional President, Francisco I. Madero, who will set up a Government and will at once receive the recognition of the United States, Brazil, Argentina, and Chile. The United States Government will then give its active moral support to the new central authority of Mexico by issuing a proclamation placing an embargo on the shipment of arms and ammunition to any faction that opposes the Government so established. The plan is progressive, and it is understood that it contemplates that the Provisional President shall arrange for the appointment of a successor who will be acceptable to those Mexican leaders and their followers who become parties to the program of the United States.

To insure the success of this program the active support of a considerable body of Mexican troops will be necessary. Two months ago today President Wilson called on Carranza, Villa, and Zapata to compose their differences and agree on the personnel of a central government, to which the support of the United States was promised. Villa assented with apparent cordiality to the suggestion of the President, and sent a telegram to Carranza offering to confer with him on the subject. Carranza made no response, but redoubled his efforts to get possession of Mexico City, with the idea that if he established a government there he would receive the recognition of the United States.

Carranza Not in Favor.

The Carranza forces are now in control at the capital, but this has not made the Wilson Administration look with any kindlier eyes on Carranza's claims to preference. It was reported today that President Wilson had decided to recognize the Carranza Government. The report was untrue. It was denied positively by Secretary Lansing. From other sources connected with the Administration it was learned that Carranza's chances of recognition are decidedly on the wane and that they are

11 DEAD; 15 WOUNDED IN SUBMARINE ATTACK

U-Boat Shells British Steamer Clintonia Without Warning—Two Other Freighters Sunk.

BREST, France, Tuesday, Aug. 3.—The British steamship Clintonia of 3,838 tons was shelled and sunk on Sunday morning by a German submarine. Eleven men of the Clintonia lost their lives and fifteen were injured.

The Clintonia encountered the submarine twenty miles west of Ar-men, and, according to survivors, was attacked without warning. The submarine fired four shells, wrecking everything on deck.

The crew hastily got into the boats and lowered the wounded into them. The submarine then torpedoed the steamer, which sank within three minutes.

One of the boats containing ten persons was engulfed. In all fifty-four survivors reached here. The wounded were taken to the Naval Hospital. The Clintonia was bound from Marseilles for Newcastle.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—The British steamship Clintonia has been sunk. Fifty-four of the persons aboard her were saved.

The British steamer Benvorlich, which left Manila May 1 for London by way of Marseilles, has been sunk. Sixteen members of the crew have been landed. The others are still in the boats.

The British steamer Fulgens, of 2,501 tons gross, has been sunk. The crew has been landed.

The Clintonia, owned by J. Robinson & Sons of North Shields, was last reported to have sailed from Tynemouth July 2 for Marseilles. She was built at Sunderland in 1907, was 350 feet long, with a beam of 50 feet.

The Benvorlich was built at Glasgow in 1896 and was owned by W. Thomson & Co., Limited, of Leith. The vessel was 337 feet long, 43 feet beam, and 24 feet deep. She was of 3,351 gross tons.

The Fulgens was built at Newcastle in 1912 and was owned by the Gaslight and Coke Company of London. The vessel was 305 feet long, 42 feet beam, and 19 feet deep.

RUSSIAN DESTROYER IS REPORTED LOST

Said to Have Sunk in Black Sea—Athens Hears of Great Fire in Constantinople.

BERLIN, Aug. 2, (via Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—A dispatch from Constantinople to the Overseas News Agency reports the sinking, for reasons unknown, of a large Russian torpedo boat destroyer off the island of Kerken, to the east of Chileh, in the Black Sea.

ATHENS, Aug. 2, (via London.)—Arrivals here from Constantinople report that 3,000 buildings, including the German Hospital, filled with wounded soldiers, were destroyed last week by fire.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 1, (via London, Aug. 2.)—There have been no important actions on either side in the last fortnight on the Gallipoli Peninsula. Even the British bombardment of the Turkish positions has lessened considerably in its intensity. This applies both to Avi Burnu and Sedd-el-Bahr. The Turkish artillery has been active, however. There have been no serious infantry engagements.

The military hospitals here and elsewhere, which a few days ago were well filled, now are in many cases half empty. The American hospital is included among this number.

FOR CLOSER ALLIANCE OF RUSSIA AND JAPAN

Prophecy by Foreign Minister Sazonoff Is Cheered by the Duma.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—The final section of the speech made by Foreign Minister Sazonoff at the opening of the Russian Duma yesterday was received in London tonight.

Referring to the relations between Russia and Japan, the Minister said that the press of both countries had been discussing the advantage of a close political union between them, and that the service rendered to the Entente Allies by Japan had "created an atmosphere in which solid political ties between nations are forged."

"Ten years have gone by," he added, "since the Treaty of Portsmouth proved that peaceful neighborliness between Russia and Japan was perfectly possible and reciprocally advantageous. Our relations of alliance with Japan today should be forerunners of a still closer alliance."

This statement was received by the members of the Duma with loud cheers.

DIVER DIES TRAPPED IN BIG WATER MAIN

Heavy Door Drops Behind Him—Rescuers Reach Him Only a Few Minutes Too Late.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 2.—Thousands of persons crowded Highland Park today while policemen, firemen, and Water Bureau employes worked frantically but in vain to save Charles Carpenter, a diver, who was lost in a fifty-one-inch pipe connecting two reservoirs in the park.

Carpenter, who entered the main just before noon to remove an obstruction, was imprisoned when a cable snapped and a heavy iron door, deep in the water, dropped behind him. Nothing was thought of his absence for an hour, but as he did not respond to signals, another diver went down; he found the door closed.

The air hose seemed to be intact and the pumps were kept going, while other divers worked to open the door, and still others sought for the second entrance to the pier. Just before 5 o'clock the door was lifted, and Carpenter's body was found. He had been dead only a few minutes. His mother and sister were in the crowd which waited all afternoon for news from the main.

GERMANY FIRM IN FRYE CASE; BRITAIN DEFENDS BLOCKADE

Three Notes Reach Washington in a Day Dealing with Rights of Belligerents at Sea.

COMBAT OUR ARGUMENTS

England Takes Up the Entire Question of Interference with Trade To and From Germany.

DEADLOCK OVER THE FRYE

British Communications to be Published Tomorrow—Berlin Note to be Given Out Later.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—One German and two British notes were received at the State Department today. The German note dealt with the sinking of the American sailing ship William P. Frye, and was a response to the American note of June 24, challenging the German contention that the destruction of the Frye was not a violation of the treaty of 1799, and asking Germany to settle this claim by direct diplomatic negotiations instead of by prize court proceedings. Germany does not yield to the American contention. The German note probably will be made public Thursday morning.

The two British notes were supplemental to the principal reply of the British Government, received last week, to the American note of March 30, on British interference with neutral commerce. The first of the supplemental communications received today is a response to the recent protest of the United States covering principles involved in the detention of the American steamer Neches. The second supplemental note is a reply to the American "caveat" of July 14, which asserted that the United States would recognize no Orders in Council or other municipal legislation that was in contravention of international law. The British notes will be given out tomorrow afternoon for publication on Wednesday morning.

The complete response of the British Government to the various representations of the United States with regard to interferences with neutral trade takes the form of three notes. The first was received on July 26, and the second and third were received today. All deal with the general question—though different phases—of the rights of neutral commerce under international law, as affected by the enforcement of the British Order in Council of March 15, restricting overseas commerce of Germany. At the request of Sir Edward Grey the publication of the main British reply, received by the State Department on July 26, was postponed until the receipt of the supplemental Neches and "caveat" replies.

The Neches Note.

The note dealing with the Neches case will be of unusual interest to American importers because it embraces the British claim of right to interfere with trade out of Germany. The British Government maintains that it has acted in accordance with accepted principles of international law, and that if there has been any departure it has not been from accepted principles, but from former ways of applying those principles in the enforcement of a blockade. The United States Government has been challenging England's right to blocade a neutral country and thus interfere with innocent shipments through neutral ports into and from Germany, in trade with neutrals.

The British Government insists that under the doctrine of continuous voyage it has a right to prevent trade with the enemy, but that the peculiarities of the present situation are such that the application of existing rules of international law must be somewhat different from application in the past. It is understood that the British Government takes the position that its interference with German trade, under its construction of international law, may cover trade coming out of Germany as well as goods for that country.

Involves Belgian Goods.

The Neches note deals with the enforcement of that portion of the Order in Council of March 15 which applies to goods leaving Germany and Austria. The Neches was seized while bound for the United States from a neutral port with a cargo of goods of Belgian and German origin. The owners of the ship insisted that goods originating in Belgium were entitled to proceed. The British Government took the position that since Belgium was under German control, goods from there must be considered as of German origin. The Neches was released but the cargo was held and is now before a British prize court.

The United States protested asserting that broad principles of international law regarded such goods, as well as innocent goods originating in a belligerent country passing through neutral ports to neutral countries, as exempt from molestation and could only be touched when passing through lines of blockade. The British note in the Neches case goes into the attitude of the British Government toward exportation of goods from Germany to neutral countries, through neutral ports. There are now between $50,000,000 and $100,000,000 worth of alleged American owned goods in Holland and Germany, all of German origin, which have been unable to move to this country on account of the British Government's attitude.

The British supplementary note in reply to the American caveat note of July 14 deals with the principles of international law under which the British Government insists it has a right to prevent shipments passing from neutral coun-

Riley's Agent, with Whom He Had Scuffle, Attacked in Address at Columbia.

PRISON RUNAWAYS HELPED

Politicians Trying to Oust Him Exert Influence Against Reforms, the Speaker Asserts.

Thomas Mott Osborne, Warden of Sing Sing, charged in a speech to Summer school students at Columbia University last night that politicians, who wanted to oust him from the Wardenship had tried to "frame him up," and that the station platform altercation he had with a confidential agent of the State Superintendent of Prisons in Ossining last Thursday was an outgrowth of an attempted "frame up." The politicians who wanted to oust him, he said, had "a peculiar reason" for wanting him "replaced by somebody more pliable and less honest."

The address was given under the auspices of the National committee on Prisons and Prison Labor, of which Mr. Osborne is Honorary President, and which has its headquarters at Columbia. He first described conditions as he found them at Auburn and Sing Sing Prisons, and then described the reforms he had instituted and their effect on some of the prisoners. Prisons as they had been, he said, were perhaps the greatest failures of civilization. He was trying to give the prisoners mental and spiritual freedom.

"But we have one great enemy to reckon with," the Warden said, "and that is the politician."

Mr. Osborne told of the visit last Thursday of Superintendent Riley's agent, Patrick H. McDonald. McDonald went to the prison that day, Mr. Osborne said, because it was understood that he, the Warden, would be absent on account of the double execution the next morning, when Becker and a mulatto were sent to the electric chair. McDonald made the visit to get certain prison records and papers, and Mr. Osborne said he waited until he had procured them covertly from a convict before he left Superintendent Riley's letter for the Warden at the office and disappeared. Mr. Osborne reached the station before McDonald had left and got the papers from McDonald's handbag after losing a couple of shirt buttons and being slightly rumpled up while "reasoning" with the confidential agent, as he put it last night. His assault charge against the agent will be heard before a Magistrate in Ossining next Friday.

Men Encouraged to Run Away.

"You don't know what they meant to frame up," the Warden said to his audience, and then added significantly, "but I think I do." He did not go into details on this point, but referred to mysterious influences at work in another connection.

"We have had three successful runaways, and one unsuccessful," he said. "I could tell you some interesting stories about these. There is not a bit of doubt that some of these men received encouragement from the outside, and there is a powerful opposition exerting itself against the reform movement." The Warden asked his audience to remember his words if they ever heard of his committing "some frightful crime."

Mr. Osborne read copies of a letter he had sent to Governor Whitman in which he defended his reforms and replied to public attacks on his system, and a letter to Superintendent Riley regarding McDonald's method of "smuggling" the records out of the prison. In the second letter he explained his summary tactics in regaining the records by writing:

"Of course, I knew that this undignified and unofficial proceeding could not possibly be with your sanction."

Mr. Osborne said that he had sent Superintendent Riley copies of all the reports McDonald had procured, and that he would send the originals if they were ordered.

"But this time I'll have copies of them myself, and they'll all be numbered," he said. "And then they won't be able to arrange any frame-up."

The Warden declared he liked and respected Superintendent Riley, but he felt that the Superintendent had been misled.

"I wish he would come to Sing Sing himself and learn the truth about what is being done there," he remarked.

Complains of Politicians.

In an appeal to his auditors to support the prison reform movement Mr. Osborne said:

"I think it is up to the people of New York to see that politicians leave me alone in this work I am trying to accomplish for the good of the State and of society. I am doing this because I'm interested in it. I don't get any money out of Sing Sing. It costs me money to hold the job. The salary the State allows me I have used to employ an Assistant Warden."

Mr. Osborne asserted that his reforms were practicable and calculated to be of more benefit to society than to the prisoners personally. He cited the following case to prove that one prisoner, at least, had learned to control impulses sufficiently to be allowed to return to the world:

"When a man escaped fifteen of the prisoners were sent out to find him and stayed out all night. Every one of them returned, and had twelve years more of his sentence to serve. That man was tempted not to come back, of course, and that very act proved him capable of taking his place in society again."

ROOSEVELT IS HOME; 1916 PROGRAM READY

Governor Johnson of California to Go Into Republican Convention to Fight.

MOOSE CONVENTION LATER

Colonel Has Only Kind Words for Robinson and Hamlin, Who Deserted Progressives Here.

Hiram Johnson, Governor of California, and nominee of the Progressive Party for Vice President in 1912, when Colonel Theodore Roosevelt headed the ticket, will be used as the battering ram with which to break down the doors of conservatism, and force Progressive principles and a nominee who may be satisfactory to the majority of the members of the Progressive Party at the Republican National Convention in 1916. That, at least, is the present plan, and it will be carried out unless developments prior to the primary elections next Spring make the adoption of an entirely new program necessaray.

Colonel Roosevelt, who returned to his home at Oyster Bay yesterday after a visit to the Panama-Pacific Exposition, talked over the political situation at length with the Governor of California while in San Francisco, and it can be stated authoritatively that Johnson is not only willing, but anxious to make the fight.

According to the present tentative program, Governor Johnson will not only endeavor to capture the delegation to the Republican National Convention from California, but he may go into other Western States where the delegates are elected at the direct primaries and endeavor to add to his strength as a factor in naming the man who will head the Republican ticket next year.

Colonel Roosevelt, with Mrs. Roosevelt, who is in the best of health despite reports to the contrary, arrived at the Grand Central Station at 9:35 o'clock yesterday morning on the Twentieth Century Limited. The Colonel was as buoyant and aggressive as ever, and looked full of fight. He was met by half a dozen reporters, who asked him for an expression about the decision of Theodore Douglas Robinson, Jr., ex-State Chairman of the Progressive Party, and Chauncey J. Hamlin, its leader in Erie County, to enroll as Republicans and quit the Progressive ranks. At first he refused to make any comment, but after his arrival at Oyster Bay he issued this statement, which was taken by many as an indication that the Colonel was only too anxious to have Republicans and Progressives join in the next big fight for political honors:

"As regards the Progressives who have announced their intention of enrolling as Republicans in this State, I have nothing to say except that I think it has been fine of them to have made the great fight they have made during the past three years for Progressive principles, and I am sure they are acting conscientiously in the step they now take and with the purpose of doing what they regard as most useful to the community.

"Holding the convictions I do it would be an impossibility for me myself to take the step. I shall enroll as a Progressive, and if any man in this State asks my advice I shall advise him also to enroll as a Progressive."

This trip made by the Colonel to the coast, to which, in his words, no political significance was to be attached, has given him an excellent opportunity to study the situation and has left him none the less determined to bring about, if possible, a coalition of the Republican and Progressive parties if it is possible to nominate the right kind of a candidate on the right kind of a platform at the Republican convention.

The decision to have Governor Johnson run in the Republican primaries, and, by becoming the disturbing factor in 1916, disappoint those Republicans who believed they were to be allowed to hold their convention in peace after the disturbance of 1912, does not mean, it was said, that Roosevelt and his followers in the Progressive Party would demand the nomination by the Republicans of Johnson.

In fact, it can be said that very little hope, if any, is held by them that Johnson could carry the convention. But they realize to the full the importance of Johnson as a club held over the head of the Republican Party. And they hope that by injecting Johnson into the fray it will be possible at least to defeat the nomination of a reactionary, and to place at the head of the Republican ticket a man whom the Progressives, who are not determined to make a lone fight at all costs, could support without all loss of self-respect. They hope to have a very strong voice in framing the platform and purging it of some of the doctrines which they believe are fatal to the cause of advance, and, as the Colonel might express it, "righteousness."

Colonel Roosevelt returned from his tour of the West with one thing stamped indelibly in his mind, and that was that there would be a national convention of the Progressive Party, at which a straight Progressive ticket would be nominated. He found everywhere enough of the radical branch of the party demanding such a step to make it more than a possibility—in fact, to make it inevitable. He found also that in most sections, when it was learned that he would not run under any circumstances—or at least unless the most remarkable situation arose—that the Progressives were looking to Governor Johnson of California as their next candidate.

William H. Childs, leader of the Progressive Party in Kings County, issued a statement yesterday declaring his allegiance to the Progressive Party principles. He said in part:

"If this present National Administration and the incoming Congress do not place our country upon the proper economic basis for general prosperity, the Progressive Party should stand ready to unite under any banner for the election of such candidates as can command our confidence."

In the Middle West and even in California, Colonel Roosevelt, it was said, found many Progressives who were considering the advisability of throwing their support to President Wilson should he be renominated by the Democrats, in the event a reactionary, so called, was nominated by the Republicans in 1916, and it was evident that the Progressive Party nominee had no opportunity of victory.

Upon his arrival here yesterday Colonel Roosevelt spent a few hours in town and then motored to his home in Oyster Bay.

GERMAN WINGS FOLDING ON WARSAW; BRITISH SUBMARINES SINK FOUR SHIPS; BULGARIA AWAITS THE HIGHEST BID

German Transport and Destroyer Sunk by British; Underwater Boat also Destroys Turkish Craft

PETROGRAD, Aug. 2.—An official communication, issued here, says that a British submarine has sunk a large German transport in the Baltic Sea.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—The British Admiralty tonight announced that a British submarine had returned and reported the sinking of a German torpedo boat destroyer, believed to be of the G-196 class, on July 26, near the German coast.

The German destroyer G-196 displaced 689 tons and had a speed of 32 knots an hour. Her complement was seventy-three officers and men.

Another statement issued by the Admiralty gave this report of successes won by submarines in eastern waters:

The Vice Admiral Commanding in the Eastern Mediterranean reports that one of the British submarines operating in the Sea of Marmora has torpedoed a large steamer of 3,000 tons off the Mudania pier, which had several vessels secured alongside. The explosion was very heavy.

A small steamer close to Karabigha Bay was torpedoed.

A report from Constantinople states that a gunboat was torpedoed in the Sea of Marmora about this time, and it possibly refers to this occasion.

Torpedoes were fired at lighters alongside the arsenal at Constantinople. The result could not be seen, but the explosion was heavy.

The Zeitunli powder mills were fired at, but owing to the darkness the result could not be ascertained.

The railway cut one mile west of Kara Burnu was bombarded and the line blocked temporarily, so that a troop train was unable to pass. It was being fired at as it steamed back, three truck loads of ammunition being blown up.

BULGARIA OPEN TO BEST OFFER

SERBIA'S VIEW OF SITUATION

Ex-Minister Intimates Neighbor Must Not Be Too Exacting—Germany Takes Bulgar Loan.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUDAPEST, Aug. 2, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—M. Radoslavoff, the Bulgarian Premier, has given an interview to the Sofia correspondent of Az Est. In answer to a question as to the result of the negotiations with Turkey, M. Radoslavoff said:

"There is much talk going on abroad about Bulgaria, but all I can say is the negotiations are proceeding quite satisfactorily."

The correspondent suggested that it was strange Bulgaria should be carrying on negotiations simultaneously with two groups of powers. N. Radoslavoff remarked:

"It is these negotiations that give us the chance to make a decision. Our country seeks only her own advantages and wishes to realize her rights. We have decided to gain these in any case. The only question to be settled is, how can we achieve our aim with the least sacrifice? As regards the internal situation of Bulgaria, I may proudly say that our conditions have improved and that everybody in the country looks forward to the great national undertaking we are about to embark on with immense joy and enthusiasm."

Commenting on this interview, the same paper says it does not convey anything else but that Bulgaria is resolved to join one side or the other. In any case, M. Radoslavoff is resolved to realize the national aspirations of Bulgarians, with whom or against whom he does not care. It argues that the winning over of Bulgaria or the losing of her help will be the greatest diplomatic success or blunder of the century.

Another interesting interview was published in the Bucharest Universum, the Balkan problem. M. Jovanovitch, the Serbian statesman, late Minister in Vienna, made a statement regarding the relations between Serbia and Bulgaria which throws some light on the situation from the Serbian point of view. M. Jovanovitch is known to be the right-hand man of Premier Paschitch; therefore his utterings are to be accepted as the views of official Serbia.

He first of all makes Bulgaria responsible for the Macedonia question, and, as the second Balkan War came about owing to the hunger of Bulgaria for conquest, she will have, he says, to submit to the requirements the situation demands today and be satisfied with what can justly be offered her. "In her own interest," he concluded, "Bulgaria ought to have fought on our side."

LONDON, Tuesday, Aug. 3.—A dispatch to The Exchange Telegraph Company from Geneva says:

"The statement that an agreement has been completed between Turkey and Bulgaria is denied by The Cologne Gazette, which says that the negotiations continue, and that the settlement of the new frontier is dependent on the outcome of several old outstanding disputes.

"The Cologne Gazette adds that Germany is in entire agreement with Turkey's viewpoint."

GERMANY GETS BULGAR LOAN.

To Redeem $24,000,000 Notes Out of $50,000,000 Advanced.

BERLIN, Aug. 2, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—Among the news items given out today by the Overseas News Agency is the following:

"According to the Colongne Gazette, a group of German bankers, headed by the Disconto Gesellschaft, has made a contract with the Bulgarian Government to take about 250,000,000 francs ($50,000,000) of the 5 per cent. Bulgarian gold loan of 1914.

"The Disconto Gesellschaft has been charged to redeem 120,000,000 francs ($24,000,000) of Bulgarian treasury notes, due early in August, at 81.25 marks per 100 francs."

LONDON, Tuesday, Aug. 3.—A wireless dispatch from Berlin says:

"The German bank coalition has an option on 250,000,000 francs ($50,000,000) of the 5 per cent Bulgarian State loan, by means of which 120,000,000 francs ($24,000,000) of Bulgarian Treasury bonds are to be redeemed.

"The coalition is assured the right to an option until Aug. 1, 1817, to a further 250,000,000 of the State loan, and the right of railway and port construction in Bulgaria."

RUSSIA SATISFIED WITH ALLIES' AID

Statement Made by Count Benckendorff Denies Reports of Criticism.

EFFORTS ARE APPRECIATED

And Their Identical Aims in Fighting the Teutons Are Strongly Emphasized.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—Pronouncements in the Duma at Petrograd and by Count Benckendorff, the Russian Ambassador at London, indicate that Russia and England are anxious to brand as unfounded the recurrent reports that the Russian people are disgruntled a the showing Great Britain and France have made in the west, which might create a situation unfavorable to the continued unity of the Allies.

No hint of a separate peace or of dissatisfaction with England's policy comes from any authoritative Russan source, and Count Benckendorff made it plain that there had been no criticism emanating from those who understood the military situation.

Count Benckendorff in a statement issued today reviewed Russia's position after a year of war, laid stress on the identity of aims of Russia and Great Britain, and asserted that peace was impossible "except on our conditions."

Commenting on the reports that Russia was dissatisfied with the efforts the Entente Allies were making in the west, the Ambassador said:

"It has been said that the Russian public hoped for a strong offensive in the west while the Germans were making their onset in the east. This may be so, but not a trace of ill feeling has been manifested, and the sober view which considers only military possibilities has always prevailed. Nowhere has the colossal effort of Great Britain and France in the Dardanelles been more appreciated than in Russia."

PETROGRAD, Aug. 2.—Semi-official press material issued at the General Staff Headquarters in Petrograd says:

"The sending of important German reinforcements from France to our front goes back to the second week of July. Russian style, when Field Marshal von Mackensen met a cruel rebuff on the Wieprz River and the battle on the Narew River took on a stubborn character.

"For every success we have the enemy compensated by piling up against us new forces from the western front, thereby creating very favorable conditions for operations by our allies."

LUSITANIA AS SUNG IN GERMAN MUSIC HALLS

Victims Referred to as a "Choice Dish" for the Destroying Submarine.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Tuesday, Aug. 3.—The Morning Post's Amsterdam correspondent forwards the text of a popular German music hall song, entitled "The Destruction of the Lusitania," described as a marching song by Rudolf Kuhn. The verses tell the following tale:

"She sailed for England from New York with contraband. She invited thousands to travel on board. But our submarine smelt a choice dish.

"The Lusitania sailed merrily along her criminal course; but the submarine was on the watch off Ireland's coast. She carried Americans, Englishmen, Frenchmen, Greeks, and Dutchmen to the dance of death.

"The submarine hit true. Those who were not suffocated were drowned. Vanderbilt was among them. It is a pity that Minister Grey was not there, too."

After references to complaints by mermaids at being disturbed by so many explosions and by vile gases emitted by the American ammunition, the poem continues:

So there the dead lay,
Most of them with their paws burnt,
England's sons and their companonsh.
Oh, how quiet they have become!

"So join now in a funeral song.
Build submarines as fast as possible.
Sink the enemy into a cool grave so that Germany may have peace."

Each verse has a rousing chorus.

NAREW REACHED NEAR LOMZA

Semi-Circle Before Ivangorod Fortress Gradually Being Narrowed.

MACKENSEN SMASHING ON

Russians Battle Furiously to Hold Him in Check While Centre Retires.

GERMANS BRING SIEGE GUNS

Great 42s That Battered Down Liege and Namur Hurried Up to Attack Warsaw Forts.

LONDON, Tuesday, Aug. 3.—While the Austro-Germans continue to tighten the wings of their great eastern battle front, with success at both extremities, including the occupation of Mitau in the north and further progress beyond Chelm in Southeast Poland, the situation before Warsaw proper remains unchanged and obscure.

Few additional details have reached London concerning the plans for the abandonment of the city, but apparently the time has not arrived for the Russians to relinquish their increasingly precarious hold on the capital, or, at least, no word of its evacuation has come to London.

Ivangorod, southeast of Warsaw, heretofore erroneously reported invested, is now nearing that state in fact, according to the Berlin announcement, but from Ivangorod eastward to Chelm, and beyond, the Russians who had to abandon the railway are fighting most desperately in an endeavor to hold up Field Marshal von Mackensen's advance northward into Poland, a movement which seriously threatens the Russian centre retiring from Warsaw.

Several 42 centimetre guns to be used in the bombardment of Russian forts passed through Berlin last week on the way to the Easter nfront, according to a Central News dispatch from Amsterdam.

Germans Tell of Mitau's Fall.

BERLIN, Aug. 2 (via London.)—Mitau, the capital of the Russian Province of Courland, 25 miles southwest of Riga, has been occupied by German troops, according to the official statement issued today by the German Army Headquarters Staff. Following is the official statement:

In the Eastern war theatre: After fighting Mitau was occupied by our troops. The town on the whole is not damaged.

East of Poniewicz fighting developed which is proceeding favorably for us.

Northeast of Suwalki we stormed Height No. 186, southeast of Kaletnik.

Northwest of Lomza our troops reached the Narew River after overcoming obstinate resistance at various points. One officer and 1,003 men were captured.

On the remainder of the front to the Vistula we are advancing. We captured one officer and 550 men.

Before Warsaw the situation is unchanged.

In the southeastern war theatre: North of the heights near Podzance, which we captured July 31, our troops under General von Woyrsch yesterday advanced under heavy fighting through the wooded district eastward. The retreating enemy lost 1,500 prisoners and eight machine guns.

Before Ivangorod the Austro-Hungarian troops have been victorious. The semi-circle around the fortress is becoming narrower.

In the istula district, southwest of Lenczna, the army of Field Marshal von Mackensen still is being engaged by the Russians.

German troops have gained a new success east of Kurow, capturing 600 prisoners.

Between Lenczna and Zalin, northeast of Chelm, our pursuit of the enemy is progressing.

On the Bug River we have reached the district north of Dubienka.

Austro-Hungarian troops are advanc across the Bug southwest of ladimir and Wolnysk.

Eugen Lennhoff, correspondent of the Zeitung Am Mittag, telegraphs as follows from ustrian Headquarters under dtae of Aug. 1:

"Heavy fighting has been resumed to the north of Lublin. There and on the front in the region of the Great Bend of the Vistula the Russians are trying to check the enegetic advance of the Austro-Germans in previously fortified positions, obviously aiming to meet the danger threatening Invangorod from the south. Their resistance is stronger than further to the east between the Wieprz and the Bug, where the retreat continued Saturday.

"The German-Austrian front in this section is everywhere in steady forward movement. Whenever the enemy tries to hold points of support he is driven back. The Russians have now abandoned their efforts to break the Austro-German lines further up the Bug in Galicia after weeks of heavy losses and diminutive success."

CZAR TO SPARE WARSAW POLES TO TAKE CHARGE

People Still Remaining in Capital Reassured After Panic—Food Prices Soar.

WARSAW, July 31. (via Petrograd, Aug. 2.)—The intimation that the Vistula line was to be abandoned by the Russians and the beginning of the removal of factories, government institutions and hospitals, created intense excitement among all classes of the population of the Polish capital.

It was feared that the military authorities might deem the evacuation of the city by the inhabitants a military necessity and would destroy a great part of the city to prevent its use by the Germans as a base.

Many wealthy residents left for the interior and many who have remained sent their families out during the past fortnight.

Stations and trains are overcrowded to discomfort, the number of passengers having been increased by necessary military precautions.

The streets which generally are thronged became deserted. The restaurants and coffee houses were empty, the inhabitants keeping indoors, seemingly fearful of some immediate disaster.

That period having passed with a realisation that the city is to be spared, those remaining have taken up their normal trend of living.

The French and Belgian Consuls left the capital in the early days of German proximity, turning over their affairs to the American Consul, Hernando de Soto.

The city police and administrative authorities have continued their functions, thus operating to restore the confidence of the people.

In the meantime arrangements have been completed to substitute for the existing police and city authorities the Polish civic militia and government, should the former find it necessary to cease their activities. The civic militia has received full instructions and will take over the policing of the city and the nearby suburbs.

The civic administration embraces the criminal courts and has already entered upon that function to the extent of taking charge of prisoners. From the prisons most of the grave offenders have been removed to Central Russia and there remain only minor criminals and civic offenders.

Three daily newspapers have been suspended. One of them was founded in 1774 and was the organ of the Popular Democratic Party.

3,035,200 RUSSIANS TAKEN BY TEUTONS

Germans Report 8,000 Cannon and 3,000 Maxims Captured Since War Started.

BTRLIN, Aug. 2, (by Wireless to Sayville, N. Y.)—The German War Ministry furnishes in connection with the first anniversary of the war interesting figures relating to the successes of the Central Powers, says the Overseas News Agency. The statement follows:

"Prisoners of war taken in Galicia now in German camps and hospitals, or employed as workers, total 938,869; men captured in the campaign last week and on their way to camp number 120,000; prisoners in Austria-Hungary, 636,543, making a grand total of 1,695,412.

"Prisoners taken in Russia and now in Germany total 5,600 officers and 720,000 non-commissioned officers and privates; in Austria, 3,100 officers and 610,000 non-commissioned officers and privates; total, 8,790 officers and 1,330,000 men.

"German collecting stations received up to the middle of June 5,843 captured field guns and 1,559 machine guns. Many field pieces were not delivered to these stations, but were kept with the troops and are being used against their former owners. While exact figures are not available, it is estimated that nearly 8,000 guns and 3,000 machine guns have been captured."

FINE WINDAU $25,000.

First Act of Germans on Taking Possession of Russian City.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 2.—Refugees from Windau, on the Baltic, who have arrived at Riga, relate that the first act of the Germans in taking possession of Windau was to impose a levy of 50,000 rubles ($25,000) to be worked out by the inhabitants of the city on the roads and bridges and on their farms.

Windau is in Courland, 100 miles northwest of Mitau. Agricultural machinery was provided by the Germans, and the local farmers were ordered to proceed with their harvesting. They were told to bring in their grain to designated places, and that the producer of this grain would be permitted to retain one-fifth, the remainder going to Germany.

The German troops have been forbidden, these refugees continue, to discuss the war with the people of Windau. The inhabitants of the entire Windau community have been enrolled, and at the same time warned that if any man disappeared this would be the signal for the destruction of the estate on which he worked.

The Germans are said to be showing little respect for the Lettish pastors, many of whose homes have been looted.

$3,621,000,000 WAR COST.

Russia Will Have Spent That Sum by End of 1915, Minister Says.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 2.—Finance Minister Bark in an address to the Duma last night stated that in spite of enormous war expenses Russia had succeeded in finding sufficient funds, notwithstanding the loss of revenue caused by the prohibition of the sale of liquor, the tax upon which yielded 1,000,000,000 rubles ($500,000,000) annually.

He stated that the war expenses of Russia at the end of 1915 will amount to 7,242,000,000 rubles, ($3,621,000,000,) to cover which the Minister is projecting a series of credit operations. These operations were assured of success, M. Bark said, as the national savings had increased 1,800,000,000 rubles, ($900,000,000,) which proved that the country had sufficient resources.

This was due, the Minister insisted, entirely to the temperance of the people, and he asserted that prohibition must be maintained even after the war because of its salutary effect upon the nation.

KAISERIN BACK IN BERLIN.

Praised Energy of East Prussians in Rebuilding Ruined Homes.

BERLIN, Aug. 2, (via Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The German Empress, after traveling through East Prussia accompanied by the Crown Princess, has left Königsberg for Berlin.

Her Majesty wrote a letter to the civil authorities of Königsberg in which, according to the Overseas News Agency, she thanked the population for the hearty reception accorded her in spite of the misery caused by the two Russian invasions of last year.

"In the midst of the débris of devastated churches and houses," the Empress is quoted as writing, "I could observe the diligence, the industry, and the energy of the sturdy Prussians, who at once set to work to rebuild or repair their homes. Such efforts must gain a well-merited reward. The fact that the workers are returning to their homes carries the conviction that the East Prussians are not disheartened, but are firmly resolved to begin anew."

POPE'S PLEA A MONUMENT

But Allies Say "No" to Peace, Says the Cologne Gazette.

BERLIN, Aug. 2, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—Commenting on the appeal for peace issued last week by Pope Benedict the Cologne Gazette says:

"Pope Benedict has erected to his memory a lasting monument, deserving the great gratitude of mankind, far beyond that of Catholic circles, but it is met in London, Paris, Rome, and Petrograd with a sharp 'No!' Meanwhile Germany grasps her sword still more firmly and is ready to deal heavier blows to accomplish what religion and humanity are unable to accomplish and to secure an honorable and lasting peace."

10,000,000 PERSONS UNDER KAISER'S FLAG

And 30,000,000 Dependent on Government for Food, British Prize Court Is Told.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—At today's session of the meat cargo cases before a British prize court Sir Frederick E. Smith, the Solicitor General, produced an affidavit made by Major Eric Dillon, a member of the General Staff, giving a British estimate showing that the number of persons serving in the German Army and under the control of German military authority aggregates 10,000,000.

The statement was produced in support of the Crown's contention that persons employed in some of the ordinarily civilian occupations were now in the service of the German Government and no longer part of the civilian population; and that, therefore, the foodstuff seized by the British Government really was intended for Germany's military forces. Major Dillon's figures follow:

A—Under arms on two fronts, in garrisons in Belgium, and on lines of communications, 4,000,000.

B—In training in Germany, 750,000.

C—Casualties, including constant temporary wastage, 2,000,000.

D—On railways, all of which are used and organized especially for war and are controlled by the military authorities, 500,000.

E—At Krupp's arsenals and factories and other arsenals and factories concerned in the manufacture of war munitions, 750,000.

F—In coal mines and in factories concerned in making army boots, clothing, and other articles necessary in the equipment and provisioning of the army, 2,000,000.

Solicitor General Smith argued that the German Government reserved the right to substitute rations for money allowances to the wives and children of these men. Therefore, at the moderate figure of two dependents for each of the 10,000,000, he said, there would be 30,000,000 who might be dependent on the State for rations, so that it would be fair to assume that in all probability the seized goods were intended for Government use.

BERLIN PRESS THINKS IBERIAN WAS TO BLAME

Believes the Vessel Refused to Stop and Submarine was Forced to Shell Her.

From a Staff Correspondent.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 2, (via London.)—It is not believed here that the American casualties in the sinking of the Iberian will precipitate a crisis forcing action on the part of President Wilson. The feeling is that the Iberian case is like that of the Armenian.

The newspapers give no prominence to it except a short Rotterdam report. They refrain from all comment except the following:

"The steamer undoubtedly attempted to escape. Therefore the submarine was forced to compel her to stop by shell fire."

The submarine commander's report is not expected for a week or two.

London Newspaper Thinks Attack Calls for Action by Us.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—Referring to the fact that Americans were killed and wounded among the crew of the Leyland liner Iberian, which was sunk by a German submarine, The Daily Chronicle says:

"In view of the concluding sentence of President Wilson's last note this circumstance makes the affair an international incident of some importance. On the face of it the Germans have done the very thing the United States has declared its intention of regarding as deliberately nufriendly. The German excuse will presumably be that the Iberian did not stop when summoned, but the evidence, as far as we have any, does not point to this having been the case."

LEELANAW SAILOR IN JAIL.

German Masquerading as Dutchman Gets Six Months.

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 2.—Charles Reh of the crew of the American steamer Leelanaw, which was sunk last week by a German submarine, was sentenced to six months in jail today. When questioned concerning his nationality he said he was a Hollander, but subsequently he admitted that he was born in Bremen and had served in the German Army.

Reh was about to embark for New York on board the American Line steamer St. Paul when he made the statement to the alien officer which led to his arrest.

Germany Awaits Iberian Report.

BERLIN, Aug. 2.—The German authorities have not yet received a report on the sinking of the Leyland Line steamship Iberian. In accordance with previous experience it is probable that ten days or a fortnight may elapse before the Admiralty is in a position to make a report on th incident.

DERIDE KAISER'S WORDS.

French and Italian Papers Discuss Responsibility for War.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—Emperor William's address to his people on the anniversary of the war was the subject of lengthy and sacrastic comment today in the French press. The German Emperor's assertion that he did not want war evokes again a discussion of responsibility.

The Temps says:

"The Emperor dwells longer than usual on ideas of peace."

The Journal Des Débates remarks:

"Nobody, not even the most neutral of neutrals, will believe that Serbia threatened Austria; that Belgium plotted to humiliate Germany, or that the Triple Entente prepared ten years for war, for which in the beginning they visibly were lacking in the very arms essential."

MILAN, Italy, Aug. 2.—Commenting on Emperor William's address to the German people issued Saturday, the Secolo says:

"To the Emperor's oaths of innocence Europe and the whole civilized world already have replied that he is not telling the truth. His troops have so far been conquering because of their superior preparations. He accuses Europe of preparing ten years for war while Germany for thirty years sharpened her arms for aggression."

GERMANS USE FIRE IN ARGONNE FIGHT

Take Trenches with Use of Flaming Liquid, but Fail to Hold Greater Part.

FRENCH GAIN IN ALSACE

Report Capture of Several Trenches and Heavy Losses Among the Defenders.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—The Germans on the west front have again used flames to aid their attack, this time in the Argonne region. A violent offensive was launched at the same time the flaming liquid was directed against the French lines. By this means the Germans succeeded in gaining a foothold in the French trenches, but a counter-attack won back most of the ground, according to the French report.

In the region north of Arras, the scene of much bitter fighting, the French report the occupation of a section of a trench along the road between Oblain and Augres.

On the eastern end of the line engagements have been renewed north of Münster, in Alsace. Paris reports the capture of several trenches here and heavy losses among the Germans.

Around the St. Mihiel wedge the Germans have taken the offensive, and several infantry attacks have been made.

The following is the official communication issued by the French War Office tonight:

The activity of the artillery has been less marked in Artois and the Valley of the Aisne. A number of shells have been thrown into Arras and Soissons.

In the Argonne spirited infantry engagements occurred on the night of Aug. 1-2. In the region of Hill 213 the Germans occupied one of our trenches, which a counter-attack by our troops recovered in part.

During the course of the day, after having made use of flaming liquid, the enemy launched a violent attack against our trenches in the region of Marie-Thérèse and succeeded in gaining a foothold in one of them. We immediately counter-attacked and regained the greater part of the ground lost.

On the heights of the Meuse and in the Woevre there was the usual cannonade, more intense around Champion.

In the Vosges a succession of engagements have been going on since the evening of Aug. 1 before the positions which we conquered on the heights of the Linge, of Schratzmannele and of Barrenkopf. We have carried several German trenches, inflicting on the enemy heavy losses and taking fifty prisoners belonging to two different regiments.

The French War Office in the afternoon gave out this statement:

The evening of Aug. 1 and the night of Aug. 1-2 were marked by various infantry encounters.

In the Artois district, after having repulsed several German attacks with hand grenades, we took possession of a section of a trench along the road between Ablain and Angres, to the north of the national highway running between Bethune and Arras.

In the vicinity of Souchez the firing has been going on with handgrenades and bombs, but it has brought no change on the front line either to one side or the other.

In the Champagne district, along the front between Perthes and Beauséjour, there was yesterday fighting with mines, in which we had the advantage.

In the Argonne, not far from Marie-Thérèse, and in the vicinity of St. Hubert, the Germans, after a spirited fight, in which bombs were used, made several attempts to launch attacks, but they were repulsed.

On the heights of the Meuse, between Les Eparges and the Calonne trench, the enemy yesterday made three different attacks upon our position. Our artillery and our infantry fire succeeded in checking these attacks.

Pont-à-Mousson and the villages of Maidières and Manoncourt-sur-Seille were bombarded yesterday from the air with incendiary shells.

The official German statement follows:

West of the Argonnes by a surprise bayonet attack we occupied several enemy trenches, capturing four officers and 142 men and taking one machine gun.

In the Vosges the French in the evening again attacked our lines of Schratzmannele-Barrenkopf and violent fighting proceeded all night. The French were repulsed.

At Lingekopf fresh fighting also is proceeding. At several points on this front we successfully exploded mines.

South of the Ban-de-Sapt our artillery shot down a French captive balloon.

Near Longmer, east of Gérardmer, (Vosges front,) one of our battle aeroplanes forced a French aeroplane to land.

NEW TROOPS FOR THE WEST.

Fully 140,000 Germans Said to Have Passed Through Luxemburg.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 2, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—The Luxemburg correspondent of the Tyd reports that 140,000 men have passed in ten days through Luxemburg on their way to the western war theatre. The correspondent adds that the soldiers did not display any enthusiasm, and appeared warworn and jaded.

COL. DESCLAUX DEGRADED.

Officer Convicted of Stealing Supplies to Serve Seven Years.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—Colonel François Desclaux, ex-Paymaster General of the French Army, who on March 27 was sentenced by a military court-martial to seven years' solitary confinement after being convicted on the charge of stealing military stores, was degraded this morning at the military school without incident.

Colonel Desclaux, who was chief secretary to Joseph Caillaux when the latter was Minister of Finance, was arrested in Paris in January, charged with stealing military supplies and sending them to the home of Mme. Bechoff, a well-known dressmaker of the French capital.

The trial created a sensation in Paris on account of the political connections of the army officer and the prominence of the dressmaker.

Mme. Bechoff, in whose house about a ton of war material, consisting of packages of coffee, tents, trophies of war, big shells, and helmets, was found, also was declared guilty and sentenced to two years in prison. A soldier named Verges, who was accused of aiding in the thefts, was sentenced to one year in prison.

FRENCH ACCUSE FOE OF INHUMAN ACTS

Commission Offers Evidence That Wounded and Prisoners Were Killed.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—The commission presided over by Georges Payelle, President of the French Court of Accounts, has presented to Premier Viviani the final report of its investigations into acts on the part of German soldiers in violation of the rights of man.

This report contains 12,000 words, and gives in detail the evidence gathered concerning the use by German troops of military and civilian prisoners as shields against the fire of French troops, as well as of the employment by the troops of Emperor William of cartridges in which the bullets were reversed in order to cause more serious wounds; split bullets, and other bullets cut to make them more rending.

Continuing the report cites orders given by General Stenger, commander of the Fifty-eighth German Brigade, ordering his soldiers to kill the wounded enemy and to take no more prisoners. Evidence confirming the issuing and the circulation of this order was obtained from German prisoners belonging to the 112th and 142d Regiments. The report contains also evidence of the massacre of French soldiers as a result of this order, as well as the massacre of wounded men after the battle of Fethe in Belgium. It presents the allegations of many individual soldiers who declare they saw their wounded comrades put to death by a rifle shot, a revolver shot, the thrust of a bayonet, or a blow from the butt of a musket by German soldiers, subaltern officers, and officers. Some of the French witnesses testified that they themselves had been objects of such aggressive attacks after having been wounded, and that they had survived.

The report devotes considerable space to allegations of the inhumanity of the Germans to their prisoners of war, which it says is proven by the evidence of the victims. Many prisoners of war have been shot, while others had their skulls crushed by blows from the butt of a musket. At St. Dié thirty French prisoners were assassinated in this manner by Bavarian troops. The truth of this is vouched for by five men who actually witnessed the executions. Other men who appeared before the commission declared that they had found the dead bodies of a French patrol numbering seven men, an infantry corporal and six privates, with their hands tied behind their backs and dead from rifle shots. This incident was further supported by evidence taken before a Justice of the Peace.

The report concludes with three columns of evidence to prove the bombarding of ambulances by the Germans; the firing upon stretcher bearers, and the taking prisoner of surgeons. In some cases, it is set forth, French surgeons were arrested by German surgeons and by them sent to the rear to be interned.

Several cases are cited in which German wounded, succored by Frenchmen, are alleged to have taken the opportunity to kill those going to their relief.

WILL SET WILSON FREE.

Germany Grants Our Request for Accused Consular Clerk.

BERLIN, Aug. 2, (via London.)—Harry L. Wilson of Portland, Ore., and Washington, the clerk in the American Consulate in Berlin, who was arrested last week on a charge made by the German authorities of assisting a British subject to obtain an American passport in order to escape from Germany, will be released tomorrow at the request of the American Government and sent back to the United States.

James W. Gerard, the American Ambassador, today had the clerk brought to the Embassy and subjected him to a vigorous cross-examination as to the source of the money, which it is alleged, he sent to his home, but without result.

Wilson, it is alleged, certified that he personally knew the applicant for the passport as an American citizen, which enabled him to obtain the document. When the affair was about to be discovered Wilson disappeared from Berlin, but was arrested at the Swedish frontier and brought back to the capital.

GOD HELPED, SAYS KAISER.

Points Upward When Congratulated on German Success.

COLOGNE, Tuesday, Aug. 3, (via London.)—Cardinal Hartmann, Archbishop of Cologne, said in the course of the cathedral service Sunday that he had congratulated Emperor William a few weeks ago upon the favorable military developments in the east, and that the Emperor pointed upward and replied in a tone of the deepest conviction: "He up there has helped us."

LONDON, Aug. 2.—The staff of Melbourne University, according to a Reuter dispatch from Melbourne, has united in the invention of a respirator reported to be 100 per cent more effective than any now in use in the European war theatre.

McADOO VISITS PRESIDENT.

Unannounced Conference May Turn to National Defense Topics.

CORNISH, N. H., Aug. 2.—Secretary McAdoo of the Treasury Department arrived here unexpectedly today to see President Wilson. He explained tonight that he came for a social visit, but added that he probably would discuss department matters before leaving.

The decision of the President to pay particular attention to national defense in his next message to Congress gave rise to reports here that he desired to discuss the financial condition of the Government with Mr. McAdoo. No comment on the report could be obtained at the Summer White House tonight.

The Secretary, with Mrs. McAdoo, the President's daughter, made a twenty-two hour trip, most of it by automobile, from North Haven, Me., to Windsor. Mr. McAdoo and the President talked with other visitors tonight. They will discuss business questions tomorrow morning.

The fiscal affairs of the Government, including the condition of the Treasury, have occupied the President's attention recently because he soon will have to begin considering his message to Congress. He has also been planning to pay more attention than formerly to co-ordinating the income and expenses of the Government.

In the near future he will discuss with members of the committe enamed on the subject by the House at the last session of Congress the possibility of establishing a budget system.

Secretary and Mrs. McAdoo left their baby daughter, who has been ill recently, at North Haven. The child has almost recovered. They plan to go by automobile tomorrow to Boston and then continue to their Summer home by train.

'FRIENDS OF PEACE' ATTACK LANSING

Secretary of State Called Upon by Pro-Germans to Modify His Views or Resign.

SAY HIS ACTS SPELL WAR

"Millionaire Clique" and "Capitalist Press" Accused of Plotting to Embroil the Country.

The "Friends of Peace," representing the German-American Alliance of Greater New York, the German Catholic Federation of New York the "American Truth Society," the German-American Peace Society, the United Austrian and Hungarian-American Societies, the "American Fair Play Society," and various other organizations of pro-German origin, issued a statement last night in which Robert Lansing, Secretary of State, was attacked. The letterhead of the Friends of Peace carries the names of the men scheduled to act as Vice Presidents of the National Peace Convention to be held in Chicago next month. These names include those of two Justices of the Supreme Court of New York State, namely, John W. Goff and Daniel Cohalan. Others are Henry Weissmann, who was quoted as denouncing President Wilson as a "political bankrupt" at Utica last week; Edmund von Mach, the Boston pro-German propagandist; Jeremiah O'Leary, the man who engineered the meetings of the "American Truth Society in the Cort Theatre last Winter at which the policies of the Wilson Administration were denounced; Richard Bartholdt, the former German-American Congressman from St. Louis; Professor William L. Shepherd of Columbia University and Paul Mueller.

The Secretary of State is denounced in the statement as "one whose radicalism is liable to plunge the nation into war," and announcement is made that the National Peace Convention at its Chicago meeting will be called upon to demand of Secretary Lansing that "he employ more conservatism and deliberation in his official acts, or, if by nature he is deprived of such qualities, that he surrender his high post to one possessing them and whose official acts, therefore, will not be a menace to the peace and prosperity of this country at such a critical period.

"Just at this juncture," the statement goes on to say, "the country needs a Secretary whose conduct is calculated to avoid war, not to precipitate it. It needs a man of high statesmanship in the Secretary's chair, one who is neutral in his views, not partisan or militant; one who is a friend of the masses, not of the classes."

Here are some of the alleged reasons set forth for the need of a "high order of diplomacy and regard for the public weal" in the conduct of the Secretary of State:

That there is strong evidence of a deliberate plot to involve this nation in the European war.

That any sensible person knows that no nation of Europe is seeking war with America at this time, when each has all it can bear in the existing struggle, and that if we become involved it will be entirely at the instigation of our militarist agitators.

That the same subtle influences which dragged the Italian Kingdom into the war, against the people's will, is at work in America, and along identical lines.

That the "millionaire clique" are loudest in their cry for war, being urged on by the triple incentive to avenge the death of one of their members, to enhance their power over the commonalty, and to make good their loans to England, which loans England has threatened to repudiate if she should lose the war.

That the capitalist-controlled press has been made the medium for stirring up a war fever in this country, just as was the case in Italy, and that the news and editorial columns of these jingo papers allege a war sentiment which does not exist; that the efforts of the jingo press to arouse the people to favor war have failed utterly, and that if a vote were taken nine-tenths of the people would be for peace.

The statement then explains that "The Friends of Peace" is a "central body" affiliated with organizations of "every class, religion, and creed." Follows a reference to the recent pro-German meeting in Madison Square Garden, in which is repeated the statement made at the Utica convention of the German-American Alliance that the meeting was "attended by 100,000 persons." Madison Square Garden, when filled to capacity seats fewer than 14,000 persons. The present agitation is the direct outgrowth, it is stated, of their mass meeting and another subsequently held in San Francisco.

The same organization issued a statement Saturday night, attacking the newspapers that were not pro-German.

A second statement given out last night says that among those invited to address the Chicago meeting are W. J. Bryan, Charles Nagel, ex-Secretary of Commerce; Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia, Senator Works of California, Miss Jane Addams, ex-Governor Pennypacker of Pennsylvania and "Cyclone" Davis of Texas.

TO BUY RUSSIAN MUNITIONS.

Gen. Harmonius Here—S. G. Talbot to Purchase Railway Material.

Major Gen. Edward Harmonius of the artillery branch of the Russian Army arrived yesterday from Petrograd via Liverpool, on the Anchor liner Cameronia to buy war munitions for the Russian Army. He is accompanied by his secretary, Ivan Petroffsky; Prince Andrew Gagarin, and Stafford G. Talbot, an Englishman, who has been for many years in the service of the Russian Government. Mr. Talbot is here to purchase rolling stock and other materials for the new railroad that is being constructed from Petrograd to the little used port of Kola, not far from Archangel.

An American engineer named Sharp is in charge of the railroad, which was commenced at both ends, and has set a new pace for that kind of construction work in Russia, Mr. Petroffsky said.

ASKS GERMANY FOR CARS.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUCHAREST, Aug. 2, (Dispatch to The London Times.)—The question of the export of the harvest this year is taking a serious turn. The Dardanelles being closed, the only country to which it is possible to export the surplus is Germany. The number of wagons owned by Rumania is not sufficient to convey the enormous quantity of cereals, and it has become necessary to apply to Germany to supply the ed ficiency.

Germany is seeking by this means to put pressure on the Rumanian Government in order to obtain transit of munitions to Turkey. I am assured by a well-informed source that the Government will not yield to this pressure.

GERMAN-AMERICAN ALLIANCE CONVENTION

Delegates Represent 2,500,000 Members—Hope for German Victory Expressed.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 2.—The German-American National Alliance, with a membership of more than two and a half million in the United States, began its eighth biennial convention here today. There were assembled 550 delegates from all parts of the country.

Dr. C. J. Hexamer of Philadelphia, President of the Alliance, at a banquet tonight made many references to the European war in his address, which he ended with the toast, "Good luck to the German and Austro-Hungarian arms on land, on the water, and in the air."

The war, he said, for the time being had placed the work and progress of the German nation in the background, but had not diminished the ambitions of the people.

"German-American citizens know now, and knew from the beginning of the war a year ago, that Germany was fighting for an open door on the seas as well as on the land," said Dr. Hexamer. "Conscientious German-Americans knew immediately after the war began that the principle for which the German nation was fighting will bring the world nearer to a universal peace than all the efforts of all the pacificists and other well-meaning dreamers.

"Beginning with the first days in August, 1914, it was necessary for us to make great sacrifices. It was also necessary for us to foster German-American relationship as a part of the great principle for which the Fatherland is fighting. While the hostilities last and the horizon is clouded, we cannot expect that our German-American position and the far-sighted powers of our organization will be fully understood and acknowledged.

"My friends, I do not want to be prophetic, but yet I want to say that the future will prove us right. The time will and must come when the American—even the now boldest Anglo-American—will admit that the German-American is the most Americanized and therefore the most human of all neutral American citizens. They will praise us as much as fellow-citizens as we are now being condemned by a small minority."

Next Thursday is German Day at the Exposition. On one evening in the course of the convention there is to be a torchlight procession. It is expected that 50,000 German-Americans will take part in it.

COREY PREDICTS THREE YEARS OF WAR

Returning From France, He Urges America to Prepare, Though He Favors Peace.

William E. Corey, former President of the United States Steel Corporation, returned yesterday on the French liner Espagne, after being abroad four months at his château, twelve miles southeast of Paris. He said that Mrs. Corey had thrown open the château for the use of convalescent French officers, who were coming and going all the time.

"This war is one of chemistry and mechanics," said Mr. Corey, "and the Allies are preparing to continue it for three years longer, if necessary. It is problematical if they wish the United States to be at war with Germany. Rather, I would say, they would prefer our financial support. Although I early had militaristic leanings, I have come back a man of peace in this way: I have no use for the man who wants peace at any price, but I have less use for the so-called patriot who says war at any cost.

"Rather I should wish to see the United States so well prepared that no country could afford to wage war with her, but we are in no shape now, and it will take two years at least before we are a first-class power. At present we might fight Portugal or Liberia, but we could make no showing against a great military nation.

"Russia, it seems to me, from the latest reports, will have to reorganize her armies, and can hardly be in an aggressive stage until another Spring. Everywhere, however, Grand Duke Nicholas is acknowledged as the military genius and strategist of Europe. Russia needs much material, especially manufactured iron, and business is bound to be good in this country, with so much exported and all branches of business feeling the stimulus.

"President Wilson is considered one of the greatest rulers of the world by people abroad, and he certainly is one of the greatest Presidents we ever had, because he has kept the country out of war and controlled the Democratic Party, which no mortal ever did before.

"The watchword in this country must be prepare, prepare, and I can understand the German-Americans here who cannot see our point of view. Nor can they send munitions of war from here. Hence their condition of mind."

Several French soldiers from the Island of St. Pierre Michelon arrived on the Espagne on their way home after serving in the trenches, and will leave on Saturday for St. John's, Newfoundland, by the Red Cross steamer Florizel.

Captain Laurent of the Espagne said that he did not sight any submarines or war vessels of any kind on the voyage from Bordeaux.

KAISER'S LUSITANIA WARNING

Edward Legge Says the Emperor Knew Liner Was Doomed.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—The Daily News says that Edward Legge, whose books on the career of King Edward VII. created a sensation, has brought out in a volume entitled "The Public and Private Life of Kaiser Wilhelm II.," what the newspaper describes as "a remarkable piece of evidence as to the complicity of the Kaiser in the Lusitania crime."

"An American gentleman," he declares, "who had founded an organization for succoring our troops and those of our allies, was sending his son out to further his benevolent work, and having been long on intimate terms with the Emperor, he wrote to inform him that his son would be passing through Germany, and expressed the hope that the young man would not be interfered with. By return post came a letter from the Kaiser in his own peculiar handwriting imploring his friend not to allow his son to take passage to England on board the Lusitania. Herr Ballin and Count von Bernstorff may have suggested the omission of the crime, but we have here the Kaiser's own admission that he knew all about it and sanctioned it."

ITALY'S CHIEFS SEE BIG SUCCESS NEAR

FORT HENSEL NEAR ITS END

Surrender Will Menace Austrian Communications Between Carinthia and Trentono.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TURIN, Aug. 2, (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.)—For the first time since the beginning of the war, General Cadorna, in his latest communiqué, discloses a fairly full account of his tactical action, which proves how co-ordinated is the Italian plan of war over the whole front.

Whether the Tarvis group of fortifications will fall first or those of Tolmino and Gorizia, the result will be the same, namely, the Austrian line of defense of the eastern frontier from extreme Carnia right down to the Adriatic shore will suffer utter collapse.

Supposing Gorizia first succumbs, The Austrians will be obliged to wheel round to the east with their right wing under cover of the Tarvis forts, to make another stand, first on the River Idria and thereafter on the River Save. That would mean the abandonment of the land defense of the entire Istrian Peninsula, and reliance solely on the front between Fiume and Agram for stopping the Italian invasion of the Hungarian plain.

Supposing, instead, Tarvis proper should start knucking down. The Austrians would then perforce retreat to the Drave River in order to block the road to Vienna. Moreover, the Austrian armies now operating along the middle and lower Isonzo would thereby be compelled to fall back considerably so as to avert the grave danger of being surrounded.

By return post came a letter from the Kaiser in his own peculiar handwriting imploring his friend not to allow his son to take passage to England on board the Lusitania. Herr Ballin and Count von Bernstorff may have suggested the omission of the crime, but we have here the Kaiser's own admission that he knew all about it and sanctioned it."

Cadorna allows the fact to become known today that Fort Hensel, less than a mile outside Marlborghetto, is in its death agony. Thus before long we shall see the communications cut on the great Austrian highway between the Carinthian and Trentino provinces, and the Italian Jack Johnsons growling against Tarvis.

ITALIANS HAVE 17,000 CAPTIVES

They Allow Them Same Rations as Their Own Soldiers Get.

ROME, Aug. 1.—Prisoners taken by the Italian forces now number 17,000, including 380 officers, according to an announcement made by the Stefani News Agency.

Prisoners come from all parts of Austria-Hungary. While under the surveillance of Italian troops, they are under the direct command of their own superiors. Their rations are the same as those served to the Italian soldiers.

FERRERO ESTIMATES KAISER IN HISTORY

Historian Predicts Execration Through Centuries of William II. and His Chiefs.

MILAN, Aug. 2.—Guglielmo Ferrero, the Italian historian, examining in the Secola the first year of the war, says that it is "the greatest tragedy ever experienced by one generation." He attributes it to insensate pride helped by the weakness of Governments, by the powerlessness of parties, by the lightness of public opinion and by the fatuity of the intellectual classes.

"On the council of Generals, which, presided over by Emperor William, decreed at Potsdam a universal war on the evening of July 29," he says, "will rest implacable execration throughout the centuries and condemnation in history. Those who within an hour took the most inhuman decision recorded in history were able to do so because in the mind of the public the sense of proportion had been extinguished."

Sig. Ferrero thinks that after the catastrophe it will be impossible to reconstruct new order unless "our generation adopts virtues so far neglected: namely, those of humility, firmness, simplicity and a reasonable judgment of life and things."

"This is our duty," he concluded, "to the memory of the millions of men who have fallen in this terrible year while defending Europe and her liberty against German aggression."

ITALY BARS BOY SOLDIERS.

Grief and Indignation Follow Setting of 18 as Age Limit.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

UGANO, Aug. 2, (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.)—The Italian volunteer corps are in deep distress as a result of a recent Government order. The trouble arises from a new rule that no volunteer is to be accepted under the age of 18. All those who have been enrolled below this age are to be sent home.

When this order was made known and the youths of 16 and 17 serving in the ranks were told to give up their arms and uniform and return home the discipline of the volunteers underwent a severe trial. The sudden disappointment was too much for the feelings of the newly-made soldiers, and the sentiments expressed regarding the Minister were such that any court-martial would have judged them highly subversive of discipline.

When the time for parting came many of the boys broke down and wept.

CENSORSHIP A WEAKNESS

Officers, Failures as Soldiers, Put in Charge of the War News of a Democratic People.

By ROBERT R. McCORMICK.

LONDON, July 10.—To appreciate the nation of Great Britain at war it is necessary to summarize her recent history.

After obtaining supremacy at sea she proceeded to conquer all the territory of the world that was unable to protect itself. Contemporaneously with the development of steam and steel there was found in the islands the greatest deposits of coal and iron in Europe.

This brought about two conditions—an enormous increase in the national wealth and the transformation from an agricultural to a manufacturing country.

Land was held in England, as elsewhere in Europe, in a few large ownerships.

France, Prussia, and Russia at various times have divided the land among the inhabitants. This was too unconstitutional for England. She therefore repealed the corn laws, giving the people cheap food, rendering the cultivation of English land unprofitable, and rendering the nation dependent for food upon importation, and hence upon a continued control of the sea.

England has retained control of the sea, and as a nation has acquired the habit of mind of a successful middle-aged man. For years the Englishman's ideal has been not the acquisition of more wealth, but of more rest and more recreation.

This has been the desire of the workman as much as that of the business man and capitalist.

Vast wealth has come to England. The accident of ownership, as well as the laws of taxation and inheritance, has tended to great inequality in its distribution. Hence political activity for at least half a century has centered around the distribution of existing national wealth, not its increase. It has been more like America during the preceding decade.

Workmen listened to the preaching of a world-wide revolution against employers, not realizing that in the empire adjoining employers and workmen were co-operating to seize the advantageous trade position of England, and employers and employed alike take from the English the advantage that nature and the forefathers had given them.

It was upon a people thus preoccupied that the war burst in August, 1914.

Government Relied on Kitchener.

The Government did all that a democratic Government could do. It put its best-known General in charge of the war and gave him a free hand.

Lord Kitchener had conquered the Mahdi of Egypt and had done capable work in the conquest of South Africa. After Earl Roberts, he was the chief military figure of a nation given to worshipping the men who bring distinction to it.

He was hailed as possessing all the ability that Wellington had possessed and even as much as Englishmen had been taught to believe Wellington had possessed.

That Kitchener was a far-sighted man and a strong man was shown by his insistence upon an army of a million men and adequate training before taking the field, something England was unprepared to consider.

He came to power with all an English or American officer's unfamiliarity with his nation.

Besides these, denied all opportunity to work out a scheme of war adapted to the habits and interests of his people, he had swallowed whole the best ready-made plan—the Prussian.

Thus, when in the first panic of war England substantially turned the government of the country over to Kitchener and asked him to perform a miracle, one of his first acts was an attempt to direct the press, in emulation of the Prussian principle. In Prussia the press is a weak estate held in contempt and the governing hand is strong and able.

The English press is the chief element of national strength.

The English publicists, who have substantially dominated world public opinion for a century in the interest of the British Empire, were put under the governance of men who knew nothing of journalism and were considered too weak to work at their own profession—war.

Of course England lacked any comprehensive military system, lacked military knowledge and knowledge of military needs. Her immediate need was education, which, with a little intelligent help, the British press was eager to give.

Such knowledge the bungling censors, puffed up by sudden authority, venting at last pent-up resentment against Government and press, refused to give.

But before detailing this let us examine what were England's facilities for making an army and what she has accomplished.

Although the country had refused to follow the army's far-seeing advice and introduce universal service, it was far from ignoring all warning.

The Territorial System.

A system of "territorials" was introduced, composed of 18,000 cavalry and over 200,000 infantry, and which met in annual manoeuvres with the regulars every year.

As graduates of the Boer war were a number of semi-trained troops and semi-educated officers.

The colleges and public schools in recent years had conducted courses in which were taught the rudiments of military education.

This gave England a start which we, for instance, cannot equal. The disadvantage was that the amateur soldiers did not appreciate the short distance they had traveled on the road of soldiering.

The territorials volunteered very well and many battalions of them have been already sent to the front, where they have behaved gallantly.

It was, perhaps, the salvation of the country that a radical Government was in power when the war came. Extreme members of the Cabinet resigned; some were unwilling to attack their former colleagues; others who did were largely discredited. The Opposition became the leaders in support of the Government's war policy.

Old soldiers turned out to a man, sacrificing all personal interests.

The veterans of the African campaign almost all returned to the colors. The leisure class was delighted to find occupation, especially occupation in support of their country.

Volunteers flocked to the colors, and they did so without any idea that they were going to a picnic.

They went to work to learn to become soldiers. They realized from the casualty list of the regulars that this war was no African campaign. Enlistments were made, not for sixty days or six months, but for the whole war.

But to raise an army of 1,000,000 men and not disturb business—the first idea—is no easy thing. A number of expedients were tried. Posters were put up all over England calling for volunteers, while the Press Bureau was busy sending out stories—false ones—giving the impression that volunteers were not needed.

They encouraged regiments of particular classes to enlist together, they lessened the requirements in regard to age and physique, they used men of the extreme ages in the same battalions.

Kitchener said the army would be ready in May. In August, and again in October, the Russian Army sacrificed itself to reduce the pressure on the French-English-Belgian front. Now, in July, the Austrians and Germans are massing against the Russians and Kitchener's army is not ready to advance.

In March Sir John French attempted an advance, but was unsuccessful. In May the Germans attacked with gas and almost broke through. Only the extraordinary courage of the Canadians (of whom more in another article) prevented them.

To all soldiers the fact had become plain that as a military factor Great Britain was negligible.

The military in control of the press forbade telling the people the truth that the Germans knew well enough. Without educating the people it was impossible to make such a military organization as could count in this war. England was struck on a dead centre.

Northcliffe's Campaign.

At this time Lord Northcliffe, proprietor of The Times, The Daily Mail, and other papers, took a patriotic rôle.

"Friend of my heart, is it meet or wise to warn a King of his enemies?" wrote Kipling.

The people have been King of England for long, and so accustomed to flattery as to resent unpleasant truths.

Northcliffe began to print a part of the truth about the situation. He began to criticise the people in power—the men who were popularly supposed to be doing the impossible. People who were too patriotic to face facts, or who were afraid to do so, burned The Times publicly.

The bigoted Press Bureau promptly prosecuted Northcliffe upon a trumped-up charge, and an English Judge, following up the custom which makes an Englishman the only man in the world safe from official malice and popular outcry, dismissed the case.

Northcliffe continued his campaign, and not without animus.

The expedition to take the Dardanelles failed. The Lusitania was torpedoed.

Winston Churchill had ridden roughly in his career, and became the first sacrifice to the situation.

His career in the Admiralty since the outbreak of the war must be judged after the lapse of time. No one knows today whether it was good or bad.

But, as a man largely responsible for the maintenance of the power of the British Navy in the face of the opposition of many of those upon whom he depended for political life, he should have more charity than the British public gives him.

He has acted the part of patriot that Secretary Garrison is acting with us.

The dismissal of Winston Churchill, while it has soothed some irritated nerves and may, or may not, have improved the efficiency of the Navy Department, could not, and did not, change the military situation, which was that Great Britain, by far the richest and greatest manufacturing country in the war, was turning out less than one-tenth of the munitions turned out by any of the other contestants, and was unable decently to supply her army in the field, so far from providing for the new, great army in training.

The fault is partly due, no doubt, to the military authorities, who had had no opportunity of becoming acquainted with affairs on a large scale, and who, in the first glow of new found authority, were unwilling to associate with themselves competent business men.

It was due in a greater part to the workmen who insisted on limiting the output per man, as they had become accustomed to do during the many years of easy peace England's advantageous position had brought them. They were never told how serious was the situation of the nation; on the contrary, they were entirely deceived at the beginning of the war, and have been given only a small part of the truth to date.

Government Now Aroused.

The Government is now fully awake to the seriousness of the situation. The War Department officials have learned that they cannot do all the work themselves.

The plan is forming to make Great Britain a nation at war in the same sense that Germany, Austria, France, and Russia are at war; but with no governmental machinery to do this with and with a public mind unaccustomed to such discipline, the task is herculean.

Leading politicians have sounded warning in the most rousing speeches and in the same issue of the paper that these warnings have been produced the military Press Bureau and headline writers have discounted the speeches by representing some minor skirmish as a substantial victory and by announcing a substantial defeat as a strategic retirement.

The most forceful radical politician in Great Britain, Lloyd George, has taken upon himself the leadership in bringing the union workingmen under martial law.

Patriotically he put all the popularity he had acquired in leading the laborers against their employers, and all his subtlety as a political campaigner to the service of the nation.

Many of his former colleagues were unable to see the necessity of the measure he introduced; some were of a type of mind that could not see it if the Prussian Imperial Guard was goose-stepping in Trafalgar Square. They intrenched themselves upon the unstormed heights of union rules and awaited his attack.

Lloyd George, too skillful to be drawn against such a barrier, marched by the flank and blamed all England's ills on—drink!

He broke the tension, he confused the issue. Followed Babel, and from Babel such a law is being enacted as the Czar of Russia must have decreed. Everybody is busy blaming everybody else, but they are working to an agreement to place the blame on the army.

It will take a strong combination of tact and firmness to make the law work without causing discord; at present, at the moment of writing, a strike of the South Wales coal miners threatens the nation with defeat.

However, the nation is on the right track in handling the munitions question—that is, all of it excepting the Press Bureau.

The more serious problem which confronts the nation is the formation of an army large enough and at the same time efficient enough to meet the Germans in the open field.

Voluntary System Collapsed.

Where small armies suffice it is evident that voluntary armies are better than armies trained by universal service, because the more adventurous volunteer and those not up to the physical requirements may be rejected, but where a substantial proportion of the nation is needed for the war the voluntary system must collapse utterly, as it has in England.

In collecting a large volunteer army men must be tempted in every way. They must be allowed to form special regiments of different classes, so that while one regiment may contain 100 men fit to be officers another regiment may contain less than ten.

Men of ages varying from 20 to 40 may be in the same regiment and men from the strongest to the weakest in physique may be put in the same regiment, with a result that a group of such regiments is worth about half as much as an equal number of men grouped according to the Prussian system.

Eyewitnesses who were present at the reoccupation of Przemysl by the Germans speak of the fact that the active troops occupied the fortress, and that as soon as it was in their possession the landwehr, or older men, took their places and the young men were again put in the field to attack.

In occupying fortresses and lines of trenches middle-aged men are substantially as good as the youngest. Germany uses her middle-aged men for this kind of work, and the young men for active work.

Under the voluntary system, where old and young are mixed together, half the regiment of young men are immobilized in permanent fortifications, and regiments composed in half of oldish men are sent on long marches, with the result that half the regiment is left on the roadside. It must be plain that the latter form of organization can never defeat the former.

Let it be borne in mind that Great Britain had organized a voluntary army infinitely better than a voluntary army has ever been organized before, and has allowed less politics to interfere than had been thought possible. It has exceeded every standard of a voluntary army that has ever been imagined, and yet has demonstrated just one thing—that a large voluntary army cannot compete with universal service troops.

How can it, when a Major commanding 500 men has less military education than a Sergeant commanding thirty men; yes, and often less military education than a private commanding only himself?

Kitchener's army has, therefore, done one great thing—it has shown that the whole military system of Great Britain must be revolutionized, and after such a system has been revolutionized the last year's training will pay for itself in full measure in the new organization.

To send the present army to the Continent to fight against a better organized, better trained German force, is to slaughter so many thousands of men without any possible chance of victory.

At this point the reader who is willing to credit my statement must think to himself:

"Then England is in a very desperate position."

So she would be if it were not for her navy, which is as efficient in personnel as it is powerful in numbers. It has met every test, and, barring accidents, will continue to do so.

It is for Americans to bear in mind that we cannot expect to do better on land than Great Britain has done, and at sea, even if our naval authorities were free to conduct the fleet according to their best opinion, as they would not be, there are at least three naval powers that could wipe us off the seas.

KAISER'S WORDS APPLAUDED

Enthusiastic Reception of Proclamation on War's Anniversary.

BERLIN, Aug. 2, (by wireless to Sayville, N. Y.)—In a statement given out today the Overseas News Agency says:

"The entire German press has approved with enthusiasm the proclamation given out by Emperor William on the anniversary of the outbreak of the war and published yesterday. It unites in pointing out that every word in this statement breathes his accustomed high-minded seriousness.

"The conviction of Emperor William that the entire German nation is animated by a firm resolution to secure a lasting peace, thus opening the road for an unparalleled national development, is shared by all the people. Yesterday the people went to church and thanked the Almighty for the blessings of the past year and prayed for a speedy ending of the fearful struggle.

"Newspapers publish also exhaustive reviews of the army and navy happenings of the past twelve months, and point out particularly that the plan to starve an entire nation of 70,000,000 men, women, and children has been frustrated by the careful organization of all resources."

Mrs. Springer Silent on Italian Story

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—Mrs. Warren Springer of this city shed no light today on the story cabled from Paris yesterday that an American woman of Chicago, said to have given the name of Mrs. Warren Springs, attempted to use money to aid a peace propaganda among socialists in Italy. "I decline to be interviewed on this or any other subject," Mrs. Springer said.

BARNES DENOUNCES STATE PRIMARY LAW

Represses the Individual It Seeks to Liberate, He Tells Albany Convention.

ASSAILS OFFICIAL BALLOT

Urges Plan to Deprive Parties of Privileges—Ex-Judge Cullen's Substitute Proposal.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 2.—At the session of the Constitutional Convention tonight William Barnes criticised delegates who have introduced proposals which seek to restore the party convention for failing to move their measures for debate and final action. Ex-Senator Johnu G. Saxe of New York and Patrick J. Tierney, a Republican delegate from Clinton County, both have proposals pending before the convention which have been reported favorably by the Committee on Suffrage. Mr. Barnes, in his speech, intimated that their inactivity was due to the failure of the leaders of the convention to put the stamp of their approval on the plan to abolish direct primaries. Mr. Barnes said that the official ballot, not the political bosses, was responsible for the clamor for direct primaries which culminated in the enastment of the present primary law. Mr. Barnes favors making elections so extremely informal that any group of men can get a place on the official ballot for the name of a candidate of their selection.

"I believe that the State made its initial error," he said, "in legislation in relation to elections in establishing the official ballot which in a modified form we still have, which grants to groups of 10,000 voters a privilege which was denied the smaller groups.

"That legislation at first was deemed ver yacceptable because of the evils that were inherent in the small ballot that there were formerly used. Opposition to the official ballot as constituted by the act of 1895 did not manifest itself for some years thereafter, but along about 1906 or 1907 the agitation for direct nominations began. The arguments that were raised, principally in behalf of the idea of direct nominations, were that they would make it impossible for those who were called political bosses to control nominations, and the nominations, therefore, would be in what are called 'the hands of the people.'

"That demand clearly arose from the fact that the voters felt a restriction. Now that restriction which they laid at the door of the convention system should really have been laid at the door of the official ballot which granted a privilege upon the ballot to the nominations of political parties. If all political parties, or all political groups, which is a better expression, were upon an equal footing, then it would not interest the State at large in what manner these groups made their appeal to the electorate. It is a right of voters to group in behalf of such ideas or such processes as they desire to see placed in law or against those which they desire to see defeated, but by our present system we have so organized our political parties that instead of being vehicles of thought they have become mere aggregations from a copyright label upon the name, making it practically impossible for independent movements to gain expression in behalf of an idea.

"There is no method known to the present election law whereby any ideas may be incorporated into a political party. We have created by our methods an organization. We provided it no reason for existence except that it does exist.

Mr. Barnes has a proposal which would deprive political parties of all the privileges they have on the official ballot. It would prohibit the Legislature from passing any law regulating the election of party committee or the method of nominating candidates. The State could intervene in such matters if Mr. Barnes had his way, only when fraud had been committed.

"If the Legislature had kept out privilege on the official ballot," Mr. Barnes said in his speech, "then you would not have had the difficulties of the situation which you have today, and you would not have political parties formed into infleible mechanisms, where it is impossible for me to know, when I vote the Republican ticket, for what I am voting.

"The present primary law, which was designed, as many laws are, for liberty, has resulted in the repression of individual expression and made the individual voter more favorable to get an opportunity to express his mind than he was even under the old system of conventions with the privilege upon the ballot."

Ex-Justice Morgan J. O'Brien, Democrat, moved as a substitute for the Barnes proposal, one drafted by ex-Chief Judge Cullen, but not presented to the convention. This would prohibit the Legislature from interfering with "the right of electors or any one of them to meet and select candidates at any election for public office in such manner as they may deem proper."

Debate on the O'Brien substitute was postponed under the rule.

RED CROSS WITHDRAWING.

Arrangements to Curtail Activities in War Zone Explained.

The American Red Cross, through Mrs. William K. Draper, Secretary of its New York Chapter, announced last night that while the Red Cross would withdraw in October most of its units now on duty in the various belligerent countries of Europe, this did not mean that the activities of the American organization in Europe would end. On the contrary the Red Cross will continue to send supplies to the European Red Cross organization, and also will aid it by contributions of funds.

"The Governments have been notified long enough in advance," said Mrs. Draper, "to give them ample time to take over the hospitals. Much as the Red Cross regrets the necessity of withdrawing its units, the society realizes that the Red Cross of a neutral nation has never before rendered so long and extensive a service in the way of personnel to nations engaged in war."

It has been suggested that the probability of trouble with Mexico has been in part responsible for the Red Cross units leaving Europe. It can be stated on the highest authority that this report is without foundation.

KILLS THREE IN FRENZY AND SHOOTS HIMSELF

His Wife, Her Sister and Brother Jones's Victims—The "Other Woman" With Him.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—In a frenzy George H. Jones, 48, owner of a garage in Maywood, shot and killed his wife, his sister-in-law, and her brother tonight. Later he shot himself. He probably will die.

Those killed are: Mrs. Mary C. Jones, 46, the wife; Miss Catherine Cosgrove, 53, the sister-in-law, and John Cosgrove, 35, the brother-in-law.

The murders were committed at 1,855 West Taylod Street, where the Cosgroves lived. Mrs. Jones had been staying with them for several months, having separated from her husband because of "another woman." Miss Margaret Bitner, said to be the other, accompanied Jones in his automobile to the scene of the crime, and rode away with him after the murder. Miss Bitner cranked the machine, while Jones held a crowd at bay with his revolver. Jones then jumped into the automobile and drove madly to his garage. The police took him to the Oak Park Hospital, where surgeons probed for the bullet.

Miss Bitner was arrested at his home and locked up.

Shortly before 5:30 o'clock Jones drove West Ttylor Street and stopped his car a short distance from the Cosgrove home. He stepped out, leaving the woman in the car. He walked rapidly to the Cosgrove home. As he mounted the steps he saw his wife.

"I've got you this time," he shouted as he draw a revolver and leaped toward her. Mrs. Jones started to run into the house. Harry, her 17-year-old son, ran to her aid. He grappled with his father and tried to take away the revolver. The struggle ended by Jones pushing his son over the porch railing to the ground.

Jones then sprang at his wife and pursued her into the house. His sister-in-law and her brother confronted him.

"Get out of my way or I'll shoot you all," shouted Jones, waving his revolver. Then, leveling his revolver at his wife, he pulled the trigger. Mrs. Jones fell with a scream. The sister and brother tried to escape. Jones shot them down. Then he ran out of the house. To dismay the gathering crowd he discharged the revolver into the air twice. The crowd scattered.

Jones ran toward his waiting automobile. Charles agrath, a saloon keeper, rushed out with a loaded revolver in his hand. He fired five shots at Jones, but none took effect.

In the front seat of the automobile sat the girl.

"Crank her up," Jones shouted to her as he ran. Shaking his fist at the shouting saloonkeeper, he leaped into the seat and shot west in Taylor Street.

Jones's son Harry told the police that his father became infatuated with Miss Bitner a year ago. Mrs. Jones left her husband shortly afterward, taking her son with her. They have lived with the Cosgroves since that time. Miss Bitner is about 30 years old.

Government Appeals Trust Suit.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 2.—Judge Buffington in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals today allowed the Government to take an appeal to the Supreme Court in its anti-trust suit against the Keystone Watch Case Company.

The Federal District Court recently refused the Government's petition to dissolve the company, but found that it had been using alleged boycott methods against certain dealers. The alleged boycott practice was stopped by the tower court.

WOMAN IS CAUGHT IN TRAP ON TRESTLE

Escort Clung to Ties with His Hands, but Car Struck Paula Schwerter.

DIES IN THE HOSPITAL

Secretary of Transatlantic Import Company Was on Her Way to Visit Friends in Ridgewood, N. J.

Miss Paula Schwerter, Secretary of the Transatlantic Import Company of 105 Fifth Avenue, died in the General Hospital, Paterson, N. J., yesterday morning from injuries suffered by falling from a trestle of the North Jersey Traction Company at Glen Rock, near Ridgewood, last Saturday night. Miss Schwerter roomed at 128 West Eighty-second Street. She was the daughter of a wealthy woman, the widow of a manufacturer, who lives at Iserlon, near Berlin, in Germany.

In company with Peter Voss of this city, Miss Schwerter was on her way to visit friends. Trapped on the trestle, Mr. Voss hung over the side by his hands until the car passed. Whether Miss Schwerter jumped to escape or was knocked off is not known. She fell twenty feet to the tracks of the Erie Railroad below. County Physician Armstrong believes that the woman was struck by the car, judging from her many injuries.

"We were on our way to visit friends in Ridgewood and it was after 9 P. M. Saturday when we alighted from the northbound car about half a mile south of the trestle," said Voss in his statement to the Coroner. "We made a mistake in getting off the car and started to walk along the tracks. It was so dark that we really did not know we were on the trestle until Miss Schwerter's umbrella went down between the ties.

"Suddenly the headlight of a trolley could be seen coming toward us. I thought the trestle was not very high, so I crawled over the side and I thought I could touch the ground with my feet, expecting to help Miss Schwerter down after I landed. I was thus suspended as the car neared us, though the light did not show us to the motorman owing to the curve on the bridge at the west end.

"I yelled to Miss Schwerter to climb down to the side of the trestle, but all I remember is that she screamed as the car passed over me. I thought she leaped from the trestle, but the many injuries she received make me believe she was hurled off the structure by the trolley car."

The trolley crew helped to carry Miss Schwerter to the car and she was taken to Paterson. Much secrecy was maintained there, and it was said the injured woman was a private patient. Voss is employed in a downtown importing house, and is married and has a family. Miss Schwerter was a friend of Mr. Voss's family and they were going to spend the evening with mutual friends. Miss Schwerter was in the Berlin office of the Transatlantic Import Company and was brought here two years ago. Apparently no report of the accident was made to the police in New Jersey.

The trestle crosses the tracks of the Erie Short Cut. There is a sharp curve and descent at the western end, and the car was within twenty-five feet of the woman when the motorman first saw her.

WANT NEW PARTY IN JAPAN.

Independent Leaders' Plan—Ministerial Crisis Continues.

TOKIO, Aug. 2.—Developments in the Cabinet crisis indicate that if the movement to oust Minister of Foreign Affairs Kato succeeds it means that the Cabinet of Count Okuma will be dissolved, as Mr. Kato is the working head of the Ministry.

The political situation is viewed with concern by Japanese generally because of the serious problems now facing the Empire.

Viscount Kanetake Oura, Minister of the Interior, who shared with Foreign Minister Kato the leadership of the Rikken Doshi-Kai, or Constitutional Unionist Party, after resigning his portfolio has retired into obscurity.

Peers of all positions and independent leaders are trying to organize a new party to be headed by Baron Goto, ex-Minister of Communications and ex-President of the South Manchurian Railway.

The Opposition, which favors the return to power of a Cabinet under the leadership of ex-Premier Saionji, of the Sei-yu-Kai, or Conservative Party, continues to assail the Okuma Cabinet. Anti-Government newspapers now charge that the members of the Ministry were consulted regarding what the journals term Minister Oura's project to obtain votes for an increase in the army by bribery.

To Aid Jewish War Sufferers.

A call was sent out yesterday for a conference of representatives of Jewish societies, congregations, trades unions, lodges, and clubs for the purpose of starting a campaign for additional funds to aid Jewish war sufferers in Europe. The call was issued in the name of the newly formed People's Relief Committee, of which Congressman Mayer London is Chairman. The conference will be held next Sunday afternoon in the auditorium of the Educational Alliance, East Broadway and Jefferson Street. The call states that there are now 600,000 homeless Jews in the eastern war zone. Each organization has been asked to send two representatives to the conference.

NOTES ON FRYE CASE AND BLOCKADE HERE

tries ports, when ultimately destined for belligerent consumption, and the attitude of the British Government in cases involving American interests being tried in Prize Courts and involving shipments to such neutral ports. The caveat note the United States informed Great Britain that so far as interests of American citizens were concerned, this Government would insist upon their rights under the principles and rules of international law without limitation or impairment by orders-in-council or other municipal legislation. The United States also held that it would not recognize the validity of prize court proceedings taken under restraints imposed by municipal law in derogation of rights of American citizens under international law. In the British reply to this note it is asserted that the British Government has endeavored to conform its municipal legislation and prize court proceedings to recognized principles of international law.

In a nutshell the British position as outlined in the three notes is that the issue between the two Governments is not whether the principles upon which the British Government has acted are lawful, because the British Government maintains that it is following the recognized rules of international law for which the United States Government has been contending, but whether the new applications of the old principles of international law have in reality involved a departure from those principles. The British position is that differences between the two Governments over this point may be submitted to arbitration as a matter of course, after the close of the war.

Germany Stands Pat.

The new German note dealing with the demand for the indemnity and reparation for the sinking of the sailing ship William P. Frye was handed to Ambassador Gerard at Berlin on Friday and was cabled in sections, the first of which reached the State Department early this morning and the remainder late this afternoon.

The note will not be made public before Thursday morning. The cablegram from Ambassador Gerard transmitting the note was silent as to whether an arrangement had been made for simultaneous publication. For this reason Secretary Lansing cabled to the Ambassador suggesting that he ask whether the German Government would consent to its publication on Thursday morning.

State Department officials decline to disclose the contents of the new German note, but it is understood that Germany adheres to its previous contentions and does not yield to the request of the United States for the settlement of the claim by direct diplomatic negotiations. The United States has insisted that the destruction of the Frye was a direct violation of the Treaty of 1799 between the United States and Prussia. Germany challenged this contention, although admitting its liability for damages.

The German Government's attitude has been that the German prize court should decide whether the destruction of the ship and cargo was legal, whether the property sunk was liable to confiscation, and to whom and in what amount indemnity should be paid, and that since the decision of the prize court must first be awaited before any further position was taken the simplest way for the interested parties to settle their claims would be to enter them in accordance with the German code of prize proceedings.

The United States Government insisted that the real issue was what reparation must be made for a breach of treaty obligations and that it was not a question which fell within the jurisdiction of a prize court, but one which should be handled diplomatically. The United States, therefore, asked Germany to reconsider the matter in the light of these considerations.

The German note, it is understood, fails to meet this contention, and will call for a rejoinder. In this rejoinder it is probable that allusion will be made to the case of the American steamer Leelanaw, recently sunk with a cargo of flax, which was declared by the Germans, to be contraband. The owners of the Leelanaw, it is learned, have not presented any claim for damages. The Leelanaw case is regarded by the State Department as being similar to that of the Frye, and the owners of the Leelanaw are regarded as being entitled to damages. But until a claim has been made, no representations can be sent to Germany.

NEW GERMAN WARNING.

Wants Neutral Ships to Carry Bigger Color Markings.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Ambassador Gerard reported to the State Department today that he had received from the German Admiralty another warning with respect to the marking of neutral ships to protect them against submarine attacks. It is interpreted as an indication that Germany is desirous of making no mistakes when her submarines encounter neutral vessels which do not carry contraband or which are not engaged in hostile missions. But it is not regarded as any sign of Germany's yielding to the American contention that the rule of visit and search must be applied before merchant ships of belligerent nationality are torpedoed.

A paraphrase of Ambassador Gerard's message was made public by the State Department as follows:

The American Ambassador at Berlin has been notified by the German Admiralty that merchant vessels wishing to indicate their neutral nationality by painting their national colors on the ships' sides often commit the mistake of painting these signs too small, so that they cannot be recognized at some distance. The Foreign Office requests American steamship companies be accordingly informed.

The American Government has insisted on the observance of the rule of visit and search and takes the position that the possibility for making a mistake in dealing with neutral vessels rests upon the belligerent, and that since neutral vessels are entitled to the freedam of the seas, it is ot incumbent upon the nation whose flags they fly to warn them to carry unusual distinguishing marks other than the usual flag of registry. If ship owners, of their own volition, care to adopt special markings, or conform with the German request, the United States will interpose no objection, but it is not considered incumbent on this Government to direct ship owners to adopt particular markings.

If all neutral ships were officially ordered to adopt special markings, then by inference vessels which did not carry such markings ought to be regarded by German submarine commanders as enemy vessels. The mere fact that a vessel carries a special neutral marking does not necessarily imply that the vessel is neutral. A belligerent merchant vessel might adopt such a marking for purposes of disguise, and, as in cases of misuse of flags, could be seized upon by a submarine commander as affording excuse for making a mistake in attacking a neutral ship so marked. The position of the United States is that the only safe course is to observe the rule of visit and search in every case before attacking a merchant vessel.

GERMANY MAY NOT REPLY.

Waiting to See What America Will Say to England.

BERLIN, Aug. 2, (By Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The Overseas News Agency gave out the following today:

"Notwithstanding reports to the contrary, the German Government has not yet decided whether the American note regarding German submarine warfare will be answered. The Government awaits the text of the announced American note to Great Britain before deciding what further steps will be taken."

PAN-AMERICAN AID FOR MEXICO MOVE

not to be given consideration by the United States.

Circumstances may make it necessary for the United States to look to Villa and Zapata to give support to the Central Government which the United States desires to see established in Mexico in the near future. In that event the Villa and Carranza troops would be dependend on to keep the new Government in power. The proposal to select a member of the Madero Cabinet to become Provisional President of Mexico pending the establishment of a permanent Constitutional Government, points to the choice of Vasquez Tagle, who was Mister of Justice under Madero and was the only member of Madero's official family who did not resign his portfolio when Huerta and Felix Diaz forced the Maderistas from power. Under the Mexican Constitution, according to the argument advanced, Tagle is the legitimate successor of Madero.

Apparently convinced that the United States Government would soon undertake to put a programme of this character into effect, the Carranzistas tonight issued a statement obvfously intended to cast suspicion on the intention of this Government and make it unpopular in Mexico. In this statement it was declared that Villa, Angeles, his chief General; Governor Maytorena of Sonora, Eduardo Iturbide, who has made a favorable impression on officials of the United States Government, and General Victoriano Huerto himself, had entered into an arrangement "which consists in asking humbly the support of the American Government in behalf of Vasquez Tagle as Provisional President of Mexico, in order afterward to place as permanent President Mr. Iturbide and perhaps Angeles as Vice President."

It is evident that the main purpose of this statement is to discredit the plan of the United States by indicating that Huerta is a party to it, and that it was conceived by Villa and some of his advisors.

The American plan, however, was invented in Washington, and while its details are not known, there is reason to believe that the Carrancistas are not far from the truth in their references to the selection of Tagle as Provisional President under an arrangement that he will appoint as his successor some person of character satisfactory to the leaders who will support the program of the United States.

Placing Tagle in authority as Provisional President of Mexico would comply, it is claimed, with the requirements of the Mexican constitution upon which President Wilson has insisted from the outset of his handling of the Mexican situation. After appointing his Cabinet, Tagle could resign and be succeeded by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. While the American plan may be modified in some respects, it is believed here that the proposal to be submitted to the Latin-American diplomats at Thursday's conference in the State Department will embrace the selection by Mexican leaders of a prominent Mexican citizen for appointment as the head of the proposed Cabinet who will succeeded to the Presidency upon the retirement of Tagle or some other member of the Madero Cabinet.

Iturbide May be the Man.

Since r s escape from Mexico last Winter, Eduardo Iturbide has spent much of his time in Washington. He has met a number of prominent officers of the Administration, including some members of the Cabinet, and has created a verey favorable impression. He was reported to have departed recently departed from New York for the Mexican border. There is a strong personal disposition on the part of officials who have discussed the situation with him to favor Iturbide's selection as the head of the Mexican Government. It seems to be assumed that his name will figure prominently in the consideration to be given to choosing a President of Mexico who will succeed the President, whose Government the United States desires to establish with the least possible delay.

In giving consideration to the Mexican problem, this Government is confronted by the immediate necessity of saving the population of Mexico City from starvation, and it is conceded that it must be done. How far it would be willing to go to keep open the railroad line between Vera Cruz and Mexico City should the Carranza, Villa, and Zapata factions fail to heed the emphatic representations sent by Secretary Lansing this week, is something that could not be ascertained from officials tonight.

According to belief here, the only alternative of the United States in the event that railroad trains are not permitted o carry supplies from Vera Cruz to Mexico City, would be to send an armed force into Mexico for the purpose of maintaining communication between the coast and the capital. Such action, it is held, would not be war, and it is pointed out in this connection that the United States has frequently undertaken similar expeditions with the object of relieving and protecting Americans and other foreign citizens whose lives and properties were endangered. The landing of American bluejackets and marines in Haiti last week is mentioned as evidence of the right of this Government to send armed forces into perturbed foreign territory without undertaking to engage in war.

Starvation in Capital.

The Government is being spurred to action by frequent reports of the terrible situation of those in Mexico City. Its anxiety was increased and its desire to take positive action soon was strengthened by a message to the Red Cross from Charles J. O'Connor, the relief agent of that organization in the Mexican capital. Mr. O'Connor's dispatch, sent from Mexico City and cabled from Vera Cruz under date of July 31, was, in part, as follows:

Conditions desperate. Getting worse daily. Some food, but price already prohibitive and doubled since my arrival. Practically no grain for sale. Authentic cases of death and extreme starvation. Some people eating weeds, grass, leaves, dead horses, and mules. Yield of planted crops in grain States will be small on account of late rains and general disorder.

The appeal made by Mr. O'Connor is also signed by Señor Cardoso, the Brazilian Minister in Mexico City, who is representing the United States diplomatically. In connection with the information they sent, the Red Cross announced tonight that while it was striving to arrange for the transportation of American-bought food supplies to the stricken capital, it would hesitate to try to carry any quantity of foodstuffs over the railroad from Vera Cruz. Mr. O'Connor sent word that Americans in Mexico City are in need of food and have deposited $6,000 with a banking company there and wished the Red Cross to draw against this amount for the purchase of supplies.

Carranzista representatives in Washington are pushing a vigorous propoganda to create sentiment in favor of the recognition of the Carranza Government. Carranza is promising to "clean up" the Mexico City situation, to send food supplies there, and move his entire Government to the capital this month. Assurances of this sort have been given frequently in the past without being fulfilled.

Special Agent Silliman of the State Department telegraphs from Vera Cruz that a severe battle occurred Friday afternoon at a point east of Guadelupe, which is near Mexico City, and that telegraphic communication with the Capital was expected to be established. Communication with Tula, via Pachuca, had been established and was being pushed northward.

That Carranza is still opposed to relinquishing his effort to be President of Mexico was indicated by a statement from him given out by his agency here tonight. Carranza enumerated the portions of Mexico which were claimed to be in the possession of the Carranza forces, and it was asserted that this data showed that the Carrancistas controlled the greater part of Mexico. The Carranza Government, it was declared, "has completely overpowered the reaction, and the only thing it expects is that its course may not be interrupted, so that it may accomplish a definite work of peace and reconstruction of the Republic, which it is so anxious to realize."

CAPERTON MOVES FOR PEACE IN HAITI

Admiral Sends an American and Native Commission to Confer with Rebels.

MOB ATTACKS A MISSION

Breaks Into Wesleyan Institution at Port au Prince—Poor Suffering Because of Dear Food.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Acting vigorously on his instructions from Washington to restore order in Haiti, Rear Admiral Caperton has sent a special commission from Port au Prince to Cape Haitien, 169 miles distant, to bring about the disbanding of the revolutionary forces in the northern part of the republic. This commission will request General Bobo, leader of the revolutionary forces, and General Blot, leader of the forces of the defunct Guillaume Government, to return to Port au Prince with the members of the commission in order to join in conferences to promote order in Haiti.

Admiral Caperton notified Secretary Daniels today that such action has been taken. An earlier dispatch from the Admiral to the Navy Department today showed that the American force of marines and bluejackets is proceeding vigorously with the work of disarming the natives, but while the Haitien soldiers are turning in arms to the naval authorities, many arms are being secretly retained.

There can be read between the lines of the messages received from Admiral Caperton full confirmation of statements made in special dispatches from Washington to THE NEW YORK TIMES last week, which stated that the American expeditionary force in Haiti will remain ashore there until order has been fully restored, until an orderly Government has been established, and in all probability until guarantees are given for the future.

The last of the series of dispatches from Admiral Caperton to the Navy Department this afternoon read:

Sending on the Jason to Cape Haitien commission composed of the following: Lieutenant Reuben Burton Coffey, U. S. N.; ex-President Legitie, Archbishop Conan of Port au Prince, General Polynice, ex-Minister Charles Zamora, Colonel Chevalier. My instructions to commission are to require the army in the north to disarm and disband, soldiers to return to their homes, Leaders Blot and Bobo to return to Port au Prince with the commission and join conferences to promote order in Haiti.

Since the uprising in Port au Prince last week, which resulted in the deaths of ex-President Zamor and President Guillaume, there has been desultory firing around Cape Haitien between the Blot and Bobo factions. The Navy Department today received from the commander of the American gunboat Nashville at Cape Haitien a report stating that there had been rifle firing outside of that city. The Nashville and the Eagle, on duty at Cape Haitien, will protect American and foreign interests there and land such marines as are necessary to afford protection. Admiral Caperton is endeavoring to bring about an agreement between the contending leaders and factions for a solution of the problem, and has given assurances to the members of the Haitian Congress that they will receive full protection from the American forces landed at Port au Prince. These assurances have been given with the idea of enabling the Haitian leaders to act with freedom from fear of danger from the Bobo Revolutionary Committee.

Wesleyan Mission Attacked.

Admiral Caperton notified the Navy Department today that the Wesleyan Mission at Port au Prince was attacked by a mob on Saturday night, but that the situation was now quiet and he was in control of affairs. A separate message dealing with this attack said:

All quiet during the night except at the Wesleyan Mission, where a mob of about twelve men broke in.

The Navy Department this morning issued this summary of another message from Admiral Caperton:

The commander of the cruiser squadron, Rear Admiral Caperton, reports from Port au Prince that the city is being controlled without any difficulty. While apparently everything is quiet and the Haitian soldiers are said to be disarming and turning in their arms to the naval authorities, it is believed that many arms are being retained secretly.

The Haitian soldiers apparently retain their organization, although without arms. Daily inspections are made for arms, and whenever any are found the arms are taken and placed in charge of the United States forces.

The assembly of citizens in any number during the night has been forbidden. During Saturday night the Wesleyan Mission was mobbed. One of the men who had murdered a prisoner in jail was secreted in this mission.

The prices of provisions have greatly increased, and the poorer classes are without food and many are suffering greatly.

A fourth message from Admiral Caperton was summarized by the Navy Department late this afternoon as follows:

Admiral Caperton reports all quiet at Port au Prince during the night of Aug. 1. A legation guard was landed from the French cruiser Descartes at 7 A. M. today. The French Minister conveyed to Rear Admiral Caperton the thanks of his Government for the protection afforded the French Legation by the American landing forces.

The landing of these marines was at the earnest solicitation of the French Minister and was with the consent of the United States Government. These marines will, to some extent, lighten the burden on the 500 marines and bluejackets that Admiral Caperton has on shore, and which have a wide stretch of territory to patrol to defend the city against attack. The battleship Connecticut took on board 125 marines from the Norfolk Navy Yard today, and is now en route to Port au Prince under forced draft to reinforce the landing party on shore.

Will Command Shore Forces.

Upon the arrival of the reinforcements at Port au Prince, Colonel Eli K. Cole of the Marine Corps, in command of the marine regiment on the Connecticut, will take command of the American expeditionary force on shore, succeeding Commander Edward L. Beach of the armored cruiser Washington, now in command of the force of 500 marines and bluejackets. Colonel Cole will be the senior officer on shore under Rear Admiral Caperton.

It was admitted in official circles today that very wide latitude had been given to Admiral Caperton in the orders he had received from the Navy Department. His orders directed him to land and to do everything necessary to restore law and order and bring about the free choice of a new President unhampered by revolutionary leaders or influences. The details of the action to be taken to accomplish this end have been left to the discretion of Admiral Caperton. It was learned that his action in sending a commission northward from Port au Prince to Cape Haitien was taken on his own initiative and not on orders from Washington. The general instructions to him were broad enough to warrant such action, and it has been approved by the Washington Government.

Admiral Caperton is believed to have displayed tact in sending a commission of native Haitians to deal with the rival forces at Cape Haitien, but the commission is accompanied and headed by Lieutenant Coffey, who is a member of the staff of the Admiral, and who has confidential instructions. It is the hope of the Admiral that the Blot and Bobo forces in the north will comply with the demand that they cease fighting, disarm, and disband, and that the respective leaders will accompany the commission to Port au Prince to participate in the conferences to be held with a view to restoring order.

A Political Deadlock.

PORT AU PRINCE, Aug. 2.—The violent revolutionary activities of last week have been followed by a political deadlock in the efforts of the Haitian Congress to elect a President in succession to Guillaume, who was shot to death by a mob last week.

A majority of the National Assembly desires to elect to the Presidency M. Dartiguenave, but these members are in sharp conflict with the revolutionary committee, which desires the election of Dr. Rosalvo Bobo, leader of the successful revolution.

In spite of the assurances given by the American naval commander that Congress will enjoy the protection of the American forces present in order to deliberate with freedom, the Senators and Deputies have decided not to elect a President at the present time. They are forced to this course by fear of attack from the partisans of Dr. Bobo.

A delegation of four Congressmen, including the Archbishop of Port au Prince, left here yesterday on the American naval auxiliary Celtic for Cape Haitien in an endeavor to bring about conciliation between the various political factions.

The American marines on shore continue to disarm Haitian civilians.

The detachment of marines who came ashore last night from the French cruiser Descartes is now in occupation of the French Legation.

QUICKSAND ENGULFS GREAT POWER HOUSE

Cement Plant Near Hudson Suddenly Drops Into Deep Hole—Five Workmen Killed.

Special to The New York Times.

CATSKILL, N. Y., Aug. 2.—Carrying with it almost three acres of hard clay, the immense power plant of the Knickerbocker Cement Company, near Hudson, was almost swallowed in what is supposed to be a bed of quicksand early this morning, sending five men to death and injuring several others.

Just before 6 o'clock, at which hour the laboring shift is changed, the workmen felt a rumbling under their feet, followed by a cloud of dust. Almost instantly the immense plant disappeared from sight, carrying with it 40,000 tons of trap-rock stored for Winter use, the weight of which undoubtedly served to cause the disaster.

Thirty men employed on the night shift were in the plant at the time, and all were carried down. The uninjured extricated themselves from the ruins and, with the day crew coming to work, formed a rescue party that at once started to search for the missing. In the ruins were found the bodies of Paul Gage, 34; James Crowe, (colored,) 41, and John Suta, 27. John Harrington, 47, a foreman, and Lee Chambers, 27, were found mortally injured; they died in the Hudson Hospital this afternoon.

The plant, built four years ago at a cost of $250,000, was situated on an almost level piece of land a mile from Hudson; it employed nearly 600 men. Many of the workmen had complained that the plant was settling, but their fears were laughed at. Tonight the plant, one of the largest of the kind in New York State, built of brick, steel and reinforced concrete, lies in a hole forty feet deep, the huge power house crumbled to dust and the heavy steel twisted into grotesque shapes.

The buildings which vanished consisted of a large power house, an 80-foot concrete smokestack, an elevator conveyor with another smokestack, a concrete storehouse, and a large frame barn which held three horses and an automobile, all of which were buried.

SANITY TEST FOR MINISTER.

Defendant, Who Sought Alms, Says He is the Rev. Stephen Budden.

A man who said he was the Rev. Stephen Budden, 46 years old, of 115 East 128th Street, was committed to Bellevue Hospital for ten days for observation yesterday by Magistrate Cobb in the Essex Market Court. He wore clerical clothes when he was arrested Friday by Detective Sullivan of the First Branch on a charge of soliciting alms.

Arraigned that afternoon before Magistrate Cobb, he said he was a regularly ordained Episcopal minister of Oakland, Cal. He carried a small safe which bore the inscription, "All Souls' Chapel, Richmond Hill. For the Relief of the Poor and Destitute." After he had said he had been soliciting funds with which to establish a mission here for five years, and had showed papers signed by himself, authorizing him to collect moneys, Magistrate Cobb held him in $1,000 bail for examination Saturday, telling him to communicate with his wife, who, Budden said, had his ordination papers.

The defendant on Saturday said his wife had gone to Jefferson Market Court. The hearing was set down for yesterday afternoon. When the case was called the wife did not appear. Detective Sullivan testified that Budden had acted in a peculiar manner in the prison and on the street.

REBUKES HEATED LAWYERS.

Justice Weeks Annoyed When They Yawn and Remove Coats.

Justice Weeks became much annoyed yesterday in Special Term, Part I. of the Supreme Court, where all litigated motions are argued, when certain lawyers removed their coats and yawned during the arguments in the heated courtroom. One portly lawyer yawned and stretched to such an extent that he forced two buttons from the front of his shirt, whereupon the Justice pounded on his desk with the gavel and exclaimed:

"If counsel are so fatigued that they find it necessary to stretch themselves, they had better go outside. Undignified behavior of counsel will not be tolerated."

The learned legal brethren immediately put on their coats, sat upright, and were much interested thereafter in the law points elucidated.

HOLDS R. S. BARCLAY ATTEMPTED FRAUD

Court Decision Says Soap Manufacturer Aimed to Victimize His Sister-in-Law.

RECEIVER TO BE APPOINTED

Justice Page Directs That Plaintiff Shall Receive 33 1-3 Per Cent. of Barclay Company Profits.

In deciding in favor of Mrs. Clara S. Barclay in her suit against her brother-in-law, Reginald G. Barclay, in which she asked that she be assured her annual income of more than $100,000 from the business of Barclay & Co., soap and perfume manufacturers, of which her late husband, William O. Barclay, was a founder and one of the chief owners, Justice Alfred R. Page of the Supreme Court, Special Term, Part III., said Reginald G. Barclay had devised a clumsy scheme to "enable him to defraud the widow and children of his deceased brother."

William O. Barclay died late in 1900, leaving his wife and brother, Reginald, as executors and trustees of his estate, his widow being the only one to qualify. By an agreement made between the brothers in August, 1900, their shares in Barclay & Co., each amounting to a third, were properly defined. In his will William O. Barclay said:

"I authorize and empower my trustees and their survivors to retain as a trust investment my interest in the business, good will and firm name of Barclay & Co., and in all trade marks, &c., and to lease or sell the same with the concurrence of my said wife."

The Justice sets forth further that Reginald G. Barclay incorporated Barclay & Co. in Delaware in April, 1913, with a capitalization of $3,000,000, divided into $1,000,000 8 per cent. cumulative preferred and $2,000,000 common stock. During May, 1914, Barclay conveyed his rights in the old Barclay & Co. to the new Delaware corporation, and later it was discovered that the new company owned all the business and assets of the old.

Further, it was discovered that aBrclay owned 5,000 shares of the preferred stock and 19,985 of the common of the new Barclay & Co. Mrs. Barclay, in her petition filed in Justice Page's court on April 8, 1915, stated that from 1908 until 1913, inclusive, she received $468,048 as income from her one-third share in the company, the largest amount, $111,983, being received in 1913, when Alexander Barrie left the company.

"It is evident," the Justice says, "that the sole purpose of the incorporation was to enable, through legal formality, Reginald G. aBrclap to escape Haitien in an endeavor to bring about conciliation between the various political factions.

The American marines on shore continue to disarm Haitian civilians.

The detachment of marines who came ashore last night from the French cruiser Descartes is now in occupation of the French Legation.

SUMMONS TO GOETHALS.

Will Confer in Washington Over Troops in Canal Zone.

PANAMA, Aug. 2.—Just as he was leaving here today on the steamer Pastores for New York Major Gen. George W. Goethals, Governor of the Panama Canal Zone, received instructions to appear in Washington immediately instead of beginning his vacation.

General Goethals said that he had been informed indirectly that his presence was desired in order that he might confer with the Washington authorities regarding army reorganization, particularly with reference to the strength, disposition, and housing of the troops in the Canal Zone. He said he had several plans in view, which he would submit to Secretary Garrison. These he declined to outline. It is understood that his views differ somewhat from those of Brig. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards, commander of the Canal Zone forces, which were forwarded to the Secretary of War several weeks ago.

After proceeding to Washington General Goethals, who is accompanied by his wife and son, Thomas, will make a tour of the West, visiting the California expositions. He will then return to the Canal Zone at the end of September. Meanwhile he will tender his resignation as Governor to President Wilson and will make application to be placed on the retired list of the army.

W. H. BLATCH KILLED BY LOOSE LIVE WIRE

Suffrage Leader's Husband Steps on Broken End in Channing Pollock's Yard.

PLAYWRIGHT FINDS BODY

Sustains Severe Shock in Attempting to Pull It Away from the Current.

William H. Blatch, husband of Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch, the suffrage leader, was killed yesterday morning by coming in contact with the current of a broken electric light wire which had fallen across the walk at the entrance to the lawn at the home of Channing Pollock, the playwright, on the Sound, at Shoreham, L. I. It is supposed that Mr. Blatch saw a broken wire and sought to remove it not knowing that it was charged. The end of the wire, carrying 110 volts of an alternating current, killed him instantly.

Mr. Blatch called at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Pollock at 7:30 o'clock to return a book he had borrowed. As the playwright and his wife were not up, he left the volume with a maid and started back along the path toward the road. The maid saw a spurt of flame at the gate, and when Blatch staggered and fell she called Pollock.

There was a little pillar of smoke and sputtering flame visible as Pollock ran toward the place where Blatch had fallen, with one hand tightly clutching the wire. The only piece of wood near at hand was the signboard of the Pollock home, "The Parsonage," fixed to a stake beside the gate, which the playwright pulled up and reached for the wire with one end, whereupon he received a shock of electricity which knocked him down. The sign was covered with moisture. He then got a garden rake and succeeded in pulling the wire away from the body.

Dr. James M. Winfield of 47 Halsey Street, Brooklyn, who has a Summer home at Shoreham, was sent for. He said Blatch had died instantly from the shock of the current, which under ordinary circumstances might not have proved fatal, but the wet ground made the contact more severe. Coroner Gibson of Huntington gave permission for the removal of the body to the home of Mr. Blatch.

"We believe the wire must have dropped from the pole after Mr. Blatch came here," said Mrs. Pollock yesterday, during the absence of her husband. "I am sure from what Mr. Pollock told me after the accident that he would have fallen a victim to that wire had he got out as early as he intended to meet Mr. and Mrs. Flo Ziegfeld at Port Jefferson. The wire was that of the Port Jefferson Electric Light Company."

Mrs. Nora Stanton De Forest, daughter of Mr. Blatch, who with her daughter had spent the week-end at her father's home, had started for the city. Mr. Blatch had gone to the Pollock home after seeing his daughter off at the station. Mrs. De Forest was notified of the accident when she alighted from the train at her home and returned to Shoreham. Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch, who was at Syracuse on Saturday and had an engagement to lecture last night at Utica, was reached by telegraph while on a train yesterday afternoon and notified.

William H. Blatch, 63 years old, was the head of the May Brewing Company in England, from which he retired twenty years ago and had since resided here. His wife is an American. Because her husband had not become a citizen of this country Mrs. Blatch's efforts to establish her rights to citizenship were denied on the ground that her marriage made her a British subject. She is the President of the Women's Political Union. Mr. Blatch owned a large country home at Shoreham, where he had developed one of the largest and finest hanging gardens on Long Island.

25 YEARS FOR BANK BANDIT.

Harry Starr, Chief of Oklahoma Band, Pleads Guilty.

CHANDLER, Okla., Aug. 2.—Harry Starr pleaded guilty to bank robbery today in the District Court, and was sentenced to twenty-five years in the penitentiary. A jury was being impanelled today for the trial of Claude Sawyer, one of Starr's alleged accomplices.

Starr was charged with the robbery of two banks in Stroud, Okla., last March, in which $5,000 was stolen. After the robbery Starr was wounded and with four of his companions was captured.

Many daring robberies were charged to what was known as the Starr gang of bandits, which was led by Harry Starr.

IN ROADLESS GREENWICH.

Detours That Are Tours and Other Freak Conditions Found.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., Aug. 2.—When the New York people who pay a large share of the taxes that go to keep up this corner of Connecticut got their last bills from the Collector they found they were down for heavy increases. Realizing that this was an expensive neighborhood to live in, some paid cheerfully. Others, when they learned that a considerable portion of the increase was to be devoted to the improvement of roads in the township, paid philosophically.

But to find a philosopher in these regions now is difficult. And if you seek to talk on the subject of roads you will find no cheerful person. Practically speaking, there are no roads. They have been made away with. A casual glance at them would lead the visitor to conclude that somebody had come along and torn them up by the roots and taken them away. After a fashion, that is what happened.

Sections of the Boston Post Road are still intact, but you may have difficulty in finding them. If you get off that once beaten path you never know where you will end up. True, the highways are marked here and there with the sign "Detour," indicating that a little way ahead is another sign reading "Road Closed," but you never know exactly where you will be when you have again located yourself. Sometimes the "detour" would be more properly spelled without a prefix.

Perhaps the most disgusted citizens hereabouts are those who last Spring purchased new cars. They early met the "Road Closed" signs. Then teams began to leave mounds of sand and broken stone and great bundles of wire concrete "tier" here and there along the highways until in some spots there was not room for a livery "rig" to pass. As it was then so it is now, and so it appears likely to continue indefinitely.

APPEAL FOR A FAMILY.

Wife and Children of a Prisoner Need Assistance.

Convicted on the charge of burglary, L. is serving a prison sentence. His punishment is deserved, but his wife and children, who have done no wrong, must suffer too. Their physical needs will be met, however, if contributions for the purpose are sent to the Charity Organization Society.

The mother went to the society in the Spring, just before the baby's birth, and they have helped her ever since, for she has four small children, the eldest only 7, and has no income from any source. The society has secured for her the interest of a religious organization, which pays half her rent and supplies clothing, leaving the balance of the rent, a weekly allowance for food, and a daily supply of milk to be provided from the funds for which the society asks. A trained dietitian under the direction of the society has helped Mrs. L. plan her budget and is assisting her to buy her food wisely.

L. may be discharged at the end of the year, but to meet the physical needs of his family until that time $150 is necessary. Gifts, payable to the Charity Organization Society, should be addressed to its office at 105 East Twenty-second Street and will be acknowledged.

The society acknowledges with thanks the following gifts in response to previous appeals in THE TIMES for other families: "Mrs. F. E. S.," $1; Mrs. Marie Celeste Eastwick, $10; Mrs. G. P. Slade, $25; Anonymous, $5; Cash, $5; Mrs. Payson Merrill, $5; Mrs. Thomas H. Messenger, $5; Mrs. Alice Fenn Coffin, $1; Anonymous, $10; Cash, $1.

U. S. METAL PRODUCTS SALE

Company's Forty-seven Parcels of Assets Bring $216,000.

The property and assets of the United States Metal Products Company of 111 Broadway and College Point were sold at auction yesterday at 32 Liberty Street under the direction of John J. Townsend, referee in bankruptcy. There were forty-seven parcels in the sale, and the total amount realized was $216,027. The creditors' committee bid $204,000 for most of the parcels, and the excepted parcels went to outsiders for $12,027.

Among the parcels sold were the right, title, and interest in the real estate and buildings at College Point, $40,000; patents, trademarks, and welding contract, 10,000; recorders and auto trucks, $2,600, and office equipment, $2,000. A petition in bankruptcy was filed against the company on Nov. 30, 1914, and liabilities were $1,008,550.

Long Term for Black Hander.

A sentence of from ten to twenty years in Sing Sing was imposed by Judge Nieman in the County Court, Brooklyn, yesterday, on Francesco Giarraputo, reputed Black Hand leader, who was convicted of having placed a lighted bomb in the drug store of Joseph Ingoglia at 1,081 Flushing Avenue, on April 6. The druggist identified the prisoner as the man who had demanded $4,000 from him after several threatening letters had been sent to him. Andrea Graffeo, convicted as an accomplice of Giarraputo in the same crime, received a similar sentence from Judge Dike last week.

Mail Auto Speeder Fined.

Charged with speeding a United States mail auto truck on the Manhattan Bridge at forty miles an hour, Frank Marcocci of 131 Sullivan Street was fined $50 yesterday by Magistrate Cobb in the Essex Market Court.

LYNN GETS ISLANDS UNDER TORRENS ACT

Appellate Division Upholds His Title to Three Properties in Jamaica Bay.

ENDS 22 YEARS' LITIGATION

Justice's Victory Sets a Precedent in Appeal Involving Realty Registration Law.

Justice Wauhope Lynn of the Municipal Court, after twenty-two years of litigation, has had his ownership of three islands in Jamaica Bay upheld. He purchased them from the State of New York in 1893. The islands are known as Old Squaw Marsh, Big Fishkill Marsh, and Sails Point Hassock. A unanimous opinion in favor of Justice Lynn has been rendered by the Appellate Division, and it confirms the right to have the titles in the islands registered under the Torrens Land Title Registration act.

The ownership of the islands and the registration of their titles in favor of Justice Lynn were opposed by Ludwig Klee, a fisherman of Jamaca Bay, and other fishermen and oystermen who had been squatters on the islands for many years and who claimed ownership by adverse possession. In addition, Ezra D. Bushnell and Edward F. Linton claimed title through an early grant from the Town of Flatlands, and the City of New York also claimed ownership on the ground that the islands were land under water and that the State of New York, therefore, had no power to sell them.

A year ago Justice Scudder of the Supreme Court gave a decision in favor of Justice Lynn. An appeal was taken by the City of New York and Edward F. Linton, and in its recent opinion the Appellate Division upholds the decision of the lower court. The decision virtually disposes of a long-disputed question regarding the ownership of lands under water in Jamaica Bay. In the trial it was necessary to go back to the Colonial grants of Governor Dongan, who gave New York City the so-called Dongan charter, and it was proved that in 1685 he granted to Captain John Palmer all of the sandy peninsula known as Rockaway Beach, extending from low-water mark in Jamaica Bay to low-water mark in the Atlantic Ocean. The technicalities involved in the early land grants make a record on the appeal of the case of 329 printed pages, besides maps, surveys, photographs, and copies from the original records of the Town of Flatlands.

Gilbert Ray Hawes, who was instrumental in causing the passage by the Legislature several years ago of the Torrens Land Title Registration act, by which real estate titles may be registered in the State, said yesterday that this was the first instance in a contested Torrens act case wherein the judgment had been affirmed on appeal. It would dispose, he said, of many technicalities which had been advanced against the registration of titles under that method.

The Torrens act, which is now recognized by Congress in eleven States, provides for a simple system of registry of land titles whereby, when the proof of ownership has been established after examination by the Register and title lawyers under his supervision, this one examination suffices for all time, and future transfers of property are made directly on the original Torrens registration.

6 MORE HEAT DEATHS; RELIEF IS PREDICTED

Humidity at 91 Causes Great Distress — 25 Are Prostrated.

WOMAN DIES IN STREET

Man Seeking Air on Fire Escape Mortally Hurt in Fall to Pavement—Crowds at Beaches.

The indications last night were that the backbone of the heat wave was broken and that within the next twenty-four hours the city would obtain relief from the intolerable conditions of the past four days, which have caused a score of deaths and many prostrations.

Six more deaths were reported yesterday in Brooklyn, one in White Plains, and one in Elizabeth, N. J., as a direct result of the heat. The prostrations were even more numerous than on Sunday. The maximum temperature was 84 degrees at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, but while that was not considered unusual, the humidity remained high. At 8 o'clock in the morning it registered 91 per cent., and while it dropped to 60 per cent. at 4 o'clock it was back to 83 per cent. at 8 o'clock in the evening. This condition added greatly to the suffering caused by the heat.

The weather forecast for today reads "not so warm," and predicts occasional showers.

Here are the lists of deaths and prostrations reported to the police:

He was drowned. Those overcome by the heat in Elizabeth were Miss Rnnie Color, 39, of 120 Summer Street, Newark; Patrick Bradley of Arlington and Joseph Marone of Stapleton, S. I.; Miss Color was taken to the General Hospital in a critical condition. The others were removed to the Alexian Brothers Hospital.

In East New York James Johnson, 38, of 134 Alabama Avenue, fell from the fire escape of his home on the fourth floor. He suffered a fracture of the skull, a broken right leg, and several broken ribs. At the Kings County Hospital, where he was taken, it was said he had but little chance of recovery. Harry Portugal of 161 Park Place fell from a building at 457 Thatford Avenue, where he was working, and sustained serious internal injuries.

The severe thunder storm of Sunday night tore up the roads near Somerville, N. J., and as a result the hotels were filled with autoists from this city and Northern New Jersey who could not reach their homes. During the storm a coop containing 400 chickens was swept away and the chickens were drowned. Cellars were flooded and much damage was done.

At least 100,000 went to Coney Island for a swim yesterday. There were no accidents, and a slight rainfall in the early evening drove most of the people to their homes.

HEATED TERM IS BROKEN.

Cool Wave from Northwest May Continue All Week.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—The heat wave, which caused a number of deaths and intense suffering in the Eastern half of the country, has been broken. A cool wave, approaching from the Northwest, has brought lower temperatures, which the Weather Bureau officials predict will continue until the end of the week. Higher temperatures, however, will prevail over the Pacific Coast and Northwest States.

A windstorm over Florida today brought relief from the heat in the South Atlantic States, but indications tonight pointed to a return of high temperatures there. Washington was the hottest of Eastern cities today, its official temperature being 94 degrees. Jacksonville, Fla., reported 78, Savannah 82, Baltimore and Philadelphia 90, Boston 72, Pittsburgh 84, Chicago 78, St. Louis 90, Kansas City 82, and maha 72.

POSTAL DENIES PHONE CUT.

Reduction in Rate Applies Only to Newspaper Telegraph Lines.

At the offices of the Postal Telegraph Company at 253 Broadway it was said yesterday that the reports that the company was contemplating a cut in the rates of its telephone service were not correct. The statement was made, however, that the Postal is rapidly extending its telephone service through the South, West, and Middle West, and it was asserted that the rates of the telephone companies connected with the Postal were, as a rule, lower than that of their competitors, their rates being based on a conversation of five minutes rather than three. It was said that the Postal's service is largely a recent growth and that the tariffs fixed at the time the various lines were started are still the ones best suited to the business done.

The report had arisen in connection with the announcement made Saturday night that the Postal had cut the rates on the leased telegraph wires for night press service in two. This rate, which went into effect yesterday, means that the rates of $10 a mile per year for wires leased by individual newspapers and $12 a mile per year for press associations was cut to $5 and $6 respectively. Charles C. Adams, Vice President of the Postal, in charge of the Traffic Department, said yesterday that the primary idea of this change was to benefit the smaller newspapers of the interior cities.

"Formerly," said Mr. Adams, "the smaller newspapers in the smaller towns could take only very limited service on general world news—perhaps 500 to 1,000 words a night to cover the entire news field. This has worked a considerable hardship, particularly since the war broke out, and the public everywhere is so deeply interested in foreign news, which it rarely read before. This reduction in the rates on leased wires ought to give an opportunity to many newspapers in smaller cities to afford their own wires and thus to get much fuller service on the news of the world at large."

ARREST DR. H. C. COE'S SON.

Railroad Detectives Accuse Him of Tempering with Switches.

Charged with having endangered the lives of passengers on the Putnam Division of the New York Central Railroad by unlocking switches and tampering with switch lights, Fordyce Coe, a son of Dr. Henry C. Coe of 8 West Seventy-sixth Street, was brought before Acting Police Judge Madden in Yonkers yesterday afternoon. Young Coe gave his age as 20, and claimed to be a student at the Columbia College of Journalism. Detectives in the employ of the railroad were notified during the morning that a young man was wandering along the right of way between the Van Cortlandt Station and Bryn Mawr, tampering with signal lights and switches. They found that several switches had been unlocked and some of the signal lights taken away. They arrested young Coe.

The detectives told Judge Madden they found young Coe wandering along the road and he refused to explain his presence there satisfactorily. The student was held to await the arrival of his father. "I was full of gin rickies and Scotch high balls," was the explanation he offered in court.

Dr. Coe said last night over the telephone that he had been away on a case and that his son's trouble had been simply the result of a schoolboy prank. He denied that the son had done any harm.

Dr. Coe's family was brought into prominence early this year when Henry Clarke Coe, Jr., another son, disappeared from his home in Boston. Mr. Coe left his young wife on the eve of becoming a mother. A country-wide search was made for him, and in May he was located in Fairbanks, Alaska. Henry Clarke Coe, Jr., was an employe in the Boston office of the Standard Oil Company.

ARRESTED AS DRUG THIEF.

Samuel Lippman Accused of Flundering Store by Daylight.

David Rubinstein, who had been waiting on a row of customers in his drug store at 384 Saratoga Avenue, East New York, yesterday afternoon, went back behind the screen into the rear of the store to make up a prescription and found a youth plundering his case of narcotics. Rubinstein grappled with him. The intruder, though pale and haggard, had a good deal of strength left, and managed to break away.

He got out into the back yard and climbed over a fence, shedding bottles of drugs as he ran, but was finally run down and caught by Patrolman Malloy of the Brownsville Station. He told the police his name was Samuel Sippman and that after he had found himself unable to buy drugs he could not break himself of the habit. He was held on a charge of burglary.

GENERAL TRACY IS DYING.

Physician Gives Up Hope for ex-Secretary of the Navy.

General Benjamin F. Tracy, Secretary of the Navy under President Harrison, who has been critically ill at his home, 14 East Sixtieth Street, for the last few days, was said late last night to have failed rapidly during the day.

Dr. William B. Pritchard, of 143 West Seventy-second Street, who has been the General's physician for the last twenty-two years, said that his patient's wonderful vitality was all that was sustaining him and that his death was probably only a question of hours. He said that General Tracy was slowly losing ground and that there was no hope for recovery. His daughter, Mrs. Ferdinand Wilmerding, is constantly at his bedside.

VESSEL INSPECTORS SHACKLED TOGETHER

Reid and Eckliff Brought Before Secretary Redfield Handcuffed at Eastland Inquiry.

GOVERNMENT TO RESCUE

Habeas Corpus Suit Begun to Take Accused Officials Out of Hands of State of Illinois.

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—Conflict between the Federal Department of Commerce and Maclay Hoyne, State's attorney, arose today at the investigation of the steamer Eastland disaster, because Robert Reid and C. C. Eckliff, the Federal Steamboat Inspectors who gave the Eastland its last license, were brought, handcuffed together, before Secretary of Commerce Redfield and the Steamboat Inspection Service Board.

Application for a writ of habeas corpus to take the Inspectors from the State officers was filed in the United States District Court by the Inspectors' attorney after a consultation with A. L. Thurman, Solicitor of the Department of Commerce. Judge Landis will hear the case tomorrow.

Several members of the Steamboat Inspection Service gave testimony before Secretary Redfield, who is conducting an inquiry as provided by the rules of his department. Late in the day, while Ira B. Mansfield, Inspector of Hulls at Chicago, was testifying, Inspectors Reid and Eckliff, who had been arrested on a Coroner's mittimus, were brought into the room handcuffed to a Deupty Sheriff. The Inspectors walked up in front of Secretary Redfield and raised their hands, while the Deputy Sheriff removed the manacles.

"If these Government Inspectors are to be handcuffed and treated in this manner by State officers," said Solicitor Thurman, "I shall start a fight for jurisdiction over them."

State's Attorney Hoyne was called to confer with United States District Attorney Clyne and Mr. Thurman. The Federal attorneys announced that application would be made for a writ of habeas corpus, and Mr. Hoyne said he would oppose the removal of Reid and Eckliff from the jurisdiction of the State. Mr. Hoyne said he did not order the Sheriff to handcuff the Inspectors.

As Reid and Eckliff had virtually been subpoenaed for the Federal Grand Jury, it was decided that they should not again be asked to give evidence to the Redfield board.

Secretary Redfield announced that an equilibrium test of all passenger-carrying steamers on the Great Lakes would be made, and that the work of Steamboat Inspectors during the last fifteen years would be investigated, as suggested by Lieutenant Governor Barratt O'Hara. It was announced that an advisory committee of business men, consisting of P. B. Foulke of St. Louis, Charles C. Jenks of Detroit, and Charles A. McCormick of New Brunswick, N. J., would assist Secretary Redfield in the investigation.

Mr. Redfield received two threatening letters today. One declared that the writer would "push the Secretary into the river," and was signed "Murderer." The other was signed "Republicans," and advised Mr. Redfield to leave the city immediately for fear some crank would kill him.

"I have received many such letters," said Secretary Redfield. "They are idle threats and mean nothing."

Captain Harry Pedersen of the Eastland, who had been in jail since shortly after the disaster, was released on $10,000 bail today.

No bodies were recovered from the capsized Eastland today. The known dead remained at 839, with 142 reported missing.

CORNISH, N. H., Aug. 2.—President Wilson continued today to receive protests from Chicago against the conduct of the Federal investigation into the Eastland disaster. Up to the present he has taken no action. He is receiving reports almost daily form Secretary Redfield.

TO AVERT GARMENT STRIKE.

Mediators Confer as Votes of 60,000 Union Members Are Counted.

While the last votes of 60,000 members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union were being cast yesterday on the question of a general strike, representatives of the union and of the Cloak, Suit and Skirt Manufacturers' Protective Association met at the Chamberlain's office in the Municipal Building in an effort to avoid a break.

The failure of the Manufacturers' Association to ratify the adjustment proposed by the Council of Conciliation has been due, it is said, to the interpretation placed by the union on the clause of the council's decision which limits the right of the employer to lay off workmen and to the finding in favor of a distribution which would keep all employes at work, though at reduced hours, in dull seasons.

The council was in conference all day, and will meet again today in order to define these points exactly.

The last votes of the unionists were cast last night, and the counting began at 9 o'clock. Union leaders said the counting of the ballots was only a necessary formality, as the vote had been overwhelmingly in favor of the strike.

WED, THEN TOLD PARENTS.

Miss Hyde to Follow Example of Her Sister, Who Eloped.

Without taking their parents into their confidence, Miss Helen Hyde, a daughter of Raymond Newton Hyde, of Main Avenue, Douglaston, L. I., and Paul Byrnes, son of James C. Byrnes, of 50 North Nineteenth Street, Flushing, were married yesterday in Long Island City.

At the home of Miss Hyde it was said at first that she was on her vacation. There was surprise over the taking out of a marriage license. Late in the afternoon Miss Hyde, then Mrs. Byrnes, telephoned her father that she and Mr. Byrnes had been married in Queens and were then headed toward New Jersey on a honeymoon trip. About the same time her husband notified his family. The surprise in the Barnes home was as great as in that of Mr. Hyde.

Miss Hyde followed the example of her sister, Mrs. Edith Hyde Robbins, who married Tod Robbins, athlete, polo player, author, and wealthy society man of Brooklyn, in 1909, and five years later divorced him.

over the prison situation, which is rapidly approaching a crisis. It is understood that Mr. Riley is angered at the degree of demoralization in discipline at Sing Sing.

Eight or ten prisoners, members of Mr. Osborne's Mutual Welfare League, according to the documentary evidence now in the hands of Mr. Riley, have been admitted to the death house at Sing Sing every Sunday night to entertain the condemned men with singing. The cell corridor, according to the account of conditions at the prison now in Mr. Riley's hands, on these occasions would be filled with prisoners, and conversation between them and the men in the condemned cells was easy, despite the presence of two guards.

Superintendent Riley had also, it was said tonight, evidence to show that Spence, a murderer, and Scalzo and Pillods, two white slavers, with long terms before them, who recently escaped from Sing Sing, had unusual privileges. The two white slavers, on a written order, were actually outside the prison walls at the time they escaped.

A week ago last Saturday, after Joseph Murphy, a convicted murderer, who made an affidavit which furnished the basis for the Becker proceedings before Justice Ford, had confessed to the Governor that he had talked with Becker in the death house at the Sunday night concert on June 20, Governor Whitman urged Superintendent Riley to impress on Warden Osborne the necessity of living up to the law governing admission to the death house. Superintendent Riley said today that he issued orders accordingly at once, but that for three days Warden Osborne did not even acknowledge receipt of the instructions.

The Governor, it is known, is very much displeased with the present management of Sing Sing Prison. Events, incidental to the execution of Becker, it is said, have deepened the Governor's conviction that Mr. Osborne's management is too loose, yet it is understood that the Governor does not at present intend to take any step looking to Mr. Osborne's removal. The Governor feels that Warden Osborne is directly responsible to Superintendent Riley, and that the appointment and removal of Prison Wardens is within the province of the Superintendent of Prisons exclusively.

Late tonight word reached the Capitol that Mr. Osborne in an interview had prognosticated his own removal within ten days, and also ventured the opinion that he "would come back."

"I really have not given this subject any thought," said State Superintendent of Prisons John B. Riley when he heard of this. "Mr. Osborne's suggestion is news to me."

Westchester Democrat Resigns.

The Democratic County Committee of Westchester yesterday afternoon at its meeting in White Plains accepted the resignation of Michael J. Walsh as county leader. It elected Clifford B. Couch of Peekskill, an attorney, as his successor. It is said that Mr. Walsh is grooming himself as candidate for the nomination for State Controller. Mayor Edwin W. Fiske of Mount Vernon, who is not a Walsh man, resigned as Vice Chairman. His successor was not elected.

LAWN TENNIS—NEW YORK YACHT CLUB FLEET ASSEMBLES AT NEW LONDON

R. N. WILLIAMS BEATS GRIFFIN AT TENNIS

National Champion Gets Revenge for Defeat Recently in San Francisco.

Special to The New York Times.

BROOKLINE, Mass., Aug. 2.—R. Norris Williams, 2d, national tennis champion, saved the honor of the East today and got revenge for his Pacific Coast defeat of a few weeks ago.

The Harvard crack won over Clarence J. Griffin of San Francisco in straight sets at 9—7, 7—5, 6—1 on the Longwood courts in the fifth round of the singles of this annual tennis classic.

Conditions for playing were none too good because the day was so dark during the final set that the spectators and players could hardly see the ball. Notwithstanding these drawbacks the match was bitterly fought from start to finish. Griffin was tired out and so exhausted that the outcome was virtually a foregone conclusion. The first two sets were very thrilling, as the score 9—7 and 7—5 will indicate.

Griffin was fast on his feet and caused Williams lots of trouble. He was out to duplicate his feat on the Pacific Coast, which he did on asphalt, but he found the turf courts more difficult. Williams's play was more severe. For two long sets it was nip and tuck between the players.

The San Francisco player's quick, straight drive, without either a top or cut and his ability to pick openings left his more famous rival no time to play a waiting game. If anything Williams did the greater amount of footing.

Williams was slow in getting under way, and he repeatedly made errors during the first six games, while Griffin went after every point. Griffin ran up a 4-to-1 lead before Williams started to show his real form. After getting started he caused Griffin trouble with his bombardment of forehand and backhand drives and cannon ball volleys. They were not all point winners, but enough to enable Williams to prove conclusively that he was in the running. The Harvard star jumped into the front for the first time in the eleventh game. Griffin rallied in turn and fought Williams off for five more games.

Williams was steadier and less brilliant in the second set, but the play was faster and closer. After that games alternated with the services generally, and again the Californian with a fine attack and defense caused the set to go extra games. The fact that the set went extra games took much out of Griffin and enabled Williams to almost obtain a whitewash in the third set.

Nat Niles won his place in the final round all alone, as Williams and Johnson are still hung up in the semi-finals. Niles defeated Craig Biddle of Philadelphia in a very interesting match. It went to four sets, Biddle's clever play keeping the Bostonian on the jump for three sets, but the latter made a walkaway of the fourth. Biddle was showing signs of distress because of the strenuous work in the early sets. At the start Biddle was rather unsteady but more brilliant than his opponent.

Since Boston must share Williams with Philadelphia Niles is the only local star still in the tourney. Wallace Johnson showed up wonderfully well against Watson M. Washburn of New York, winning without much trouble.

Niles will play the winner of the match tomorrow between Williams and Johnson for the honor of playing Maurice E. McLoughlin of San Francisco in the challenge round. The summary:

Longwood Singles, Fifth Round.—R. N. Williams, 2d, Harvard, defeated C. J. Griffin, San Francisco, 9—7, 7—5, 6—1; W. F. Johnson, Philadelphia, defeated W. M. Washburn, New York, 6—3, 6—1, 6—4.

Semi-Final Round.—N. W. Niles, Boston, defeated Craig Biddle, Philadelphia, 6—4, 4—6, 6—4, 6—1.

EDGEMERE DOUBLES FINAL.

Man and Major Defeat Baggs and Ostendorf in Tennis Tourney.

Alrick H. Man, Jr., and Cedric A. Major, who are entered in the tennis tournament at Norwalk for the championship of Connecticut, arranged to play their first round matches today in order to enable them to compete in the semi-final and final rounds of the invitation men's doubles of the Edgemere Club tournament yesterday at Edgemere, L. I. The arrangement proved a satisfactory one for the pair, for they won the event by taking their unfinished match with Arthur M. Lovibond and Wylie C. Grant, and defeating Ralph L. Baggs and A. J. Ostendorf in the final round.

The victory of Man and Major was expected, as they had survived a series of competitions, defeating among other teams Vanderbilt B. Ward and Dr. William Rosenbaum. Each succeeding tournament finds the partnership more firmly cemented and with increasing knowledge of each other's strong and weak points the combination will prove a formidable one. The score in the unfinished match was 6—2, 7—5, and the result of the final round was 6—1, 6—2, 6—4.

When rain stopped the play on Sunday Man and Major led Lovibond and Grant, 6—2, 2—2. The match was continued yesterday, and the Seventh Regiment combination made a much better showing. Lovibond's steadiness and accuracy brought the games to 5—all. Man and Major then rallied and by forcing the issue won the next two games and match.

The excessive heat did not appear to affect Man and Major in their match with Baggs and Ostendorf. They played with a confidence that spelled victory. From the outset they completely outclassed their opponents, and met no opposition until the third set, when they stopped a rally by Baggs and Ostendorf, and saved an extra game set. They were particularly strong in their overhead smashing, while Man, who devoted his attention to the net found many undefended spots with his cross-court shots. The summary:

Edgemere Club Invitation Men's Doubles.—Semi-Final Round—Alrick H. Man, Jr., and Cedric A. Major defeated Arthur M. Lovibond and Wylie C. Grant, 6—2, 7—5.

Final Round—Alrick H. Man, Jr., and Cedric A. Major defeated Ralph L. Baggs and A. J. Ostendorf, 6—1, 6—2, 6—4.

G. M. CHURCH A VICTOR.

Princetonian Now Favorite for Western Tennis Championship.

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—Heath Byford, Chicago, upset predictions today by defeating W. M. Johnston of San Francisco in the first round of the Western Tennis Tournament at Lake Forest. It was a signal victory for the Illinois champion, since critics generally had predicted his defeat by the Californian, and bemoaned the fact that the draw placed the local favorite against a star in the first round. Errors cost Johnston the match. He made 76 to Byford's 54, though he earned 39 of his points to the Chicagoan's 20. The score was 3—6, 7—5, 6—4.

G. M. Church, the Princeton player with Johnston out, became favorite. He had little trouble defeating J. D. Boven of Chicago, 6—1, 6—1, in the second round, to which he moved through a default. J. J. Armstrong, St. Paul, easily won from H. F. Logan, Chicago, 6—2, 6—2.

It was decided to postpone two men's matches. A few matches, all between local teams, were recorded in the men's doubles. Summaries:

BASSFORD AND KING WIN.

Straight-Set Victory in Hudson River Tennis Championship Doubles.

The third of the Hudson River Lawn Tennis Association championships was decided yesterday on the courts of the Park Hill Country Club, near Yonkers, when Abraham Bassford, Jr., County Tennis Club of Westchester, and George King, Columbia University, defeated Dr. S. H. Rowe and J. L. Jova in the final round of the men's doubles in straight sets at 6—2, 6—0, 7—5.

With the defeat of Steinkampf and Forster in the semi-final round last week, the only possible stumbling block to Bassford and King's victory was removed, and the result was about the same as was expected. The winning combination showed more effectiveness than when the two players joined issue in the New York Lawn Tennis Club tournament early in the season. The pair played through the three sets with an even pace and appeared to understand each other's play.

Bassford kept in the back court and devoted his attention to the lobbing for which he is famous, while King played a net game and smashed the ball to all sections of the opposite court. Rowe and Jova did not succeed in uncovering a very strong defense, and allowed their opponents to score on many passing shots.

The first two sets were decided in easy manner, Bassford and King allowing their opponents only two games. The leaders, feeling secure, eased up in the third set, and the score was carried to deuce before Bassford and King once more settled down to business. They broke through Jova's service and won their own. The summary:

Hudson River Lawn Tennis Association, Men's Doubles Championship.—Final Round—Abraham Bassford, Jr., and George King defeated Dr. S. H. Rowe and J. L. Jova, 6—2, 6—0, 7—5.

The funeral will be held today from his late home at 190 South Eleventh Street, Newark.

NEW YORK Y. C. FLEET READY FOR CRUISE

200 Yachts at New London Will Start Today on Port-to-Port Sail in East.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Aug. 2.—About 20 Oyachts flying the burgee of the New York Yacht Club were anchored in the Thames River off New London tonight, prepared to leave early tomorrow for Newport on the first run of the annual port-to-port cruise. Commodore George F. Baker's flagsip Viking broke out signals at sunset, declaring the 1916 cruise in commission, and immediately the harbor resounded with a salute of cannon.

Captains of the various yachts reported aboard the flagship, and final details of the cruise were discussed. A formal receptoion was held aboard the Viking tonight, which was attended by the yacht owners and their guests.

There were more large steam yachts and auxiliaries in the squadron than in any cruise of recent years. While the various racing classes had filled to the satisfaction of the Regatta Committee, interest in the port races was increased by the presence of the Resolut and Varitie. These boats alone are to sail in out-and-out racing trim.

Among the larger of the steamers beside the Viking here are J. P. Morgan's Corsair, Henry Walter's Narada, W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr.'s, Tarantula, ex-Commodore E. C. Benedict's Oneida, Morton F. Plant's Kanawha, H. G. Burnet's Alberta, Allison V. Armour's Utowana, W. Sharpe Kilmer's Remlik, D. W. Smith's Virginia, Huston Wyeth's Nemaha, James Elverson, Jr.'s Allegro, Edgar Palmer's Guinevere, Henry Gilsey's Ertanax, Henry W. Putnam, Jr.'s Alcyone, C. W. Harkness's Agawa, C. J. Doval's Paragon, Walter Lippincott's Lady Betty, W. D. Hoxie's Idalia, R. P. Perkin's Mohican, R. Eldridge's Kehtoh, H. H. Hogin's Ilewellyn, C. J. Eisenlohr's Miramie, M. B. Mills's Cynthia III., W. C. Hubbard's Leda, and E. Walter Clark's Zipalong.

The houseboats were represented by the giants of the class, the Everglades of Arthur Curtis, James Seminole of H. C. Phipps, Alela of A. H. Disston, and Lodoma of James G. Wilson.

The cup class yachts, Resolute and Vanitie, loomed up larger than the sloops, which included also J. M. MacDonough's Spartan, H. P. Whitney's Barbr, George F. Baker, Jr's. Ventura, Harold S. Vanderbilt's Vagrant, R. N. Ellis's Iroquois II.,— W. E. Dodge's Samuri, and the Grayling, Carolina, and Acushla of the racing fleet, with the half dozen New York thirties which had made the run up from New Haven in the day's competition.

The schooners included Clifford R. Hendrix's Radiant, Lloyd Phoenix's Intrepid, J. D. Ford's Katrina, M. F. Plant's Elena, G. H. Worthington's Priscilla, Herbert M. Sears's onstellation, Robert E. Tod's Katowa, W. H. Judson's Rival, Howard C. Smith's Ahmakola, I. E. Raymond's Hopewell, and a score of lesser two and three stickers and sound schooners.

About 9 o'clock tomorrow the fleet will leave for Newport, Resolute and Vanitie accompanying and racing once more for a special cup. Schooners of all sizes in one class, sloops and yawls in another will race for the navy challenge cups.

The Seawanhaka-Corinthian Yacht Club fleet, which was expected to arrive here this evening, had not been reported at a late hour. The Corinthians sailed in a head wind against the tide, and a thick fog enveloped their course this evening, which accounts for the nonarrival of the fleet.

A course dead to windward took them from New Haven Breakwater for a long leg on the port tack of twenty miles close to the Long Island shore. When they came about for the trip to this port the wind had about deserted them and they faced a fog bank and an adverse tide. These tested patience, seamanship and sailing luck.

Among Harlem River Oarsmen.

The Nonpareil Rowing Club will be represented in three races in the National Rowing Regatta at Springfield, Mass., on Aug. 13-14.

Captain R. H. Pearse will row in the quarter mile dash and in the senior singles. In the dash he will again encounter Everard Butler of Canada, who beat him by inches at Philadelphia last year.

Livingston, Mullen, Faber, and McLaughlin will represent the club in the race for intermediate four-oared shells.

Pearse has been coaching this crew, but will turn it over this week to Fred Plaisted, the professoinal oarsman and assistant to Coach Rice at Columbia University.

Utley, ex-Captain of the Nonparells, has taken Hamilton, Keenan, Howard, and other younger members of the club in hand and will develop a junior centipede to compete in the Middle States Regatta at Philadelphia, Sept. 6, and in the Fall regatta on the Harlem.

Livingston of the Nonparells is the only sculler on the river with a sectional shell.

The Union Boat Club is giving its attention to developing junior oarsmen for the New York Rowing Associatoin Regatta on the Speedway course, Sept. 12. This will be the first Sunday regatta held on this river in many years.

YAWL FLAMINGO AGROUND.

R. L. Bigelow's Small Racing Craft Fast on Seal Rock in Sound.

SAYBROOK, Conn., Aug. 2.—The auxiliary yawl Flamingo, owned by R. L. Bigelow of the New York Yacht Club, is aground on Seal Rock tonight inside of Cornfield Light. The yawl struck late today, and when the tide fell found herself fast. What damage, if any, she has suffered, is not known yet. Flamingo is fifty-four feet long overall.

The point where the yawl struck is about four miles inside Cornfield Light and a short distance off shore. Two women, members of the party of nine on board, were brought ashore, but the rest of the party remained on board. An effort to float the boat will be made at high tide.

The Flamingo left Bridgeport this morning with other boats of the New York Yacht Club, which had started for New London for the annual cruise, but were compelled to put into Bridgeport because of the fog on Long Island Sound.

When the start for New London was made today the fog still hung over the Sound, making navigation difficult. The first intimation that those on board had that they were out of their course was when the yawl struck. At the same time the engine clutch broke. The sails were hoisted, but the boat simply spun around, and investigation showed that it was hard aground.

PUBLIC PARKS TENNIS.

Final Round in Singles Will Be Played on Saturday.

The tennis players competing in the championship of the Public Parks Lawn Tennis Association will reach the final round of the singles of the deciding tournament on Saturday. The program was arranged by William H. Brown, Jr., the President of the Parks Association, and A. Enklewitz and other members of the Executive Committee at a meeting held yesterday.

According to the arrangements which may be made between the individual park champions, the matches in the semi-final round of the singles will be contested tomorrow or Thursday afternoon. Francis J. Hopkins, Jr., the Van Cortlandt Park winner, will play the Sunset Park champion on the McComb's Dam Park courts. On the same courts Marty Alexander, Claremont Park winner, will play Russell Brown, the singles title holder of Central Park. The matches wi be the best two out of three sets.

Interested committeemen decided to bring about the matches in the other section of the draw on the courts at Van Cortandt Park, where Louis Oshman, the Crotona Park champion, plays H. Dulborger, the McComb's Dam Park title holder, and H. Berman, winner at Bronx Park, plays the Prospect Park champion.

The players who win places in the semi-finals will arrange to play their opponents in the matches for the final on the same courts not later than 1 o'clock next Saturday afternoon. The students of form among the committee favored Brown of Central Park as the finalist in the upper half, with Oshman of Crotona as winner in the lower division.

The doubles championship match for the Central Park title was checked by the storm on Sunday after each of the pairs had won two sets. It proved a gruelling match of the most desperate type. Ray Kriss and Edward Gordon, the holders of the doubles honors, led Joffe at 6—2 on games in the first set. Then Kriss became over-confident. He attempted to take liberties in the way of trying fancy smashes. It wrecked the chances of his side, for Louis Joffe and Jack Joffe sailed into the rallies, lobbing prettily at the most unexpected times, so that they ended off four games and won the set. The balance of four sets was fought with plenty of fast driving interspersed by high lobbing, especially from the Joffe side of the net. The Joffe brothers by the most courageous sort of playing in rallies pulled out the set after Kriss and Gordon had forced the score to games all.

Kramer Fears He'll Lose Title.

EAST ORANGE, N. J., Aug. 2.—Cycle Champion Frank L. Kramer, who has held the national title for the last fourteen years, admits that it looks as if he had reached the end of his wonderful record. When discussing the situation at his home, 65 North Maple Avenue, this city, the champion said:

"I am away off form and with the hot weather to contend with I am doubtful of my ability to gain my best form again until late in the season. As the remaining championship races will be run off this month, it appears as if I am likely to lose the title."

Kramer has been hard pressed during the last few weeks by Alfred Goullet, the Australian cyclist, who is a much younger man. Goullet is showing the best form of his career.

Kramer trained on the roads of East Orange as a boy twenty years ago, and from the time he began to win laurels as an amateur has been the strongest card at the Vailsburgh track, just over the line in Newark. He has saved his winings as a champion cyclist and invested in East Orange real estate.

Marathon Won by Ted Johnson.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 30.—The Far Western track and field championship of the Amateur Athletic Union opened at the Panama-Pacific Exposition Stadium today. Preliminary heats were run in all events except one, the Modified Marathon being won by Ted Johnson of Denver in 1:13:05 1-5. R. H. Lee of San Francisco finished second, fifty yards behind. Five associations of the A. A. U. were represented, the athletes coming from the Pacific, Southern Pacific, Rocky Mountain, Intermountain, and Pacific Northwestern divisions.

EASTERN ATHLETES ARRIVE AT THE FAIR

Taber Works Out on Exposition Track—Millrose Boys in Good Condition.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 2.—Norman Taber, world's record holder for a paced mile, arrived here today shortly before noon ready for the competition in the National Track and Field championships of Saturday. Taber appeared to be in prime condition. He came direct from Portland, where he has spent the past four days in training. After a preliminary talk with the exposition athletic officials Taber went to the Panama-Pacific Fair cinderpath, where he spent part of the afternoon in limbering up exercises. It is the plan of the former Oxford star to work every morning up to Friday, on which day he will lay off from work.

The balance of the Eastern contingent is expected to put in an appearance Wednesday afternoon or evening. The New York Athletic Club team is somewhere on the road to this city while the Irish-Americans are expected soon.

Frederick W. Rubien, Secretary of the A. A. U., arrived today and will call a meeting of the Championship Committee at the Olympic Club for Wednesday evening, for a final consideration of track meet details.

All of the Chicago and Illinois athlecit club athletec have reported for work on the Exposition cinders. J. Loomis and Joie Ray are attracting the most attention. Loomis says he is ready for anything and welcomes a chance to meet Alma Richards, the Cornell star, in the high jump. And it looks right now as if this high jump will be one of the best events upon the program, with Richards, Loomis and George Horine ready. Horine is in particularly fine shape and will bend every effort to defeat Richards and deverse Olympic games tables. Horine has cleared six feet four inches in practice, and figures to surpass this in competition.

Mel Shepard and his string of Melrose A. A. stars is on the ground and ready for work. Willie Kyronen, national five-mile champion, Nick Gianakopulos junior cross country national champion, and Charley Pores, recent winner of the Seagate marathon, are all running well. Kyronen seems to be working better than Pores and Gianakopulos.

Pacific Coast stars are counting upon certain points in Saturday's championships. Drew is almost a certainty in the century, Fred Kelly is being counted a sure thing in the high hurdles, while George Horine should count in the high jump. Sam Bellah of the Multnomah Athletic Club of Portland is also to be considered in the pole vault, as he accomplished a leap of 12 feet 8 inches last Saturday in the Far Western championships without much effort. Another coast luminary expected to show is Fred Murray of the Olympic Club, who ran the low hurdles in 0:23 3-5 last Saturday, defeating Kelly of Los Angeles over the distance. A wind blowing at the backs of the starters made the time unusually fast.

Three hundred and eighty-eight entries have been received by the exposition officials for both the junior and senior championships. Heats will be run in both sprints and hurdles, and possibly in the quarter mile. It is also expected that preliminary eliminations will be held in the field in such events as the high jump, broad jump, pole vault, and shot put.

EXPECTS $100,000 HOUSE.

McFarland-Gibbons Bout Promoters Hope to Sell 50,000 Tickets.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Ill., Aug. 2.—The ten-round bout between Packey McFarland and Mike Gibbons became a certainty today, when the two principals accepted the terms offered by the Ocean Athletic Club of Brighton Beach, New York City.

After an all-day session in the Planters Hotel, Gibbons agreed to take $15,000 for his end, without the privilege of a percentage. McFarland previously had accepted an offer of $17,500. Details of the battle were agreed upon, and all that remains is the formal signing of articles, which will take place tomorrow.

All records for financing a limited-round battle were broken by the promoters. As the matter stands now, the Ocean A. C. stands pledged to pay out $32,500 cash to the principals, and in order to stage the battle additional expenses of $10,000 to $15,000 will be necessary.

The bout will take place at the Brighton Beach Motordrome on the night of Sept. 11. Arrangements for seating 50,000 persons will be provided. The prices will range from $1 to $5, and the tickets will be placed on sale immediately, to forestall any activity by scalpers.

W. C. Marshall of the Ocean A. C. never has promoted boxing before. He is a railroad contractor in New York, and, with his cousin, Chauncey, also conducts the Brighton Baths. He was a little limp tonight after all the business had been settled.

"We offered Gibbons $10,000 cash and a privilege of 25 per cent. on all receipts over $60,000," said Mr. Marshall. "We expected him to snap at this offer, but he held out flat for $15,000.

"I have had no previous experience with fighters and considered this demand exorbitant. However, everything has been settled now and we are all feeling fine. I believe we will put $100,000 in the house, provided weather and other conditions are good."

QUESTION TABER'S RECORD.

Objectors Say Race Was Not True in Real Sense of the Word.

Considerable controversy has developed in track and field circles as to the propriety of accepting the new world's record of 4:12 3-5 for the mile run, made by Norman Taber in the Harvard Stadium on July 17. The contention of the objectors to accepting the figures is that the time was made in a special trial and not in a race in the true sense of the word. Few followers of athletics realize the difficulty of finding a field and conditions that will give a runner of Taber's type the opportunity to break such a record even though he has the ability.

W. G. George of England set the time for the mile at 4:21 2-5 in 1882, and this time was not lowered by an amateur until 1895, when Tommy Conneff ran the distance in 2:15 3-5. There it stood until 1911, when John Paul Jones reduced it one-fifth of a second, and two years later cut a whole second off that time. In this race Jones had as opponents Taber, Brown; Harmon, Dartmouth, and Madeira of Pennsylvania, all of whom finished in the order named. This was an extraordinary field, and forced Jones to run at his best speed to win in time less than two seconds slower than George's record of 4:12¾, made when a professional in 1886.

In the race in which George established the world's record that Taber broke the English professional had as his opponent in the match contest at Lillebridge, London, Billy Cummings, a runner of almost equal ability. It can be seen, therefore, that it is seldom that a group of runners of sufficient speed can be gathered under perfect racing conditions to warrant expectations of reducing records which have reached the point where the mile figures are today. Taber could have in all probability lowered the record just as much, or perhaps more, had he been able to race the full mile against a field of several runners capable of staying with him for the entire distance at a speed inside 4:15. Just where to find such a field the objectors to the record fail to state.

Hunt Meeting at Elkins Park.

Entry blanks for the annual hunt meeting of Lynewood Farm at Elkin Park, Penn., on Oct. 16, were issued by Frank J. Bryan, racing secretary, yesterday. The meet will be held under sanction of the Hunts Committee of the National Steeplechase and Hunt Association. Entries will close on Thursday, Oct. 7. Six races are scheduled, with purses ranging up to $500. One of the feature races will be for the Fulminate Plate, open to registered hacks and hunters, and horses owned by the United States Government or officers of the United States Army. The other events are the Caller Plate, handicap, for all ages; the Cheltenham Steeplechase, for maidens, three years old and upward; the El Cuchillo Plate, for three-year-olds and upward; the Lynewood Challenge Cup, steeplechase, for registered hunters, and the Coligny Steeplechase, for four-year-olds and upward.

Canadian Athletes to Go to War.

Thomas Boyd, President of the Amateur Athletic Union of Canada, in a recent statement, suggests fewer competitions and appeals to members of athletic organizations to join the overseas corps. He says:

"Kitchener says he needs more men, and we all realize that when he says it he means it.

"This is the reason I am appealing to all those who have no ties to hold them back, and especially the unmarried members of the many athletic organizations throughout Canada, to join at once the various corps now being recruited.

"The elimination of cup games at this juncture would give to the men engaged an opportunity to realize the gravity of the situation, and enable them to put their fighting qualities at the disposal of their King and country. The athletes of Canada have done nobly in filling the ranks of previous contingents. All honor to them. Those of you to whom this appeal reaches, show your patriotism by enlisting at once. 'Do your bit.'"

The Manitoba branch of the Canadian A. U. is urging all athletes to enlist for active service or home defense.

YANKEES DEFEAT WHITE SOX IN NINTH INNING RALLY—SARATOGA RACING

SCOTT'S WILD TOSS LETS IN WINNING RUN

Yankees Garner Three Tallies in Ninth, Just Enough to Beat White Sox.

Without the aid of white whiskers, a red bonnet, or a team of reindeers, Jim Scott of the White Sox gave a perfect impersonation of Santa Claus at the Polo Grounds yesterday. Christmas is a long way off, but so was the ball when Jim threw it away in the ninth inning and let Eddie Barney come home with the run which gave the Yanks a 3 to 2 victory. If one gift deserves another, Scott has an automobile or a suit of clothes or something coming from Bill Donovan.

Urban Faber pitched great ball against the Yankees up to the ninth inning. He allowed only four scattered hits, and skilfully suppressed the Yankees the few times they threatened to score. The Yankees went into the ninth inning with the score 2 to 0 against them.

Maisel lifted a long fly to Murphy. Pipp clouted Faber for a single, and Charley Mullen was enlisted to run for Pipp. Doc Cook pounded a single to right, and Mullen went to third. Barney rolled an easy grounder to Eddie Collins. Ordinarily this $25,000 portion of Connie Mack's late lamented $100,000 infield would have evolved a neat little double play out of this incident and given young Faber the support he deserved.

Collins handled the ball as if it was an anarchist's bomb. He picked it up and dropped it and then repeated the operation. It seemed as if he dropped it oftener than he picked it up. Anyway, by the time he found out that the ball wasn't red-hot, Barney was safe at first and Mullen had crossed the plate.

Paddy Bauman lofted one to Shano Collins and made it two out. Roy Hartzell assumed the pinch-hitting rôle for Alexander. Hartzell slashed a single to right and scored Doc Cook with the run that tied the score. Clarence Rowland, the Sox manager, went out and told Faber to hurry to the clubhouse, where somebody wanted him on the phone.

From the wilds of right field stalked Jim Scott. Nunamaker went in as pinch-hitter for Brown, and he got a pass, filling the bases. Hughey High was at the bat when Scott unraveled a peg which was far out of Ray Schalk's reach and, Barney went home with the victory.

King Cole made his reappearance in these parts for the Yankees, and his home coming was welcomed by some tissue paper support from his team mates. Cole pitched a game that was good enough to win anywhere. Walter Alexander, the new Yankee catcher from Kansas City, was behind the bat, and he showed some good stuff yesterday. Most everybody, except perhaps Sweeney and Nunamaker, thought Alexander was pretty good.

The Sox got a run in the third inning. Blackburne hit a grounder to Maisel, who has just returned to the game after a few days' illness. Fritz made a wild throw to Pipp, and Blackburne went to second base. Faber rolled a bunt to Cole, who fired it at Maisel. Blackburne was at the bag as soon as the ball, and Umpire Wallace called him safe. Eddie Murphy whacked a single to right centre, which scored Blackburne.

Fournier walked in the sixth, and J. Collins sacrificed. After Felsch flied out to Cook, Mayer singled, scoring Fournier. In the eighth, Shano Collins banged out a triple with two out, and although Cole walked Felsch, the next batter, he settled down and pitched himself out of the difficulty. The score:

Tigers Take Lead, Then It Rains.

BOSTON, Aug. 2.—Rain stopped today's game after the seventh inning, ten minutes after Detroit had jumped into a lead of 5 runs to 3. The Tigers scored three runs in the sixth off the deliveries of Collins and Leonard. Boston knocked Dauss from the box in the third, but was unable to profit from the pitching of Boland. This was Shriners' day, and Elpho Temple presented Cobb, Speaker, and Gardner with diamond studded emblems of the order and President Lannin of the Red Sox with a mahogany clock. Score:

DODGERS RECOVER FROM BRIEF SLUMP

Ed Pfeffer's Pitching So Effective That Reds Are Unable to Get a Run.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 2.—Ed Pfeffer, selected by Wilbert Robinson to do the hurling for the Dodgers this afternoon, was successful in fine style. He held the Reds completely under his control the entire route, and at no time was he in danger of being scored against except possibly in the final round, when, with two men on bases—one on third and one on second—and only one out, he caused Red Killifer to hit into a double play. While Pfeffer mowed down the enemy at the plate his teammates did good work at the bat. Grasping every opportunity that presented itself and taking advantage of the openings, Robbie's men scored four runs, while Herzog's crew were treated to a coat of whitewash.

Buck Herzog handed the contest to the visitors in the fifth inning, when his wild throw paved the way for a tally, which eventually proved enough to beat the Reds. Stengel was the first man up in this inning. He passed up several wide ones and then asked Pete Schneider to put one over. Schneider complied with this request, and the husky Dodger sent a whizzler down to Herzog. In his eagerness to head off the right gardener at first base Buck threw wild and Stengel dashed on to second and a moment later scored with the winning run when Getz sent a single over second base. This victory allowed the Brooklyn aggregation to gain on the league-leading Phillies, who lost to the Cubs.

To make the defeat more complete, Robbie's men, after being blanked from the fifth inning, in the ninth piled up three more tallies, dispelling all hopes the locals may have entertained of overcoming that one-run lead.

To open the ninth O'Mara and Daubert walked. Wheat forced O'Mara, and Cutshaw forced Wheat. Cutshaw stole second. Stengel laced out a triple to centrefield, and Daubert and Cutshaw scored. Getz came through with a single, scoring Stengel. McCarthy brought the round to a close by fanning.

While Pfeffer allowed seven hits, as many as his opponent, Schneider, "would-be new iron man of the National League," Ed kept them scattered, no two of them coming in one inning. The Reds threatened to score in the ninth, but Pfeffer was too strong, and their rally fell short. Groh opened the ninth by coaxing a walk out of Ed. Herzog singled, Groh taking second. Both runners advanced on a passed ball. With runners on third and second and nobody out, it looked good from a Red standpoint. But the hopes that had risen in Herzog's crew soon vanished when Wagner fouled out and Killifer hit into a double play. The score:

CUT PLAYERS' HIGH SALARIES

Milwaukee Club Owner Says That Is the Way to Make Game Pay.

Owners of clubs in the American Association say that lower salaries are necessary to save the game, according to The Milwaukee Leader. Speaking of the plans of the association to make their properties pay, A. F. Timme, President of the Milwaukee club, said:

"It is not the intention of our club or of any club in the Association to give the players starvation salaries. With us it is a question of cutting down expenses or going bankrupt with high salaries. When you consider that we have more than $1,000,000 invested in this Association, and that during five years the owners have not realized 2 per cent. on their investment, you know we must reduce expenses. Some of the owners have been satisfied to make a living salary, take a chance on getting a fair rate on their investment.

"There is only one way to overcome the salary question, and that is to discharge the high-priced player and hire younger talent at lower salaries. I would prefer to see the players' salaries more evenly balanced. An average of $200 to $250 a month would be a reasonable salary."

FEDERAL LEAGUE.

Newark Triumphs in Hard Sixteen-Inning Game Over Chicago.

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—Newark won a hard fought sixteen-inning game from Chicago today, 3 to 2. The visitors tied the score in the ninth inning on three successive singles. In the sixteenth McKechnie singled and Esmond sacrificed him to second. He went to third on Rousch's infield out and scored the winning run when Smith fumbled a slow roller from Scheer. Scheer stole second and reached third on Fritz's wild throw to catch Laporte at first, but Huhn forced Laporte at second.

Except in the first and third innings when bunched hits gave Chicago its two runs, Mosely held the home team safely throughout the long game. Prendergast gave way to a pinch hitter in the ninth and Black finished for Chicago. Score:

15-CENT BALL AT NEWARK.

Federal League Club Reduces Prices and Will Retain Franchise.

All talk of the Federal League leaving Newark was set at rest yesterday when it was announced that Harry F. Sinclair and P. T. Powers, owners of the Newark team, had decided to retain their Newark franchise permanently. Another thing decided upon was a reduction in the prices of admission, to go into effect upon the return of the Newark team from its Western trip Friday. The new scale is to be 15 cents for the bleachers, instead of 25, as heretofore; 25 cents for seats in the extreme sections of the covered stand, for which 50 cents has been charged, while for seats in the main body of the grandstand the price will be 50 cents, a reduction of 25 cents from the former scale. The price of box seats is to be $1, as before.

When the Peps left for their swing around the Federal circuit a month ago there were rumors that Powers and Sinclair were going to give up Newark and seek a more lucrative location, for the attendance, which had been all that could be desired at the start, had fallen off greatly. Poor transportation facilities was the principal cause, and the stories that Powers and Sinclair were ready to quit had the effect of arousing Jersey fans, and the Freeholders of both Essex and Hudson Counties voted to permit the Public Service Railway Company to lay tracks over the Jackson Street Bridge. This will make the ball grounds accessible from all parts of Newark, thus remedying what was regarded as the Feds' greatest handicap.

It was also announced yesterday that the Feds' owners have given Manager Bill McKechnie full authority to strengthen the team by the acquisition of new players.

Joe Jackson Trade Rumor Spiked.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Aug. 2.—Vice President E. S. Barnard of the Cleveland American League Club denied today that any offer has been received from President Charles A. Comiskey of the Chicago Americans for outfielder Joe Jackson of the Indians, as was reported in a story published in Chicago. Barnard says Jackson will not be sold or traded to any club. The Chicago dispatch had it that Comiskey, who is now on a hunting trip, offered $20,000 and several players for Jackson.

BETTER TENNIS BY COACHING

Expert Thinks Teaching Game Would Increase Standard.

College tennis suffers from lack of good coaching, says The Cleveland Plain Dealer. Answering the question, "Why do not colleges have professional coaches in tennis, as they have in other sports?" a veteran said: "Every college sport is loaded down with its coaches. Trainers drawing princely salaries storm over the performances of the track athletes. Frenzy burns itself out as the knowledge of football is imparted to the human machine, the college eleven. Fencing has its specialized corps of professional instructors. Basket ball is played under professional direction. It remains for tennis to have systematic and expert advice.

"It is not long ago that players on college tennis teams were first considered worthy of a college letter. If a man could win the All Comers, or at Longwood, or the intercollegiate singles, it was possible that he might win his insignia. Now the regular men on the tennis teams are sure of their letters.

"With professional coaching we would have more and better material to defend the Davis Cup. How many college players have received professional coaching is a question I cannot answer. George M. Church and Ludlow Vandeventer have had professional coaching, and with results. Church has acquired several methods of his own, too.

"A player who has accomplished much with his natural game is not the ideal pupil the professional thinks. It is almost impossible to revolutionize faulty methods of making certain strokes. It is possible, however, to strengthen a player's game and to add much to natural ability.

"What is the universal sakness among tennis players? Not sustaining the game. Many players will not press a victory home. Once in the lead, they 'loaf.' If they fall behind and are unable to strike into form they soften their game and make a poor finish, instead of working for control. It is always unsound to lower the pitch of a game. It is an old story around the courts, 'I let down on my game, and then I couldn't get started again.' That's the tale of many a match lost by a superior player."

NEWS FOR THE GOLFERS.

When the seniors assemble on the links of the Apawamis Club the latter part of September, they will have a chance to take part in putting competitions. Although the official program has not been issued, it is understood that a portion of two days will be set aside for putting, and it may be that the committee will add driving competitions for classes. The seniors' tournament this year will extend over a period of four days.

The national amateur championship tournament to begin at the Country Club of Detroit the latter part of this month, will probably be a seven-day affair. Some time ago the Executive Committee voted that in the event of the entry being sufficiently large an elimination test would be held on Saturday, Aug. 28. That test, if held, will consist of an eighteen-hole round, in which the sixty-four leaders will earn the right to start in the qualification round on Monday, Aug. 30. There is talk now of having special trains from this city to Detroit.

Holes in one are being made frequently these days. Howard F. Whitney, Secretary of the United States Golf Association, played recently on the St. Regis course, in the Adirondacks. He only had a couple of borrowed clubs, yet from the ninth tee he holed a full midiron shot for a one. This hole is 178 yards long. In a match the other day at Pocono Manor E. W. Loos, a Van Cortlandt Park product, defeated A. J. Elphick, the Shawnee professional, 2 up and 1 to play. Loos got a 71, but the best part of the round was the making of the 223-yard eighth hole in a single stroke. In June, while practicing for the open championship at Baltusrol, Loos made the third hole in a single stroke.

NEW YORK, TUESDAY, AUGUST 3, 1915.

ANOTHER SHIP PURCHASE FIGHT.

I am more than ever of the opinion that the Administration Ship Purchase bill was a good measure and is more necessary even now than it was when introduced and debated in Congress.—Senator JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS.

Since then a great deal has happened. Up to July 24 150 foreign ships, over half a million tons, had been admitted to American registry. For eleven months of the fiscal year exports in American vessels increased from $146,696,000 to $246,616,000, an increase of 68 per cent. If there is an American shipyard which is not busy it is not known. From Maine to Maryland, from Delaware to San Francisco, there is but one report of buoyancy and hope in a decadent industry. There could not be a greater contrast than with the conditions when the Ship Purchase bill was rejected, and laid away unwept, unhonored, and unsung. If the bill had passed and the same conditions had followed there would have been a demonstration of the wisdom and necessity of the bill. The bill having been rejected, and the conditions being what they are, there is a similar demonstration that the bill was not needed, and that its defeat was a better stimulus to shipping than its passage would have been.

As to its present need there is less doubt than originally. The magnitude of our export trade is a marvel, and it is all being carried with a diminishing amount of friction and delay. It is true that rates are high. That is because conditions are offering great inducements which stimulate the industry better than any subsidy. High rates are not tax money, and they fall upon those who benefit by the commerce. The passage of the ship bill would not add to this wholesome activity. The Government ships would drive out of the industry more ships than it could add to it. It would do so because Government competition is not on an economic basis. It is thought that Government operation is brilliantly successful when receipts equal expenses, without expectation of profit or replacement of capital.

Yet appears Senator WILLIAMS to say: "I want to see the Government own these ships and have what profit there may be in the transaction." The profit to the Government would be to the loss of the Government's competitors, and the activity now existent would be chilled with fear of the unequal contest with ships capitalized with tax money, and indifferent to loss. It is to be hoped that the Senator's views are personal, and not a sign that the Administration is inviting a repetition of its humiliation.

AN APPEAL TO SUFFRAGISTS.

With the welfare of the nation in mind we respectfully direct the attention of our good friends, the woman suffragists, to this paragraph in the cabled report of the opening of the Russian Duma:

> The first sitting of the Duma, which opened today, holds out promise of work, with the object of promoting the production of military supplies and meeting the military requirements, rather than oratory. * * *

It is desirable that the nation should feel the same confidence in the good promise of the next session of its Senate and Representatives in Congress assembled. There is work cut out for the national legislators to do that will require all their time, and the exercise of all their judgment. As far as possible, extraneous matters should be avoided in their deliberations. No Congress that ever assembled has had more important issues placed before it than the Sixty-fourth Congress will have to consider in its first session. With the kindliest feeling, therefore, we appeal to the suffragists not to persist in their determination to invade Washington on the opening day and force their propaganda upon the minds of the legislators. They can derive no material advantage through Congress. If they are to win their fight they must conquer in the States. Their battleground is not Washington. But they know well, as we all know, that they have many sympathizers among the Senators and Representatives, and there is danger that some of these may be impelled, through their sense of chivalry, to waste the nation's precious time in debating the question. Words spoken in Congress in favor of granting the women the right to vote must be empty words. They can have no practical result. Therefore should the women be not only merciful but sufficiently patriotic to resolve not to interfere with the course of Federal business.

Congress must consider important matters touching our foreign relations, the nation's finances, and the enlargement of our means of national defense. Various details developed in the consideration of these questions will precipitate protracted debates. They are all questions touching the interests of the women as well as those of the men. The suffragists will see, we hope, after thinking the matter over, that the present is not the time for them to force their own cause upon Congress. Let them wait for a more suitable time. If they do wait, it may never be necessary for them to appeal to Congressmen for their unprofitable moral support. If they win in New York State this Fall they may feel that their final victory can be obtained by sticking to a practical line of action.

WILLIAM II. AS DEAN SWIFT.

The reader of the manifesto of WILHELM II. at the end of the first year of the war will find in it little of the brilliant rhetoric or the sharp phrases destined to become international, and perhaps historical, quotations, which, through his long course of encyclopaedic speechmaking, the world has learned to expect from him. For a quarter of a century he has been, we might say, the public orator of Europe, occasionally of Asia and Africa. At times he has sent a wave of gooseflesh over the Powers, sometimes, as in the famous Daily Telegraph interview, over the Fatherland itself.

It is not solely his great place that gives weight to his words. He has a certain gift for words, imagination, a way of putting things. If he is sometimes or often unpruned, excessive, and thrasonical, at other times you seem to feel the army, the fleet, the ambitions, and the unparalleled energies of Germany speaking through him. In his impassioned politico-military defiances, challenges, and proclamations we hear a Hebrew prophet, the oracle of the Hohenzollern, elect of Heaven, a mixture of a minor prophet and EDMUND KEAN.

In his latest composition, edifying of piety and excellent of patriotism, we somehow miss the lyric note, the old sonority. Apollo doesn't always bend the bow. In more than recompense there is a passage which for a savage, Swiftian irony is hard to beat. It is this: "After preparations for a whole decade the coalition Powers, to whom Germany had become too great, believed that the moment had come to humiliate the Empire." In Great Britain and Russia especially this amplitude of preparation will be fully understood.

RUSSIAN ALLUREMENTS.

The Russian bear, though intending to abandon the bone of Warsaw, yet growls so horribly over it, and is so formidable and deliberate in defeat, that the Germans will not be able to glorify their victory. It is possible that they are puzzled by the strategy of Grand Duke NICHOLAS. Their past experiences with him have taught them to be wary. The evacuation of Warsaw has been going on for several weeks. The Germans must have known it. On Thursday, July 15, the Russian Government publicly announced that it would begin on the following Sunday. The news reached the outside world officially on July 20.

Yet the fighting continues. The progress of the Germans is as gallantly contested as if the fate of the Polish capital had not been conceded. Great masses of troops must have been already withdrawn to the new line on the Bug River and to the north, only enough remaining to keep up a rear-guard action. The fierce character of the fighting, especially to the north of Warsaw, is, therefore, very surprising. But more surprising is the fact that the Germans against greatly reduced Russian forces have made headway no faster. This may indicate, as one correspondent suggests, that the German power of offensive has been greatly weakened. That would make the Russians' strategy all the more mysterious.

The probable explanation is that both sides have been shifting troops in large numbers northward toward the Baltic, where the next issue will be decided, and where the prize is the ancient Hanseatic seaport of Riga. This is the second most important Russian port on the Baltic Sea, ranking next to St. Petersburg, only 366 miles away. By means of inland canals Riga is connected with the basins of the Volga and Dnieper Rivers, and by railways it drains the most fertile regions of Southern and Southeastern Russia. Its foreign trade, imports and exports combined, amounts to $125,000,000 a year. It is one of the oldest trading cities in Europe. Bremen merchants founded it in 1158. During the seventeenth century it was a bone of incessant contention between Poland, Sweden, and Russia. It was finally taken by Russia in 1710. Its commercial importance to her as a door of outlet on the Baltic Sea is immeasurable. To lose it would be to suffer partial strangulation. Riga's population is about 300,000, of which Germans constitute 47 per cent. The Russians are only a quarter of the population.

It is supposed that the new Russian defense when reconstructed will be on a line drawn almost due south from Riga through Brest-Litovsk and down the course of the Bug River. Brest-Litovsk is about 375 miles south of Riga and 125 miles east of Warsaw. It is a place to remember. Lying at the junction of the Mukovets and Bug Rivers, and at the intersection of railways communicating with Warsaw, East Prussia, Kiev, and Moscow, and connected by canal with the Dnieper and Vistula Rivers, it is a city of high strategic importance. It is strongly fortified and a great depot of war munitions. There are, or were, huge stores of guns, food, and ammunition there. The city was first mentioned in the eleventh century. In 1245 it was destroyed by the Mongols. In 1379 the Teutonic Knights burned it. It was twice captured by the Swedes. The first Jewish synagogue known in Europe was there. It does a large trade in grain, flax, hemp, wool, tar, and leather. It lies behind the Bug River as Warsaw lies behind the Vistula.

Perhaps it would be no easier to defend Brest-Litovsk than it was to defend Warsaw, other things being equal; but other things are not equal, and wherein they differ it is to the disadvantage of the Germans. This point is nearly as far east of Warsaw as Warsaw is east of the German frontier. Therefore the Germans would be twice as far from home at Brest-Litovsk as they are at Warsaw. But the important matter is that the Russian line, which was stretched very thin to make a huge loop or salient around Warsaw, will be shortened by perhaps 300 miles, and become in proportion thicker. It will be like a rubber band shortened from a length at which it was near the breaking point. If the Germans got to Brest-Litovsk they would still be 700 miles from Moscow. Distance is one of Russia's great allies.

It seems very probable, however, that before attempting any movement east of Warsaw the Germans will make a supreme effort to take Riga. That is where the fighting now is most intense. "Below Bausk, on the "River Dvina, in Courland, we fought "a desperate engagement with the "Germans Friday and Saturday," says the Petrograd War Office in Sunday's bulletin, leading its communication with that information, thereby, perhaps unconsciously, showing what importance was attached to it. That battle was within thirty miles of Riga.

TWO PAINFUL POEMS.

Vindication is a slow pedestrian, usually waiting, in fact, till near the end of the third act. Not often does it proceed so swiftly and unerringly as it has in the case of some observations made in THE NEW YORK TIMES concerning "Is This Mr. Reilly?" with an incidental reference to "Punch in the presence of the passenjare." There has arisen a host of witnesses to confute us, and they have stepped on each other's feet and out of their own mouths have they vindicated us.

The chorus of "Mr. Reilly" appears to be the simplest in the world, but not only can no two persons agree upon it, but each displays a heated certainty about his version, and men who will concede that their religion is wrong will regard it as the last insult if any one questions their version of "Mr. Reilly." This tantalizing chorus, what witchery did PAT ROONEY weave into its construction that men should lose their reason? It seems to fit smoothly into the memory, but only to confuse the minds of men and make them short-breathed and red-faced with old friends. Magic not exactly black but none too white, magic as subtle as that woven into "Punch, brothers," which condemned any one who heard it once to go on hearing it, to keep quoting it, until the frenzy wore off.

Since for some deep psychological reason any question about either of these productions arouses anger deeper than the rage of war, there immediately rushed upon us hordes of indignant letter writers, each denying that there was any question about the Reilly chorus and each giving the correct one; only each gave a different chorus. And on their heels came rushing yet others, denying that there was anything peculiar about "Punch, brothers." Most of these misunderstood the contention and supposed that there was a controversy over the authorship of that great poem; and with a contempt that bit deep they informed us that there was no such controversy, that it was written by MARK TWAIN.

But it wasn't, and out of their own mouths they have erected a controversy where there was none before. MARK TWAIN did not write it, and never pretended to write it. In the famous skit in which he dealt with the irritating problem raised by this exasperating jingle he said that it was a newspaper jingle, and it was. MARK TWAIN did not know who the author was. There really was a sign in the horse cars of the seventies directing the conductors to punch "in the presence of the passenjer," and specifying "a buff trip slip for a three-cent fare, a pink trip slip for a five-cent fare," and so on. "Why, it's poetry!" exclaimed one of a party of newspaper men one night, studying the sign as they went home. They assembled its lines in metrical form, added some improvements, such as

> Punch, brothers, punch, punch with care,
> All in the presence of the passenjare, and one of them, ISAAC H. BROMLEY, published it in The New York Tribune, where MARK TWAIN saw it and let it loose upon the world. A maddening thing; it filled nearly as many insane asylums as "Mr. Reilly." And now, thirty years after the question of whether Mr. Reilly was Terence or John, and whether he was looking quite well or cut quite a swell, has died out; forty years after MARK TWAIN got "Punch, conductor," out of his head by reciting it to an orphan asylum, and when the world is at last able to forget its disquiet over these problems, there arise vaunting and toplofty persons to assert that there is not, and never was, a problem connected with either. It is well if they can quaff a kind nepenthe and forget the hot and rebellious dissensions of the seventies and eighties; but let them not instruct those less fortunate and of better memory.

TWO GOVERNORS.

When a multitude of strikers from the great plants of the Standard Oil Company at Bayonne assailed and endangered life and property, when private violence and private war reigned over a considerable part of that city, and the local authorities were pitifully poor in force to suppress the outbreak, the Sheriff of the county appealed again and again and in vain to the Governor to send a detachment of militia to support the civil powers.

The inevitable conclusion of men familiar with official timidities and used to seeing politicians step gingerly over eggs was that the Governor was cautious about offending "labor," that a vision of lost votes kept him from what seemed to be his plain duty. It happened, though he had no means of knowing it would happen, that the Sheriff, by his courage, readiness, tact, and strong personality, impressed himself vividly upon the strikers, and got them, or most of them, back to work at better wages. That was no merit of the Governor, against whom remains the imputation or suspicion, warranted or not, of an inertia bred of political motives.

When at Massena, on the State Canal, a mob of strikers, whose temper may be judged from their drowning a fellow-workman who had refused to "go out," had seized and injured the plant, and the Sheriff, some of whose officers were imprisoned in it, could not control the rioters, he had only to telephone Governor WHITMAN that life and property were being destroyed or threatened. The Governor sent two companies of militia at once. We may censure the not infrequent cowardice of Sheriffs who cry for the militia because they are afraid vigorously to put down, or try to put down, a mob good for so many votes. But when a capable and brave Sheriff certifies that the situation is beyond his control, then the Governor who acts promptly deserves well of the State. And the other kind of Governor, who hesitates, who palters with disorder and coddles anarchy—well, it may be doubted if he gains as many votes as he loses, and he loses something more than votes sometimes.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Is It Can't or Won't Understand?

It is not only over in Germany that mistakes as to American sentiments and intentions are made, and the German inability—or refusal—to understand us is seemingly not, as has been supposed, a matter of geography and distance, but one of constitution and temperament. At any rate the editors in the capitals of the several German States evolve out of their inner consciousness conclusions as to what we think and purpose that are no more or differently inaccurate than are those carried over to Berlin by agents specially selected by the German Ambassador in Washington for their imagined competence to reveal and explain us. And long citizenship or even birth here does not remove the curious difficulty.

For weeks past representative German-Americans have been declaring that though the urban East is pro-Ally, the farmers all over the country are on the other side, at least to the extent of supporting the German contention that our exports of war material are wicked and unneutral. Yet when the mysterious collection of German sympathizers that calls itself "Labor's National Peace Council" manages to get a lot of Granger officials together, those officials vehemently refuse to pass resolutions condemning the traffic in arms and denouncing the Administration for permitting it. What they did vote was merely an expression of their preference on general principles for peace to war, and an amiable desire that nothing illegal should be done for any of the belligerents!

So fades away the confidently painted picture of some millions of American farmers to whom the Germans could look for countenance, if not for aid. They are equally well informed about the Middle West, if the press of that section can be trusted, and as for the South—well, the South, or some of it, seems to be thinking cotton, not thoughts, just now, but that it's thinking German is the wildest of delusions.

When Roads Are Closed for Repairs.

Recent travelers by automobile along the Albany Post Road are glad, of course, that in several stretches of its course needed repairs are in progress. That thus they are forced to turn off from the known route and to make long detours through the back country and over roads upon which the reformative influence of the motor car has not yet been exerted is an annoyance to them, indeed, but they would endure it with joyful resignation if even a little pains were taken to decrease the resulting inconveniences and dangers.

Nobody's intellectual powers would be strained, and no heavy expense incurred, if before the temporary closing of part of a much-traveled road like this one the roads to which travel was to be diverted were put in at least decent condition. Should the rural taxpayer protest too bitterly against using his money for that purpose, it might be omitted, but he could hardly object to the placing of signs along the new route, so that the detour, besides involving what may be called inevitable delay and discomfort, might not also lead to "getting lost," the misadventure which tries the automobilist's temper and patience more, perhaps, than any other. That has been for some time, now, a common experience just north of Ossining, and on the back roads in that region, especially late at night, the wanderings of a strayed motor car may be long, painful, and even a little perilous.

The days are past when there was a general inclination to say of automobilists, "Good enough for 'em!" no matter what, less than death or serious injury, might happen to them. In the stern school of experience the motor folk have acquired a fair amount both of caution and of consideration, and, though they still have something to learn in both respects, appreciation of them as distributers of money has so increased that their sins are no longer judged more severely than those of other people. Having become themselves more regardful of others, they are more regarded—are helped, instead of hindered, along their way. That they can fairly claim a special assistance when forced out into unfamiliar and uncharted territory seems not yet, however, to have occurred to anybody upon whom the giving of it would naturally devolve.

Why not—to make a somewhat venturesome suggestion—impose it upon the contractors who do the road building or the road repairing that necessitates long detours? They could at least mark the new routes with adequate signs, and not many of them would be ruined if they also put some lights at the worst places.

Defying the Scorn of the Critics.

After the hot, but ludicrously inconclusive war that was waged by the professional and amateur critics ten years ago over the age and origin of the statue which then came to be known as the Linton Venus, about the last fate that anybody would have prophesied for the pretty creature was that at last she would fall into the very determinative possession of JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER.

That eminent financier had never been accused, even by the harshest of his antagonists, of taking any interest in art of the kind that makes as generous revelation of feminine charms as did the creator of this Venus, whoever he may have been, and it would have been assumed with confidence, had anybody given the subject any thought at the time, which certainly nobody did, that Mr. ROCKEFELLER, trained as he was, would have been grieved, if not seriously shocked, at the sight of such a statue. It seems, however, that his aestheticism is broader than had been supposed.

While, of course, Mr. ROCKEFELLER'S purchase of the problematic marble does not go any distance at all toward supporting the claims of its admirers as to its age and its sculptor's name, if he did pay, as reported, $75,000 for it, then one can be sure that his estimate of its beauty is high and his appreciation of it sincere. It also proves that Mr. ROCKEFELLER, in judging a work of art, displays a courage and uses a measure of value apparently unknown among those whose reputations—and incomes—depend on fixing a name and a date to every picture and statue submitted to their inspection. When they know, or think they know, who made either the one or the other, then they know just what to say about it, but in cases of ignorance or uncertainty, most of them either cautiously refrain from expressing any opinion at all or else boldly manifest disdain.

Why a work of art can have a prominent place in a museum while labeled with a great name, and why the same work of art is scornfully thrown out of that museum when somebody demonstrates the label's inaccuracy—these are questions that have never been answered to the satisfaction of any except the professional critics and their more devoted followers. For others it is hard to see what difference it makes who carved the statue or painted the picture—hard to believe that it does make any difference except as to the price that will be paid by people who think much of names and little or nothing of intrinsic merit.

High Scandal in Japan.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Tokyo dispatch in today's TIMES is open for some rectifications.

First—Viscount K. Oura, who resigned his portfolio of the Cabinet, had not been the Minister of Justice, as the dispatch purports him, but had been the Minister of Home Affairs since last February. Mr. G. Ojaki is the Minister of Justice.

Secondly—As to the cause of Viscount Oura's resignation, the telegram seems to me to have some flaw in its accuracy. The bribery case in connection with the elections referred to in it culminated in a vain effort to impeach him in the special session of the Diet in May by the Opposition parties. The adjournment of the Diet was soon followed by a sensational disclosure of another scandal when three seceders of the Opposition parties were suddenly arrested for the charge, it was inferred, of letting themselves be bribed by a Government representative to exert their influence in favor of the Army Expansion bill the last Fall. The Public Prosecutor's Office had recently been carrying on a vigorous investigation of the case, and, if I am not mistaken in my inference, based upon the latest papers from Japan, the incident referred to in the telegram must have been in connection with this case.

Influential as the position is he has been enjoying, Viscount Oura is one of the most stiff-necked, autocratic bureaucrats of the present Japan, and it was a surprise to us when Count Okuma selected him first as the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce in forming the Cabinet two years ago. Police and governance were synonyms to him.

While I am ashamed of going into detail about such a disgrace to my country like this I find consolation in the deathknell which the scandal may have knolled upon his political career detrimental to the progress of democracy in Japan. KENJI OGOMORI.

HARBORED SHIPS.

Still, as great birds with folded wings,
Their masts black spears against the moon,
They ride at anchor, on a silvered sea,
Wrapped in the lapping waves' low croon.

Beyond, the hills lie—fold on fold
Against the Night's dark star-pierced sky;
Long since, the two-score village lights have died,
And hushed at last the sea-gull's wailing cry.

The Dawn will shine upon a flock of wind-curved sails,
On clustered, pale-faced women, filled with dread,
Far out beyond the harbor's circling hills
The ocean thunders deep—above its dead!

EVIL OF GERMAN TEACHING.

A Reply to Dean Russell's Praise of Soul-Leveling Education.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In today's issue you quote Dean Russell's praise of the German school system.

With many of us it is a grave question whether Dean Russell's admiration for this system is not a serious menace, so frequently and openly expressed as it is from his position in the Teachers College.

He says: "I deplore German militarism as I dislike the English navy. With both out of the way there would be no war; with both present the problem is to find what makes the Germans willing to sacrifice everything to succeed on the field of battle."

Passing over the inevitable inference from this sentence that he regards the English navy as equally responsible with German militarism for causing the war, what solution of this problem does he offer? Why are Germans willing to sacrifice everything to succeed in battle? I quote again: "The end sought by the State is unquestionably respect for authority and a confident reliance upon a power above and beyond the individual."

The problem thus turns out to be no problem at all. The people were thoroughly taught to resign to others their consciences and ethical perceptions and go it blind under orders.

This German conception of authority is, of course, the very opposite of the American aim, which is to teach children to have no respect whatever for authority in which they do not share.

In vain I search his remarks for any statement of this principle. On the contrary he says: "If anywhere in the world or at any time in history a parallel can be found to this superb machine for the education of a nation I do not know of it." In another place he says: "You must admire the perfection of the machine which more than all else enables that empire today to defy the world."

I submit that for a teacher of teachers to call a machine which does the devil's work on a scale more conscienceless and deadlier than the world has ever seen "superb," and to call upon us to "admire" it, is a menace to American education.

The Junior Republic at Freeville has been in operation about twenty years, serving as a model for other republic's in other States, and for the moral education of the entire youth of America. Today, in the midst of its prosperity, those principles of self-government for which it stands are closely adhered to under the inspired management of its founder, William R. George.

Hundreds of schools throughout America, including the school system of William Wirt of Gary, Ind. teach discipline and morality according to these ideas in opposition to the German theory, which according to American ideas produces a criminal docility in the entire population, a mechanical activity assimilating them more nearly to bees or ants than to human beings.

Lungmotors Needed at Beaches.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Great indignation is felt and much censure is justly being directed at the cause of the death of three people on a roller coaster at Coney Island recently. I desire to point out that where one person rides on "coasters," probably three hundred people go bathing at Coney Island and near-by beaches and at other public bathing beaches in New York. I find on inquiry that with the exception of a few places (perhaps 1 per cent. of all) there is no approved lungmotor for use in cases of drowning.

I saw in The Chicago Daily News today an interview with Dr. W. A. Evans, formerly Health Commissioner of Chicago, and Dr. John F. Golden, Dr. J. B. Murphy's chief assistant, who were first on the scene of last Saturday's terrible Eastland disaster, that lungmotors saved practically 100 lives of those who were apparently dead from drowning or suffocation.

Why should a public beach be permitted to run without the very latest resuscitating device at hand, especially when the cost is so small? Why shouldn't there be a law compelling each beach to be so equipped?

An Annual Firing Day.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As an experienced member of the Cloakmakers' Union for fifteen years, I would like to voice my ideas concerning the coming conflict between the union and the Protective Association. As I understand, the trouble is: Shall the employer have the right to discharge his employe?

If we discuss the question with reference to both sides, we see that no justice is done to the employer if he cannot discharge his employe; nor is any justice done to the workingman if he is continually to be discharged by his employer. Therefore, the only reasonable compromise that can be made is that one day in the year be set aside, upon which day the employer shall have the right to discharge any of his employes he desires. Seeing The Times.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

To observe minutely the detailed processes involved in the making of a modern newspaper offers an unusual opportunity for practical information of very distinct value, especially to teachers. Each of the five visits of the Columbia University Summer session students to THE NEW YORK TIMES offered this peculiar opportunity. These visits were, accordingly, much appreciated and heartily enjoyed. I wish, therefore, in behalf of the students and in behalf of the university, to thank you for making these opportunities possible.

The Few Who Rock the Boat.

From The St. Louis Republic.

It seems incredible that 100 citizens out of a population of upward of three-quarters of a million could create so much of "sound and fury" as have the members of the Neutrality League of St. Louis. The Chairman of the league's Entertainment Committee for its anti-war day has admitted that the organization has "about 100 members," but from the noise they have managed to make the average citizen naturally concluded that there must be a small army of them.

There is no need of organizations in this city, this State and this nation to preserve American neutrality. It has been and is being preserved in spite of, rather than because of, such movements. The hundred St. Louis "boat rockers" should sit down. Their sole contribution to the situation is to stiffen the German Foreign Office in its Dernburg-born belief that there is a growing chasm in American thought. We know, and the members of the league know, what their own final action would be were we drawn into war even against their kindred across the seas. John C. Meyers has expressed it when he stated that his sons had served in the American Army and Navy and that he would see that they fought under the Stars and Stripes against his native land if the call came. Everybody in America knows this spirit, but in Berlin—that is another matter. The United States and the Imperial German Government are opposing each other in an admittedly grave situation. Every evidence of division in the United States strengthens the stand of the German Foreign Office. Here in America we understand our Neutrality League members better than they do in Berlin, and we counsel them to sit down.

WHAT GERMANY THOUGHT A NAVY WAS FOR.

Overtures From England to Limit Sea Armament and Make Commerce Immune in War Were Rejected by the Imperial Government.

By J. M. ROBERTSON, M. P.

Some use has lately been made in the United States of certain ante-bellum discussions on matters of naval policy, to the end of proving that the guilt of hostile relations between Britain and Germany lies with the former. As we are likely to hear more of the matter after Mr. Lloyd George's challenging statement in his speech on munitions, it is important that the particular point as to naval policy should be cleared up. Mr. George's declaration is that for years past Germany has maintained a calculated air of friendliness toward Great Britain while doing her utmost to prepare for war. The German contention, zealously maintained by pro-Germans in the United States, is that, on the contrary, British jealousy of German trade had all along inspired British policy, and that we on this side were all along eagerly planning for an opportunity to use our naval power to destroy that trade. Some of us who strove long and patiently in the past to bring about a friendly understanding between the two Powers on a naval basis are in a position, I think, to disprove completely the German assertion.

That assertion founds itself, I understand, on the substance of a declaration made in February of 1914 by Professor Brentano, then a respected representative of German social science in England. Interviewed for The Daily Chronicle as to the possibility of an agreement between Britain and Germany for a restriction of naval armaments, he avowed himself very unhopeful of any such development. At the same time he put forward a plea for a change of policy on the part of Britain which, he in effect promised, would lead to the desired result. All that was required, in his opinion, was to abolish or abandon the right to capture commerce at sea in time of war. These are his words:

> If England does not recognize private property at sea it means, in the case of war, she wishes to destroy Germany's competition in the commercial world. What is more natural than that, in these circumstances, Germany should want to increase her navy to defend her growing commerce? One cannot say anything against it. If Great Britain would agree that private property is immune at sea, as it is on land, then you would soon see a change. Let your Government express its views in favor of that policy, and call an international conference to regulate piracy. Then naval estimates would fall.

As one of those who strove in England for the joint adoption of the policy in question, I am bound to state that Professor Brentano's declaration, doubtless made in entire good faith, is a completely misleading account of the situation. It is perfectly true that those of us who had pleaded for the new policy in the House of Commons, years before, had avowed that in our opinion the usage of capture of commerce in naval war gave Germany a justification for her naval expansion. Sir F. E. Smith, with whom in that matter I collaborated, declared, for instance, that were he a German he would spend his last mark in building warships to protect his commerce from our cruisers so long as the right of "capture" was recognized by international law. But the historic truth is that the German Government never gave the slightest countenance to the suggestion that international abandonment of capture of commerce in naval war would in any degree modify its policy of naval expansion. On the contrary, it definitely refused to consider any such arrangement.

The facts, which I had some special means of knowing, may be briefly put thus. While Sir Edward Grey in the House of Commons always met the appeal for abolition of capture of commerce by the argument that the abandonment of that practice would deprive this country of an important element of power in naval war, he had expressly intimated to the German Government his readiness to make the concession provided that it were made the basis of an agreement for the restriction of naval armaments. It was with that knowledge that, at the Inter-Parliamentary Conference held in the Reichstag at Berlin in 1909, I read a paper pleading for the joint adoption by Britain and Germany of the proposed policy. Never had the project seemed more hopeful. The official German hospitality given to the conference was of the most gracious kind; and a number of German publicists expressed their sympathy with the British views. Yet it all came to nothing by reason of the negative attitude of the German Government.

When, in the year 1911, there was published here an English translation of Dr. Wehberg's very able treatise on "Capture in War on Land and Sea," I not only contributed a preface but sought by correspondence to enlist German non-official support for the appeal to the German Government to come to an agreement on the basis of abandonment of capture of commerce. The response showed the complete lack of foundation for Professor Brentano's optimistic forecast of 1914. Sir Edward Grey had openly put forward in the House of Commons his avowal of readiness to give up capture of commerce on condition of a joint restriction of armaments. Yet not only did the German Government steadfastly refuse to consider the proposal, but my principal correspondent declared that it would be worse than useless for non-official Germans, however distinguished, to advocate such a course. It would only, he declared, strengthen the official resistance. Of this resistance I presume Professor Brentano was unaware when he made his declaration of last year. Great Britain had "agreed" to do what he asked, provided only that the further "change" were agreed to. And it had been persistently refused.

If Professor Brentano should still maintain that, without securing any German consent to a restriction of naval armaments, Britain ought to have separately decreed the abolition of capture of commerce so far as Britain was concerned, I need but point out (1) that all the evidence goes to show that we should certainly not have "seen a change" in German policy, and (2) that for the chief naval Power thus to denude itself of an element of naval force while the chief rival Power stood uncommitted to any change of policy whatever, would have been a piece of empty Quixotism. Even if Germany had ratified a treaty for the simple abolition of capture of commerce she would avowedly have carried on her program of naval construction. And to what end? On Professor Brentano's own showing, naval expansion must either be justified by defensive needs or be attributable to aggressive designs. If German commerce were freed from fear of British aggression, what other defensive need was predicable? Had Germany represented that she had still occasion to protect her commerce from France, the matter would promptly have been carried to the stage of an agreement with France. In that quarter there would have been no trouble. But no such suggestion was ever made. Germany simply refused to consider the question of naval restriction at all.

It may be left to judicial minds in all the neutral countries to pronounce as to which Power gave evidence of hostile designs. The British proposals would have left the two States relatively as strong at sea as before, both being simply relieved of the burden of continued expansion. Of a British invasion of Germany, no German ever pretended to have any apprehension. On the other hand the feasibility of a German invasion of Britain, so often asserted by Germans, was the standing justification, together with the old risk of capture of commerce, for British naval expenditure. Yet the British Government took the initiative in proposing a restriction which would obviously have limited even our defensive power, since an invasion could be a matter of a multiplicity of transports not classed as ships of war. The complete and persistent refusal to negotiate tells plainly and solely of German determination to prepare for naval war.

It is hardly necessary to point out that if a simple agreement to abandon capture of commerce had been come to, there is not the slightest reason now for believing that it would have been respected by Germany in any war into which she entered with the expectation of fighting Britain. Of course, she desired and hoped for our neutrality in the present struggle. But if we had remained neutral and the war had gone in her favor, who will pretend to believe that she would have faced a future war against Britain with any intention of respecting our sea-borne food supplies?

The negotiations over the Declaration of London revealed once more the determination of her Government to guard against any genuine naval settlement. One of the proposals of that Declaration was that food supplies not destined for military bases should not be treated as contraband of war. And the main reason, I understand, for the ultimate abandonment of the scheme was that the German Government would come to no agreement as to which ports should be recognized as non-military. That Government, of course, might very well argue that supplies to any British port could be turned to any military account. But such an argument carried with it the corollary that the only security for permanent peace relations between the two countries would have been the joint policy of restriction of armaments which Britain proposed and which Germany refused to entertain.

More recent German deliverances plainly go to establish the conviction that in the German military mind there was a fixed purpose of an ultimate naval war with Britain. The favorite protest of academic Germans, who so constantly express the ruling ideal, has been that Germany cannot endure the "intolerable yoke" of Britain in world-politics. That "yoke" can in no imagination represent anything but British power at sea; and German militarism, on its own showing, can thus have contemplated nothing short of a naval equality which should place British food supplies at the mercy of Germany, while no amount of naval power could put Britain at any equivalent advantage. For six months past we have had from the German press alternate curses of our "wicked starvation war" and boasts that Germany cannot be starved by any blockade. No such boast could be made in Britain save in terms of naval predominance. The destruction of that predominance, therefore, was the ultimate German objective. The problem had been put to the test before 1914.

PERILS OF EXCURSION BOATS

Suggestions from a Witness of the Panic on the Grand Republic.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As a passenger on the Grand Republic yesterday, at the time of the panic on board, I desire to set forth a few points that seem to me worth consideration in connection with any possible repetition of such a situation on this or other excursion boats.

Witnesses appear to agree that the cause of the panic was substantially as follows: A man, apparently a deck hand, became involved in a fight, women nearby becoming frightened and raising cries which quickly stampeded the crowd. The point to lay emphasis upon is that the fight which started the panic was not the first in which this man was involved on this trip. After a fracas just a few minutes earlier, when he had been subdued by boat officers, he was confined in the crews' quarters forward and ordered to remain below. The mistake made was that, though the man was very evidently beside himself and in an ugly and dangerous mood, no one in authority appeared to be watching or guarding him, and he was soon at liberty to start the new trouble which resulted in the panic. My first point, therefore, is that masters and officers of excursion boats, especially when crowded with women and children, have a peculiar responsibility upon them to watch suspicious or dangerous characters, especially if they are members of their own crews.

It is not in the interests of prohibition, but in the interest of the public safety and comfort that I suggest in the second place that beer or liquor should not be sold on excursion boats, and that, more particularly, members of the crew should not be allowed to drink on board. These boats are never out more than a few hours and it would certainly cause no great hardship even for a drinking man to wait for his drinks until he had reached the journey's end.

Such a sudden and complete panic as occurred is, of course, almost impossible to control. The difficulty was, at least on the lower deck, which was the only one that came under my own direct observation, that no officer or other person could make himself heard effectively above the general pandemonium. Would it not help if the chief boat's officer on each deck could have a megaphone handy so that he could more effectively make him

APHRODITE STAMPED AS GENUINE ANTIQUE

Government Admits Rockefeller Statue Free, Declaring It 'More Than 100 Years Old.'

$60,000 PAID FOR TREASURE

Appraiser's Expert Ignores Disagreements of Artists Over Its Authenticity.

Ignoring the disagreements of art critics regarding the authenticity of the famous statue of Aphrodite when the creation was exhibited at the National Arts Club here in the Spring of 1905, the United States Customs authorities at this port, yesterday gave John D. Rockefeller, the purchaser of the statue, an unqualified certificate of antiquity for the work, which is to adorn a pedestal in the centre of Mr. Rockefeller's Temple of Love on his estate at Pocantico Hills.

Aphrodite arrived from London early yesterday morning, and no time was lost by Frank G. Montag, of Montag & Cassidy, Custom House brokers, in making formal entry at the Custom House. Mr. Montag then had the statue carried by truck to the Appraiser's Stores, where it was turned over to Daniel Robinson, the Government's expert examiner of sculptures. The examiner was at once impressed with the undoubted age of the statue. During the examination it was discovered that the tips of some of the fingers were missing, and that there were also some other blemishes.

The invoice showed that Mr. Rockefeller paid $60,000 for the art treasure. There also were many affidavits attesting the age of the work, all apparently tending to prove that it is in fact the production of Praxiteles, chiseled, approximately in the fourth century B. C. At any rate, Mr. Rockefeller's foreign representatives proved their knowledge of the tariff law's requirements by having a mass of documents to support their contention as to the age of the piece. Mr. Robinson made the formal return prescribed by the law that the piece is "more than 100 years old," an "artistic antiquity," and a "work of art" within the meaning of the free list of the Tariff act of 1913.

There was a possibility that the customs men might hold Aphrodite for duty at 15 per cent. as a sculptured work of art, but not of sufficient age to warrant free entry. In that case Mr. Rockefeller would have been under the necessity of contesting the customs return before the Board of General Appraisers and the Federal Court of Customs Appeals.

Deputy Appraiser George W. Wolf said that all of the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury for the admittance duty free of art treasures had been complied with by Mr. Rockefeller's representatives, and that so far as the United States customs are concerned the statue is an antique.

As the officials at the Appraiser's Stores did not care to assume responsibility for the safe-keeping of the statue over night, a permit of delivery was granted Mr. Montag, who at once stowed Aphrodite in a carefully protected case on its journey to Pocantico Hills, where it will be mounted within a few days.

About two weeks ago, Mr. Rockefeller figured in a Customs controversy over the admittance of a large marble fountain, a reproduction of the Oceanus fountain in the Royal Boboli Gardens in Florence. The reproduction was done by R. Romanelli and E. Orlandini, from the original by Gianbologna in the sixteenth century. In that case, Mr. Rockefeller claimed free entry as a replica or reproduction of a work of art, but the board held that the fountain, while a work of art, must be regarded as a "copy" and stand duty at 15 per cent. ad valorem. While the Customs authorities have released the fountain, it is understood that Mr. Rockefeller will contest the board's finding before the Customs Court of Appeals, as certain experts regard the paragraphs of the law as very close and possibly conflicting.

THE LITTLE THIMBLE BEGINS FREE SHOWS

Crowd So Large That Tickets Must Be Asked For Hereafter at Box Office.

YOUNG ARTISTS INTRODUCED

Dwight L. Fiske's Musical Settings and J. W. Draper's Poems on the First Program.

A large audience gathered yesterday afternoon for the formal opening of Edison's Little Thimble Theatre, at 10 Fifth Avenue. The word had gone out that Charles Edison's institution, founded to spread music in Greenwich Village among people who want it and can't pay for it, and to give a hearing to young American poets and composers, was to give free performances.

The auditorium, which seats 250 persons, was so crowded that Mr. Edison and Guido Bruno, manager of the theatre, announced after the program was over there would be no more invitations with R. S. V. P.'s sent out, as has been done, but hereafter admission while still free would be only by application for tickets to the office of the Thimble Theatre.

The chief attractions were John W. Draper, the poet of New York University, who on the heights overlooking the picturesque reaches of the Harlem River indites poems "artfully luring and lush as sin," to quote one of his own lines; and music by Dwight Lewis Fiske. The feature was three songs of Robert Louis Stevenson, which Mr. Fiske set to music when Stevenson was in his last illness and played once for the writer as he lay dying. These songs, "Shadow March," "My Bed is a Boat," and "Looking Glass River," were sung by Helen Dutton, a soprano, with Mr. Fiske accompanying her at the piano. Later Miss Dutton sang three songs by Mr. Fiske, "Little Boy Blue," "Coming, Coming," and "The Bird."

One of the principal purposes of the Little Thimble Theatre is to furnish a hearing to young American composers who have been handicapped by the difficulty of getting a start in their own country without a foreign reputation, and the recital of Mr. Fiske's songs is the first move in that direction.

Mr. Draper, who was heartened by the presence of the greater part of the membership of the Andiron Club of New York University, an organization which seeks to co-ordinate the artistic spirit of that institution, read five poems from "Exotics," a work which, according to the author's preface, "aims to place the printed words on the white paper." The poems from this volume were "Nocturne," "Venetian Song," "April Wind," "The Yellow Orchid," and "The Goblet." From his other poems Mr. Draper read "The Will o' the Wisp," "The Glass of Absinthe," and "What Wouldst Thou Be?" He also spoke on "Symphony in Sounds and Symbols."

Other features of the program were the overture from "Galatea," the "Glow Worm Intermezzo," the "Evening Star" from "Tannhauser," Massenet's "Elegie," Verdi's "O Tu Palermo," Mendelsohn's "Auf Fluegeln des Gesanges," Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsodie No. 2, Puccini's "Un Bel di Vedremo," Penn's "Ta-tao," Wieniawski's "Le Ménétrier," and Paull's "Ben Hur Chariot Race" March.

Among those present were Mme. Apel, an Anglo-Polish sculptress; N. Gouthier, a Parisian composer, Professor Racca of the University of Naples, several members of the New York University Faculty, and a considerable number of Summer visitors to New York.

The program was decorated with a sketch of a dancing girl in crinoline and pantalettes, which occasioned some mild shocks among several of the guests. Next time, it is promised by the management, the stage will be draped with curtains designed by Clara Tice, in which the village artist will depart from here favorite motives and will rely on black butterflies and green peacocks.

DANCING AT THE PALACE.

Lopokova and Vadie in the Bill This Week.

Among the various arts that serve to entertain the patron of the two-a-day, dancing has rather the best of it in this week's bill at the Palace, what with Lydia Lopkova, the tiny Russian danseuse, playing a return engagement, and Mlle. Maryon Vadie making her appearance there. Mlle. Vadie is a graceful and limited dancer, and her attendant coryphees deserve the applause that rewards their share of the attractively arranged program.

The bill runs distinctly short of laughter before the evening is over, for nothing precisely uproarious has been written for the ample Stella Mayhew to say or sing, but, of course, Ben Welch is funny. Joseph E. Howard, abetted by Mabel McCane, who has a most talented wardrobe, sings some of his old successes. He has written more than a generous share of the bill in the day, and e waves these old laurels to good effect. And then there is Houdini, the most thoroughly extricable man in vaudeville. He emerged from the local tank last evening after he had been submerged in a stout packing case, all carefully roped, nailed, and weighted to the apparent satisfaction of an apparently critical and observent committee which had volunteered from the audience.

Three New Plays Produced.

Three plays that will have New York hearings shortly were presented in out-of-town theatres last night. In the Broadway Theatre, Long Branch, David Belasco made his first production of the new season when he presented the new Smith-Mapes comedy, "The Boomerang," with a cast that included Arthur Byron, Wallace Eddinger, Martha Hedman, and Ruth Shepley. "Some Baby," a farce that will reopen the Fulton Theatre next week, was acted in the Savoy Theatre, Asbury Park. In it appeared Frank Lalor, Jessie Ralph, Ernest Stallard, Sam Edwards, and Francine Larrimore. "Common Clay," the Harvard prize play by Cleves Kinkead, which A. H. Woods will present in the Republic Theatre, with Jane Cowl and John Mason in the principal rôles, was presented in the Apollo Theatre in Atlantic City.

Weber and Fields in Vaudeville.

Weber and Fields are reunited again, this time for a vaudeville engagement. The comedians of music hall memory will appear in the Palace Theatre next week in some of the most popular of their old scenes. It is said they are to receive the highest salary ever paid a team in the varieties. Since their reunion for the Weberfields jubilee several years ago Mr. Fields has been appearing without his partner, who has been producing plays.

THE WEEK IN THE THEATRES.

The Summer attractions are beginning to give way before the advance of the new season. This will be the last week of the farce, "Twin Beds," at Harris Theatre, while the Behman show will quit the Columbia in two weeks, after the longest engagement a burlesque entertainment has ever enjoyed in New York. The "Follies" will remain in the New Amsterdam till late in September. No closing time has yet been announced for "It Pays to Advertise," which is nearing its 400th performance in Cohan's Theatre.

The new Palace program includes the names of some of vaudeville's favorites. Lydia Lopokova, the delightful little Russian dancer, offers a program of dances, and Harris Nordstrom gives "her specialty, "Bits of Acting." Then there are Houdini in some mystifying tricks, Ben Welch, in one of his familiar Hebrew characterizations, and Joseph E. Howard and Mabel McCane, in a new singing specialty.

Hatry Fox and Yansci Dolly are again in the varieties. They are to be seen this week in the New Brighton Theatre in a skit combining song, dance, and patter. Belle Baker has some new songs written for her use by Irving Berlin. "On the School Playground" is the title of a miniature musical comedy in which Ed Brandel and Muriel Morgan appear. Ralph Riggs and Katherine Witchie do clever dancing.

Bert Fitzgibbon and his hat are adding to the gaiety of nations in Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre this week. The De Pace Opera Company is a band of Neapolitan singers and instrumentalists who give a program of classical and popular numbers. A musical skit entitled "The Firefly" is presented by Harry Hayward and company.

"Hearts Ablaze" is the title of the new picture offering in the Vitagraph Theatre. The picture tells a story of court and cloister life, and is by Eugene Mullin. "The Goddess" is in its thirteenth chapter, and there are several shorter pictures on the program.

PROMINENT WOMEN FORM DEFENSE BAND

Special Relief Society Starts Campaign to Further Men's Preparedness Work.

COMPILES VOLUNTEER LIST

Available Nurses, Sewing Clubs, and Homes for Hospitals in the Data Being Gathered.

The Special Relief Society, of which Mrs. William Alexander is the President, announced yesterday the beginning of a campaign "to arouse women of America to a full realization of the importance of immediate preparedness." Among the members of the society are Mrs. George J. Gould, Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Mrs. Peter Cooper Hewitt, Miss Louise Iselin, Mrs. Charles M. Oelrichs, Mrs. Edwin Gould, Mrs. Paul Morton, Mrs. Frederic Nelson, Mrs. I. Townsend Burden, Mrs. William Rockefeller, Mrs. M. Orme Wilson, and Mrs. Stowe Phelps.

The movement was started, the Executive Committee of the society said, as a result of the inadequacy of the national defenses "to which attention has been called by Secretary of War Garrison, Rear Admiral Bradley A. Fiske, Admiral Dewey, and many others."

Several of the members declared at a recent meeting that in the event of trouble their Summer homes would be offered to the Government for hospital purposes and that "the society is desirous of adding to this list" of homes that could be used in a national crisis. Likewise the society has prepared suitable specimen kits for the regular army and also for volunteer armies, kits for hospitals and for convalescents, and is now compiling a list of sewing clubs which may be called upon at any time for the preparation of garments that may be needed in the field.

The society has undertaken to keep a register of those who would volunteer their services in connection with war relief work in this country, a register of nurses who would be available for field and hospital work, and of possible contributors of funds and materials for the work of relief.

"Events of the past year," the statement reads, "have made it plain just how easily solemn peace treaties are violated, just how suddenly war may come, and also what heavy penalties are paid for unpreparedness, and while war is a thing greatly to be deplored, and should be, if possible, avoided, still it seems the greater part of wisdom that we should face conditions as they exist today, both here and abroad. Non-resistance and lack of strength, it appears, are sometimes an invitation to aggression, and this, we believe, is something of which we should take note at once. Not that war is a thing of the immediate future. Let us rather hope it is never to be again. And yet, if war is ever to come, the mere instinct of self-preservation directs that women, too, should be prepared to defend American ideals of liberty, peace, and honor.

"Preparation, as we have come to see it, means preparation today, and at this moment, when the men are doing their part to insure us protection from war, there are many things with which women should be concerned. One thing American women can do today is to urge immediate action by Congress. Another big opportunity lies in aiding the special preparedness already begun by the Special Relief Society. This society is undertaken to complete at once a nation-wide organization of women for the purpose of not only considering questions of preparedness, but acting on them as well, in these times of peace."

The Vice President of the society is Mrs. William C. Potter; the Treasurer, Mrs. T. J. Oakley Rhinelander, and Mrs. John A. Logan is the Secretary. On the advisory board are Dr. Charles A. Dana, Samuel R. Bertron, Frederic R. Coudert, the Rev. Percy Stickney Grant, Frank B. Keech, Robert Olyphant, and Howard Taylor. The office of the society is 597 Fifth Avenue.

PLAINFIELD FACES STRIKE.

Machinists' Leaders and Employers Fail to Reach Agreement.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Aug. 2.—Although they conferred with factory Superintendents today relative to the machinists' demand for an eight-hour day, J. R. Keppler, Vice President of the International Machinists' Union, and Thomas E. Carroll, who has been detailed to represent that organization in Plainfield, and Hugh Riley, Business Agent of the New Jersey Unions, intimated that the meeting had been unsatisfactory.

"Our investigations have resulted in a decision to strike for ten per cent. pay as well as shorter hours in the three Plainfield printing press plants," Mr. Keppler said. "The men are not being paid as much as men employed by similar plants in other cities. The statement given out by the management of the Sauerer plant of the International Motor Company has served to arouse a spirit of animosity because the men believe that it is not binding in its nature. They were granted an eight-hour day and a bonus on all war orders, but the men want a more definite statement.

"Detailed reports of the conferences will be made to the machinists at a mass meeting to be held in the Plainfield Theatre Thursday night, and whether the reports are satisfactory will indicate the possibility of a strike during the latter part of the week. The men are determined to get their demands and will stick together at any cost."

Mr. Keppler went to Brooklyn tonight to attend a mass meeting of die sinkers and drop forgers, and will return to Plainfield tomorrow morning to continue negotiations with factory managers.

GARVIN PLANT SHUTS DOWN.

More Than 200 Machinists Obey Union's Call for Strike.

More than 200 of the men employed by the Garvin Machine Company, at Spring and Varick Streets, responded to the strike call of the International Association of Machinists by refusing to return to work yesterday morning. Officers of the firm said that 600 of their employes had returned to work, but at noon the factory was closed down.

H. C. Hunter of the National Metal Trades Association, at 30 Church Street, which represents the Garvin Machine Company, said:

"The company has not decided what steps to take. The union officials have demanded 15 per cent. increase of pay and an eight-hour day instead of nine hours. Last week Mr. Garvin offered 10 per cent. increase of pay, but would not consider the demand for shorter hours. The output in this industry, excepting munitions of war, is from 40 to 50 per cent. below normal. There are thousands of machinists out of work in this city. Many of the shops are running at a loss. A worse time from the standpoint of the workmen could not be picked out for a strike."

Howard C. Seaman, Vice President of the E. W. Bliss Company, said there had not been the slightest disorder at the plant, and that no men had quit work. Yesterday the eight-hour day went into effect. Mr. Seaman said that no demands had been received from employes or their representatives.

Ex-Senator John J. Linson.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Aug. 2.—Ex-State Senator John J. Linson died at his home at Kingston today in his sixty-fifth year. He was born at Mongaup Valley, Sullivan County, on Nov. 29, 1850; was educated at Monticello Academy and the Albany Normal School; studied law with the late Judge Nevin of Monticello and was admitted to the bar in 1872. He removed to Kingston in 1876; was Corporation Counsel of Kingston from 1885 to 1887, and State Senator from 1888 to 1891. Later for several years he was a law partner of Jacob A. Cantor and Eugene Van Schaick of New York. He was President of the Ulster County Bar Association and a member of the American, New York State, and New York City Bar Associations, Kingston Club and Reform Club of the City of New York.

RISE AT ROOSEVELT WORKS.

Increased Pay Averts Strike Where Fatal Riots Occurred.

Special to The New York Times.

METUCHEN, N. J., Aug. 2.—Following rumors of a strike among the employes of the American Agricultural Chemical Company, officials announced at its Roosevelt plant today that the workers would receive 20 cents an hour instead of 18, beginning yesterday.

The rising of the wages was the outcome of a conference held by the company and union men in New York yesterday. Last January the men went on strike because they were receiving but 16 cents an hour. They had asked for 20 cents, and following a riot in which two men were killed and many injured 18 cents an hour was granted.

Twenty-five Deputies were convicted of manslaughter as a result of the riot, and it is said the company granted the rise today in order to forestall any further trouble.

MILITIA CONTROLS MASSENA.

Fifteen Arrests Made for Rioting—Trouble Seems Near End.

Special to The New York Times.

MASSENA, N. Y., Aug. 2.—Following the arrest of fifteen men accused of rioting, the strikers from the plant of the Aluminum Comany of America settled down to a sullen quiet this afternoon. In the yard of the plant three companies of State infantry are lying on their arms, while patrols are on the alert to prevent any gatherings and to keep strikers from getting near the plant. In addition, sixty Deputies are on duty with loaded rifles, and the company's regular police are doing patrol duty.

Although Charles H. Moritz, General Manager of the plants of the company here, at Pittsburgh, and at Niagara Falls, who came here today, expressed the opinion that there was little likelihood of further trouble, and that the strikers would return to work within a day or so, he was loath to allow the troops or deputies to leave.

"The men have made no demands and refuse to see or talk with us," said Mr. Moritz. "We do not know what they want. They seem to have no leaders. We believe the trouble was started by a herd of malcontents. We have transferred orders to other plants of the company, so production will not stop. We do not manufacture war munitions of any kind, but the demand for copper for war munitions has caused an increase in the demand for aluminum as a substitute for copper."

Sheriff Thaddeus P. Day said tonight that he did not anticipate any further serious trouble, and that the troops might be withdrawn within a day or two.

The plant reopened at the usual hour this morning. When the employes who had refused to strike and who numbered more than 1,000 started for the plant, they found a formidable force of strikers waiting for them. The troops dispersed the strikers at the point of the bayonet. Later some of the strikers apparently decided to try to rescue their comrades from the jail. A mob of 100 men set out for the jail, but was quickly routed by the troops. Still later the strikers tried to prevent a shifting engine from drawing a long string of coal cars into the factory yard, but were prevented by the militia.

Fifteen men accused of rioting were arraigned in police court. They waived examination and each was held in $500 bail for the September Grand Jury. Later the prisoners were taken to the County Jail at Canton under a heavy guard of militiamen. Occasional arrests were still being made at a late hour tonight; in all about twenty-five men had been taken into custody since the rioting started.

Joseph Solunski, a striker who was shot in the abdomen in the first clash with the company's guards on Saturday, died tonight in the Ogdensburg hospital. Coroner C. C. Bartholomew took charge of the body and will confer with the District Attorney tomorrow as to the course of action to be followed.

I. M. MARINE PLAN HALVES ITS CAPITAL

Steamship Company's Stock, Bonds, and Accrued Interest to be Cut $86,000,000.

TO ASSESS SHARES $2.50

Fixed Charges, It Is Figured, Will Be Within the Average Net Earnings of Last Six Years.

A proposed reorganization plan for the International Mercantile Marine Company, which was announced yesterday by W. W. Miller of counsel for the Reorganization Committee, calls for a reduction in the total capitalization of the company of approximately $86,000,000. The present total of stock, bonds, and accrued interest is $175,591,245, and it is proposed to start the new company with a capitalization of only $89,371,393. It is believed that after reorganization on these terms the capitalization will be no greater than the intrinsic value of the properties involved, without regard to the items of good-will, trade names, trade connections and trade routes, and that the fixed charges will be well within the average net earnings of the properties for the last six years.

The early appearance of a reorganization plan is due to the improvement in earnings, which smoothed the way by making it possible greatly to reduce the original estimate of the amount of cash which would have to be raised by assessment on the stock. The assessment called for by the plan is but $2.50 per share for both common and preferred stock, which is counted on to bring in $2,540,000. For this money the stockholders are to receive new first mortgage and collateral trust 5 per cent. convertible bonds at par.

If the plan succeeds, the capitalization of the new company will be divided as follows:

Bonds	$39,536,240
Preferred stock	31,464,233
Common stock	18,370,920
Total	$89,371,393

After new securities are apportioned to the 4½ per cent. bonds of the International Mercantile Marine Company and the 5 per cent. bonds of the International Navigation Company, of a par value equal to their principal amount and accrued interest, the balance of the common stock, $12,638,000, is apportioned between the old preferred and the common stock on the basis of approximately four-fifths to the preferred stock and one-fifth to the common.

The relative rights and position of the bonds of the International Mercantile Marine Company and of the International Navigation Company were adjusted and settled by committees representing those respective issues of bonds after examination and consideration of the values of the properties involved and their respective earnings as part of the operations of the company. Under the plan the principal and accrued interest to July 1, 1915, of both issues of bonds, amounting to approximately $74,000,000, is funded into new securities. The accumulated earnings of the properties to July 1, not being required for interest, become available as working capital and the nucleus of a fund for building or acquiring additional ships, which, together with the subscriptions to be made by stockholders, will furnish a substantial sum and all that is required now for these purposes.

The total authorized amount of the new 6 per cent. preferred stock will be $81,500,000, of which $50,000,000 will be reserved to be used solely for the conversion of the new first mortgage bonds. The preferred stock is noncumulative, but in addition to being entitled to 6 per cent. dividends in preference to dividends on the common stock, is entitled to receive additional dividends at the same rate as the common stock after payment of dividends on the common stock at the rate of 6 per cent.

The bondholders' committees, which represent more than a majority of each issue of bonds, have unanimously approved the plan. Information from both England and Holland, where substantial amounts of securities are held, indicate that the terms of the plan have been favorably received abroad.

MAY ABSORB PACIFIC MAIL.

International Mercantile Marine a Bidder, Says Rumor.

Publication of the terms proposed for reorganizing the International Mercantile Marine yesterday was accompanied by a rumor that the company or interests allied with it were negotiating for the purchase of part of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's fleet of vessels. The Pacific Mail has stated that it cannot operate its steamships on the Pacific under the terms of the seaman's law without suffering loss, and that sailings will be discontinued on Nov. 4.

Officials of the International Company declined to comment on the rumor, but no denial was made. The Pacific Mail vessels are thirteen in number, sailing under the American flag. It is believed that if several of them are taken over by the International they will be added to the American Line, which will mean that they still will be operated under American registry.

TO FINANCE CROP MOVEMENT

Federal Reserve Board Points Out How Banks Can Aid Farmers.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Preliminary plans designed to make available the resources of the Federal Reserve system in the annual fall movement of crops have been worked out by the Federal Reserve Board. Writing to the twelve regional banks, the board pointed out in a letter made public today how members of the system may help to finance the crop movement.

Usually the crop movement has been taken care of by Government deposits in banks or the issue of emergency currency under the Aldrich-Vreeland act, which expired last month. In place of these agencies, the board states, there is ample authority in the Federal Reserve act to meet the situation this Fall.

"In view of the large surplus reserves now held by the Federal Reserve banks," by member banks, and by other banks throughout the country," says the board's letter, "there should be no difficulty in affording the producers the assistance necessary to enable them to market their products in volume corresponding to the power of the trade to absorb them. In order to accomplish this end it is suggested that Federal Reserve banks adopt a definite policy with reference to rediscounting paper secured by documents in satisfactory form evidencing the ownership of stored agricultural products.

"Through such a policy, together with proper methods of warehousing, Federal Reserve banks can be a potent factor in assisting the normal movement of staple agricultural products from the field to the factory or to the consumer."

The board calls special attention to the marketing of the cotton crop, because it is "clearly to the common interest that credits based upon this crop be protected as far as possible from the danger of demoralization."

"Sudden and violent fluctuations," it continues, "are clearly to the advantage of neither the loaning banks, the producer, the manufacturer, nor the consumer. They offer, on the contrary, an inviting field for the speculator, and should the Federal Reserve system, in making possible the more normal movement of the crop, be a contributing factor in reducing these fluctuations, it would have accomplished a great public good."

DISPLAY MEN HEAR PERCY S. STRAUS

Convention of the One-Time Window Dressers Opens with 350 Present.

CONTROLLER GREETS THEM

Demonstrations and Lectures Take Up Afternoon Session—Delegates Here Until Thursday.

More than 350 members of the International Association of Display Men, from all parts of the country, attended the opening session at the Waldorf-Astoria of the eighteenth annual convention yesterday. The hall was well filled when C. J. Potter, President of the association, called the meeting to order and introduced Controller William A. Prendergast, who, in the absence of Mayor Mitchel from the city, welcomed the delegates.

The Controller said he hoped the display men would take advantage of their stay in New York to interest themselves in the problems of the municipality and see what the local Government is doing to solve them. William A. Marble, Vice President of the R & G Corset Company and former President of the Merchants' Association, extended a greeting in behalf of the city's wholesale trade. Mr. Marble recalled that forty years ago when he commenced his business career the retail trade was at or below Howard Street.

"There was not as much space occupied in those days," said Mr. Marble, "as the area now covered by R. H. Macy & Co. alone."

Mr. Marble paid a tribute to the work of the display men, but gave it as his opinion that the display experts did not give the wholesalers' products enough space. Responding to the addresses of welcome, John H. Hobelman of St. Louis told his hearers that about the only time the average display man talked was when he was endeavoring to get his employer to spend $500 for display fixtures.

"The window trimmer was looked upon as a man with a hobby in the days gone by," said Mr. Hobelman. "It was not long ago that a man had to fight to get a bolt of cheesecloth to make display. Now he can get a bolt of velvet if he wants it, and the display man today has his office, just as the advertising man has. The position of men in many of the stores is not a bed of roses by any means. I venture to say that there are men who came here at their own expense, instead of the stores sending them, as they do the buyers."

Percy S. Straus of R. H. Macy & Co. was presented to the convention by President Potter as "a young man who is strictly with you and one who has done much for display, men and their work." Mr. Straus began by saying that his firm had studied the display situation in New York. He said:

"It may be because there are many specialty stores, but it is certain that we do it scientifically. I believe also that there is no better place than the Metropolitan Museum of Art to get ideas for display purposes. The work of the display men is now regarded as a profession. The change of the name from window dresser to display man is indicative of the growing importance of the work. Too often an artistic temperament makes it difficult for a display men to adhere to the rules of the store with which he is connected. There must be co-operation."

Mr. Straus instanced the display of furniture for the August sales as representing the proper co-operative spirit at the present time.

The morning session closed with the appointment of judges for the various classes of exhibits shown by seventy-five exhibitors in the Fourth Trade Convention held in connection with the association's annual meetings.

The afternoon session was given up to lectures and demonstrations by display managers of some of the largest stores in this city and the East. The demonstrations were held under the auspices of the Display Managers' Club of America. Those participating in the afternoon session included L. Hahn of Women's Wear, who described the work of the Managers' Club; W. F. Allert of R. H. Macy & Co., whose subject was "Our Profession;" E. Munn of Franklin Simon & Co., on "Equestrian Equipment;" Herman Frankenthal on "Display Needs;" A. Altman & Co., on "Fabric Draping;" William Tishman of James McCreery & Co., on "Fabric Dressing;" Harry Bird of John Wanamaker, on "Artistic Displays;" J. J. Richter of Saks & Co., on "Handling Furnishings," and several other well-known display men.

President Potter predicted that the attendance at the convention will reach 1,000 at least. The convention will be continued this morning, sessions being held every day until the final meeting on Thursday.

EDUCATION NOTES.

The Committee on Special Schools has requested that in the departmental estimate for 1916 there be included $36,000 for forty new attendance officers for permanent appointment, at $900 each; $45,000 for 200 attendance officers, temporary, at $75 a month each for three months, and $2,770.47 for revised schedule for attendance officers.

The Committee on Athletics, in addition to the usual items for increased register for 1916, asks that $78,000 be allowed for after school athletics instead of $57,000 granted this year.

The Inspector of Ungraded Classes has asked that for 1916 the following be included in the estimate: One hundred and twenty new teachers, $103,600; supplies for above, $5,400; equipment for above, $36,250; clerical help, $2,100; ten visiting teachers, $10,000; four additional physicians, $7,200; five additional assistant inspectors, $9,000; farm school, $1,800.

In addition to the usual items for parental and truant school, the following are asked: Increase of salary for principal, $500; increase for matron superintendent, $500; increase for other help, seven persons, $700; chauffeur for auto truck, $1,000. A decrease of $2,040 is shown in other positions.

CROPSEY OPPOSES SCUDDER

Objects to His Hearing Grout's Motion for Doubt Certificate.

When an order to show cause why a certificate of reasonable doubt should not issue to ex-Controller Edward M. Grout, convicted of perjury in connection with the affairs of the Union Bank, of which he was President, was returned before Supreme Court Justice Townsend Scudder in Brooklyn, yesterday, District Attorney Cropsey objected to Justice Scudder sitting in judgment on the matter, and the Justice refused to hear the motion. Justice Scudder will decide today to which Supreme Court Justice he will refer the application.

The complication was due to the controversy between the District Attorney and certain members of the bench who heard preliminary motions in the Grout case. In a public speech Mr. Cropsey referred to these Judges as "handpicked," and as "bosom friends" of Grout. Justice Scudder was one of those criticised by the District Attorney.

Justice Scudder then adjourned court, saying he would endeavor to find a Justice who would hear the motion. He spent all the afternoon telegraphing and telephoning to members of the bench in the Second Department, nearly all of whom are out of town for the Summer.

Mr. Grout is in the City Prison in Brooklyn under a stay of execution of the sentence of one year's imprisonment in Sing Sing. The term of this stay expires on Friday.

SMALL FIRE IN CITY HALL.

Blaze Threatened New Decorations of McAneny's Office.

Two thousand loungers driven to City Hall Park by the hot weather witnessed last evening the arrival of firemen to put out a fire in the City Hall, which threatened the newly renovated and decorated offices occupied by President McAneny of the Board of Aldermen. The suite was formerly the City Clerk's office. Below it in the basement and connected with it by a stairway is a room once used for storing the City Clerk's records. This room has been occupied as a store room by the painters and decorators at work in the City Hall.

Shortly after 8 o'clock Thomas McNamara, a watchman, opened the door of the basement room and found the waste and papers there on fire. He told Lieutenant Kelly, on desk duty in Traffic A, across the hall. An alarm of fire was turned in. The coming of the engines brought a great crowd, which overflowed into Park Row. The excitement was short lived. McNamara and the policemen extinguished the blaze before the firemen came. The damage was slight.

Dress Goods Demand Slackens.

The possibility of a strike in the coat and suit trade is having a disturbing influence on the dress goods market. Buyers are taking in only those goods that may be difficult to get later on. Serges have suffered for this reason. On the other hand, poplins, whipcords, and gabardines are being ordered in by the manufacturers. In poplins there is understood to be some scarcity of goods that sell between $1.12½ and $1.30 a yard. This would serve to indicate that buyers have been buying liberally and have faith in this fabric.

Supply Good Ribbon Orders.

The retail trade buying ribbons for immediate and holiday needs are supplying a better business to the importers and manufacturers than that which the jobbers gave. The goods desired principally are designed for use as hairbows. Warp prints are being taken, and moires in 60 to 70 lignes. The colors that are popular just now are dark shades of navy, purple, green and brown in the order named. While the demand is not as active as the manufacturers would like to see it, there is a feeling that conditions are improving.

Gray Goods Quiet.

Very little of note took place in the gray goods market yesterday. The mills held back last week, hoping that a strong Government report on the condition of the cotton crop would enable them to get better prices. The report, however, was about what was expected, and did not add material strength to the market. Offerings were a little freer, but what transactions took place were at previous prices. Staple printcloth prices, which were more or less nominal, follow:

38-inch, 80-80s	5½c	38½-inch, 64-56s	3½c
39-inch, 68-72s	4¾c	38½-inch, 60-48s	3¼c
38½-inch, 64-64s	*4c	27-inch, 64-60s	2¾c
36½-inch, 64-60s	3¾c	27-inch, 56-52s	2½c

Pencil Stripes Again.

After a dormant period of four or five months the demand for pencil stripes has set in again in the men's wear division of the piece goods market. These goods are being taken up for late Fall business, and are said just now to be rather hard to obtain. There is nothing extremely new in the designs being shown, but the most desirable goods of this kind are made with the stripes running in groups of two or three. Backgrounds of black and blue prevail, and the clothiers are taking rather

SALTS' FUR-TEX PATENTED

To the Pile Fabric Coat Buyer

"SALTS" ESQUIMETTE PLUSH PATENTED

The 1915 Fall Line of MIRKIN-LEVITMAN, Inc., is ready!

Of our all-comprehensive Fall showing, we shall not endeavor to present a word picture here. We merely urge that you do your department and your firm full justice by inspecting our line.

Our styles for Fall, 1915, are not the work of one man, or the work of one day. Without thought of either time or expense we have employed the most expert talent procurable in the preparation of our superb Coats for Fall; and the line attests the fact—conclusively.

Materials? We have followed one rule—namely, to secure the BEST. Our garments are all made of SALT'S FUR FABRICS—rich as the fur they so closely resemble, soft and pliable as silk, and every coat selling above $10.00 lined with SKINNER'S SATIN—the satin lining of world-known durability.

We have planned our variety of models and our range of prices so that every requirement is met to your entire satisfaction. Beginning at $6.00, our prices range to $35.00; yet, whether $6.00 or $35.00, or any in-between price, you have the same wonder-value, with the "M-L" guarantee behind every garment.

From our own knowledge of our present line, we are sure of a supremely successful season. We have planned and stocked accordingly. Mr. Buyer, with great demands, we can take care of you. You need not speculate as to the size of your order or as to the re-orders which you are sure to have. We are already working twenty-four hours every day, employing three shifts, thus insuring unusually Quick, Dependable Deliveries. Our position in this matter is unique.

Mr. Coat Buyer, as we have said, at best mere words are futile. Come! We take this means of extending to you a very cordial invitation to our home at the address below. It will be a "trade-visit" you will number among the most profitable you have ever made.

Yours, for success,

Mirkin-Levitman, Inc.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Trading Quieter, but Stocks Display Strength—Many Railroad Issues Show Net Gains.

Stocks resumed their advance yesterday after the two days' reaction which followed the upset in several of the war stocks last Thursday, but the market was quieter and much more orderly than a week ago when excesses of speculation led to the later violent breaks in a few of the stocks and to reaction in the list as a whole. Traders had apparently recognized the danger of continuing unabated the upbidding tactics which exposed the market to the sort of violent reaction which occurred last week. On the other hand the display of strength yesterday, which was more pronounced in the afternoon than in the morning, showed clearly what is the prevailing drift of stock market sentiment.

Renewed strength in some of the railroad stocks was particularly welcome to the large element in the financial community which has disliked the undue prominence attained by some of the war stocks as a result of the feverish speculation in those issues. Those stocks have been the favorites of professional traders whose dealings have contributed not a little to the abnormally large totals recorded in those stocks. The rapidity of movement in them and the volume of the dealings have attracted the traders who have not been manifesting much interest in the railroads because they have furnished fewer opportunities for trading profits.

For some time, however, the market has given signs of a broadening of the interest in the railroad list. The ease with which these stocks rose on the rumor that an increase in freight rates would be granted to the Western roads indicated that relatively little stock was pressing for sale. The reappearance of strength in these issues again yesterday, although in many issues the gains were not very large, showed that more attention is being directed to this important department of the market. The fact that an increase in Western freight rates is still looked for, though last week's rumor that a decision granting an increase was on the eve of being handed down proved unfounded, has no doubt a good deal to do with the greater interest which is being taken in the fortunes of the railroads. Statements for June show in several directions changes for the better, and if the factors in favor of the railroads should be strengthened by the grant of higher freight rates to the Western roads further proof will have been given of the change in the attitude of public authority toward the railroads of the country. Sufficient proof of that change has already appeared to make it seem a reality but it is felt in the financial district that the railroads need still further practical expression of that more friendly attitude.

A grant of higher rates to the Western roads would be accepted not only as a help to them but as further proof of recognition on the part of the Government of the need of supporting the railroads as a whole, or, more strictly speaking, of allowing a margin of profit sufficient to fortify their credits. In the long run the public at large suffers through inadequate railroad dividends. The loss is by no means confined to the stockholders in the railroads. The truth of that seems now to be better understood among regulators than it was prior to the last appeal of the Eastern roads for higher rates.

FEWER FAILURES IN JULY.

Total Was 1,739, with Liabilities of $18,934,903.

Though some increase in the country's business mortality is usual during July, owing to the strain involved by the semi-annual settlements, commercial failures last month were slightly less numerous than in June and the aggregate liabilities were only moderately in excess of the total for that period. Thus, insolvencies, as reported to R. G. Dun & Co., numbered 1,739, and supplied an indebtedness of $18,934,903, against 1,754 in June for $18,313,118, and 1,707 for $21,043,212 in May, the low point of the year in number of defaults. Hence, with this exception, there were fewer suspensions than in any previous month and the decrease as compared with January was no less than 1,109, or almost 40 per cent. Considerable expansion is shown in comparison with July, 1914, when 1,411 firms failed, but the margin of increase is steadily narrowing and it is significant that the latest figures show a smaller debt than the $20,377,148 owed a year ago.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE.

It early became evident on the Consolidated Stock Exchange that the movement in the "war stocks" was proceeding under more orderly auspices than of late. It appeared that a portion of the market interest was turning toward the railroads and the coppers. The copper group became prominent at advancing prices. Helping to stimulate it were reports that very heavy inquiries for the metal were reaching the producing interests. The railroad shares generally reflected firmness from the opening.

GOVERNMENT FILES ITS NEW HAVEN BILL

Gives Particulars of Alleged Conspiracies by the Officials of Railroad.

REQUIRES 188 PARAGRAPHS

Each Defendant Accused of Aiding Every Other Director in Maintaining Combinations.

The United States Government, in compliance with Judge William H. Hunt's orders made in April and June, filed in the Federal District Court yesterday the bill of particulars asked for by the officers and directors and counsel of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad to enable them to answer the Sherman law indictment charging them with engaging in a conspiracy to monopolize interstate trade and commerce between the New England and other States. The officers, directors and counsel named are William Rockefeller, George MacCullough Miller, Charles F. Brooker, D. Newton Barney, Robert W. Taft, James S. Hemingway, Lewis Cass Ledyard, Charles M. Pratt, A. Heaton Robertson, Frederick F. Brewster, Henry K. McHarg, Alexander Cochrane and Edward D. Robbins.

The Government alleges that in each of the matters specified in the 188 paragraphs of the bill of particulars it was with the purpose and intent of aiding, abetting and carrying out the conspiracy that the defendants adopted the plans and became responsible for them.

The bill of particulars, after explaining in detail the acquisition of the various railroads, electric, traction and steamboat lines, states that it was the purpose of the alleged conspirators in making the combination to control each of the common carriers absorbed and to induce and compel them to engage in the combination.

As an instance of improper action, the bill charges the New Haven and the Providence, Fall River & Newport Steamship Company, by agreement, refused to lease the commercial wharf at Newport to the Joy Steamship Company, also that the New Haven's subsidiary would not ship freight by the Joy line, and that it increased the number of its sailings from Boston and made its freight rate 2 cents per 100 pounds so as to injure the Joy line; that by an agreement dated July 24, 1901, between the defendant Rockefeller, the Standard Oil Company, H. M. Flagler and the Florida East Coast Railroad Company, it was decided that the latter railroad company should not renew its charters for the steamships Cocoa and Martinique of the Joy Steamship Company, and that by an agreement entered into on July 18, 1902, between the New Haven and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, it was decided that the latter company should prevent the Joy Steamship Company and the Philadelphia and New York Transportation Company from running their vessels through the Delaware and Raritan canal.

The bill alleges that each of the defendants aided, abetted and gave encouragement to other directors of the company, the officers and employes in maintaining combinations in restraint of interstate trade and commerce, and that each of the defendants agreed with his co-conspirators to control the operations and actions of the New Haven.

The bill of particulars gave a resolution reading as follows:

That no officer of the New Haven make any address or response to toast or otherwise that shall in any way refer to the business of the company, its policies or prospects unless the same shall have been first submitted to and approved by the Executive Committee. That no officer give any information regarding the business of the company, its policies, or prospects, except through the authorized publicity department of the company provided for such purposes, direct interviews between officials of the company and representatives of the press being prohibited.

The bill gives an account of the involved deal by which the competition of the Metropolitan Steamship Company was controlled and its vessels, the Yale and the Harvard sent to the Pacific. A note for $1,900,000 given in 1913 is supposed to have figured in the deal.

The bill alleges that Lewis Cass Ledyard for three years before the return of the indictment "took steps to prevent the ascertainment of the facts concerning the activities and actions of the conspirators in carrying out the conspiracy and made statements intending to and having such effect and having the effect of concealing the purposes of the conspirators and preventing action to enjoin the illegal acts or to punish the offenders, and that the other defendants knew of these activities of Ledyard and acquiesced in and approved of them."

It is also charged that Mr. Ledyard procured Charles S. Mellen to write a letter on Dec. 2, 1912, to the United States District Attorney, Henry A. Wise, which was designed and intended to conceal the relationship of themselves and other conspirators and their acts.

The bill also states that Mr. Robbins before the return of the Sherman law indictment, co-operating with other conspirators and in furtherance of the conspiracy aided in procuring the removal to the Dominion of Canada of the assets, books, papers and records of the Billard Company and of the papers regarding the formation of the St. Lawrence Securities Company, Limited.

THE REAL ESTATE FIELD.

Fifth Avenue Lease Near Forty-second Street—Thomas Street Loft in Bronx Trade—$314,175 for Belle Harbor Lots —Edgemere Sale Closed with $219,674.

An important business lease in Fifth Avenue, close to Forty-second Street; another lease of an entire building in Sixth Avenue, between Thirtieth and Thirty-first Streets; two or three good Bronx deals, and the successful conclusion of the Belle Harbor auction by Joseph P. Day furnished the chief elements of interest in the realty market yesterday.

The Fifth Avenue lease involved the northerly store in the Bristol Building, on the northwest corner of Forty-second Street, to the Gotham Silk Hosiery Company of 27 West Thirty-fourth Street. The firm has taken the Fifth Avenue store for a term of years at an annual rental of about $12,000. The Thirty-fourth Street store will also be maintained. The lease was made for Walter J. Salomon, who holds the building under a long lease, through the brokerage firm of Rice & Hill.

Thomas Street Loft in Bronx Trade.

A Bronx deal of a new apartment house, involving a downtown business building, was closed by the Eberhardt Realty Company, Charles A. Eberhardt, President, which sold to an investor the five-story structure at 969 Aldus Street, southwest corner of Hoe Avenue, 50 by 100 feet. The new owner gave in part payment the six-story loft at 60 Thomas Street, on lot 25 by 100 feet, between Church Street and West Broadway, and directly opposite the Claflin stores. Title to the property is held by Frank L. Froment.

Harlem-Bronx Deal.

The five-story flat at 232 West 120th Street, near St. Nicholas Avenue, on plot 25 by 100 feet, has been sold for David Nevins by the F. R. Wood-W. H. Dolson Company and Clement H. Smith. The buyer gave Bronx property in part payment, being a plot 43 by 100 feet on the west side of Bathgate Avenue, 175 feet south of Tremont Avenue.

Bronx Sales.

Alexander Selkin and David Mintz have sold for the Mack Construction Company, 646 Fox Street, a five-story apartment, on plot 40 by 100. The buyer, Sophie V. Chalmers, gave in part payment the plot on the south side of 169th Street, 143 feet west of Fox Street, 60 by 72 and irregular; and also a plot on the west side of Kelly Street 87 feet north of 167th Street, 27 by 70 and irregular. The deal aggregated about $60,000.

The plot 84.7 by 94.8 and irregular on the southeast corner of Davidson Avenue and 181st Street has been sold by John J. Bell to the Atla Realty Company. Mr. Bell acquired the property at foreclosure sale last April.

The four-story flat at 2,478 Tiebout Avenue, on plot 31 by 100, has been sold to an investor by J. Feising.

The five-story apartment, 58 by 115, on the west side of University Avenue, 225 feet south of Boscobel Place, reported sold last week by the Avoca Realty Company, was sold by the Boyne Bridge Realty Company, Henry Rhoers, President. The contract was closed about a month ago.

Buyer of 150th Street Plot.

The 114th Street and Seventh Avenue Construction Company, of which Max Weinstein is President, is the buyer from the Surety Realty Company of the plot, 150 by 99.11, on the north side of 150th Street, 150 feet west of Broadway. The property will be improved with a six-story apartment house. The selling company, which is composed of Benjamin Mordecai, Samuel H. Stone, and Heilner & Wolf, will furnish a building loan of $120,000.

$314,175 for Belle Harbor Lots.

The two days' auction session of Belle Harbor lots on the Rockaway Peninsula was closed yesterday afternoon by Joseph P. Day on the premises. When the sale began there were about 200 lots remaining to be sold, and so lively was the bidding that in the first hour 100 were disposed of, which Mr. Day states is a record for the sale of building plots at public auction. In two hours all were sold, averaging about $567, which was slightly higher than the average of $430 on Saturday.

For the entire batch of 679 lots a total of $314,175 was obtained, the average being about $463. The prices for many of the choice lots were regarded as low, and Mr. Day congratulated the buyers for the bargains which many have evidently obtained. The largest buyer at the sale was William Sherr, whose purchases totaled $24,710. Other large buyers were ex-State Controller William Sohmer, Commodore J. W. Masters of the Belle Harbor Yacht Club, Alderman Eichorn, E. H. Fickiner, and Alfred E. Jennings.

On Saturday Robert M. Murphy, formerly proprietor of the Rudolf Hotel at Atlantic City, purchased sixteen lots on Ocean (Newport) Avenue, with riparian rights, for $15,440, paying $1,100 each for ocean front lots and $740 each for street lots. Mr. Murphy, it was said, plans to build a concrete hotel and bathing pavilion.

The range of prices extended from $125 for lots under water along Beach Channel Drive to $725, including corners, and the ocean front lots sold from $800 to $1,100 each, also including corners.

$219,674 for Edgemere Lots.

The Edgemere auction sale conducted by the M. Morgenthau, Jr., Company, with Fitzjames E. Browne as auctioneer, was closed Saturday night. A total of 376 lots and five houses were sold during five sessions for $219,674, averaging about $502 a lot. The owning company withdrew twenty-four lots and five houses, for which offers at private sale were received.

The company will be in a position to liquidate as soon as the titles have been closed, at which time the mortgages and installment contracts will be apportioned among the stockholders of the Edgemere Crest Company or sold for their account.

The sale was regarded as very successful for the buyers. The level of prices was low even for these times, and this was reflected in the resale of a number of contracts.

In speaking of the sale M. Morgenthau, Jr., said:

"We are delighted at the response we have received at this, our first big New York City lot sale. It was natural to expect that 400 lots and seven houses could not be found at sale in the present market without causing a low level of prices—the surprise to us was that buyers were so very discriminating; in other words, the best property brought the best prices. Of course, there were a few cases where choice plots were sold for a mere song. In one case a buyer sold his contract in the auction tent for a cash profit of $200."

Sixth Avenue Store Lease.

The Sixth Avenue store lease was made through Tannenbaum, Strauss & Co., who rented for a long term the four-story building at 508 Sixth Avenue, between Thirty and Thirty-first Streets, adjoining the new Bijou Building now under construction. The new tenant is the First American Natural Fern Company, manufacturers and importers of artificial flowers and plants. The same brokers a short time ago leased the store, basement, and first floor of the Bijou Building, which runs through from Broadway to Sixth Avenue, to the New York Millinery Supply Company.

Lewis L. Rosenthal in conjunction with Morris Rose has leased for the Robard Realty Company the store at 956 Broadway, adjoining the corner of Twenty-third Street, to the B. & L. Novelty Company.

M. & L. Hess, Incorporated, have leased to the Lion Waist Company, in addition to the space they now occupy, the eighth loft at 16 and 18 West Twenty-second Street, running through to 15 and 17 West Twenty-first Street.

Private Dwelling Leases.

The three-story dwelling at 143 Hancock Street, near Nostrand Avenue, has been sold by Mrs. S. S. Whitehouse to H. B. Haverstock for occupancy. John E. The Mathews Building Company has sold the apartment houses at 337 Twelfth Avenue to Mrs. Susie Hency for $11,500 and 389 Eleventh Avenue to Frank Bartel for $8,500.

The dwelling at 167 was purchased by Lena and Catherine Keller, who gave in payment the frame dwelling at 123 North Sixteenth Street.

The commission announces for Aug. 17 a competitive examination for senior land appraiser, for men only, to fill vacancies as they may occur in the Interstate Commerce Commission, under the act of March 1, 1913, providing for the valuation of the property of common carriers. As a result of this examination two grades of eligibles will be established, the salaries in the first grade ranging from $2,700 to $3,600 per annum, with a reasonable allowance for expenses when absent from headquarters in the discharge of official duties; and in the second grade from $1,800 to $2,400 per annum and such expenses. Entrance salaries are usually fixed at the minimum amount provided for each grade. Appointments to these positions will be principally for duty in the field, but some appointments will be made for duty in the headquarters offices of the several valuation districts. It should be understood, however, that applicants will be subject to assignment wherever the exigencies of the service may require. Competitors will not be assembled for examination, but will be rated upon the evidence adduced as to their general and technical education and training and their practical experience and fitness. For positions under Grade 1 applicants must have reached their thirtieth, but not their sixty-fifth, birthday on the date of the examination, under the conditions that each applicant over 60 years of age shall furnish a medical certificate, provided in application Form 1312, and that any applicant, though otherwise eligible, who may be found to be physically disqualified will be rejected; for Grade 2 they must have reached their twenty-fifth, but not their forty-fifth, birthday on the date of the examination. Further information may be obtained from the commission, Washington, D. C.

FUNERAL OF BECKER MARKED BY TURMOIL

Morbid Crowds Struggle to See Coffin at Home and Church and in Cemetery.

NEITHER SERMON NOR MUSIC

"Sacrificed for Politics" and "To Martyr," in Flowers, Barred—Police as Pallbearers.

The curtain fell on the Becker tragedy yesterday with the interment of the ex-Police Lieutenant's body in Woodlawn Cemetery. At the door of the Becker apartment house at 2,291 University Avenue, the Bronx, a crowd of 3,000 swarmed and fought for places whence the coffin might be seen for half an hour before it was taken down the steps.

Meanwhile another mob was fighting to get into the little Church of St. Nicholas of Tolentine around the corner, and the church was packed with persons who bore Mrs. Becker's heavily bordered mourning cards. Among these were many members of the police force in citizens' clothes.

When the body of the man who was put to death last Friday in the electric chair for the murder of Herman Rosenthal reached the church, there was nearly a riot outside and at the doorway as the morbidly curious crushed forward to catch a glimpse of the coffin and the name plate it bore. But the rule announcing that Charles Becker had been murdered by Governor Whitman had been removed twelve hours before by Police Inspector Faurot, and in its place was a simple silver plate bearing Becker's name, the date of his birth, and the date of his death.

The pall bearers were five members of the Police Department—Lieutenant James Brady, Captain John Bourke, Lieutenant Patrick Shea, and Patrolmen John O'Connor and William Ferrick—and a former patrolman, Joseph Shepard. In carriages in the funeral procession, besides the relatives, were ex-Police Inspector A. S. Williams, ex-Police Captain Dennis Brennan, and Alderman Peter Sheikert.

Police Reserves Summoned.

When the body was carried into the church, the crowd outside the church grew so unruly that the few uniformed patrolmen on duty sent a call to the High Bridge Station for reserves to assist them. It was intensely hot, and one aged woman fainted in the crush at the door of the packed church. That a passage to the door might be kept open for members of the family, a mounted policeman rode up on the pavement directly to the steps of the church, and thence back and forth along the path he had formed until the crowd had withdrawn a few feet.

The plate that was removed from the coffin on the ground that it libeled Governor Whitman was gone, but the spirit from which the incident grew remained. A wagon containing floral tributes was driven up to the church to await the procession to the cemetery, and the most noticeable design in it was a large cross of lilies, asters, and bay leaves. Across this, in large purple letters, was this inscription:

"Sacrificed for Politics."

To the cross was attached an envelope on which was written, "From a Friend." There was no card in the envelope at this time. Another floral design bore the words:

"To the Martyr; with sincere sympathy."

The card attached to this bore the names of Dr. Lipsit, the family physician; Dr. Alofsis, a friend, and Miss Flauser.

The names of ex-Inspector Williams and his wife were appended to another design on which were the words, "In sympathy and respect to Charley."

Floral Tributes Censored.

The first two of these floral tributes, however, met the same fate as the libelous silver plate. When they reached the gates of Woodlawn Cemetery some time later, at the head of the funeral cortège, the procession was held up while an agent of the cemetery corporation inspected the floral designs. The undertaker was ordered to pluck enough of the letters from the designs to make them meaningless. The letters "S—F—O" were the only ones of "Sacrificed for Politics" that remained when the procession resumed its way to the grave, flanked on either side by large crowds on foot.

The services at the church lasted only twenty-five minutes, and consisted of low, mass, celebrated by one of the young assistant priests of the church, Father George Dermody. He intoned the mass in a low voice which could not be heard distinctly beyond the middle of the church. No special references to Becker's life or the manner of his death were made, as there was no sermon. There was no music, either.

Just as the service began a large man in citizen's clothes who was standing near one of the windows, for the aisles were packed as well as the pews, saw an older man in citizen's clothes entering the church, and, uttering a short, low whistle, vaulted out of the window to the ground, a few feet below.

"They even grab you in church," laughed a stout man to whom the one that vanished had been speaking.

The stout man explained to a bystander that the man who took his hasty exit by way of the window was a policeman who had got excused for "sickness," and that the man entering the church was his superior officer. During the service scuffling, occasional shouts, and laughter could be heard outside among the crowd that waited there.

Crowd Follows Hearse.

Attendants at the cemetery gate made an effort to keep moving-picture men and photographers out of the cemetery during the funeral, and even declined information to persons without photographic apparatus as to the location of the spot in which the body was to be buried. The hearse, which was drawn by two black horses and followed by five carriages, in the first of which were Mrs. Becker and her brother, arrived soon after 11 o'clock, accompanied by men, women, and children on foot. These hurried to keep up with the procession on the way to the grave, making short cuts across the grass to save time, and children had to run to keep up.

At the grave a canvas shelter had been erected for Mrs. Becker and the other members of the family, but it was with difficulty that they forced their way through the thickly packed crowd to their seats. The crowd trampled on all of the graves in the immediate vicinity in seeking places from which a view of the proceedings could be had, and the vantage points of nearby tombstones were contended for in lively fashion. Upon these persons stood or sat, able to see over the heads of the rest of the spectators. Curiosity seemed to be the principal reason for the presence of the crowd, for few of the persons in it knew Mrs. Becker, and others kept asking their neighbors to point her out.

After the burial Mrs. Becker returned to her apartment. She was quoted a few days ago as saying that there were some statements she wanted to make as soon as her husband's body had been buried, but when seen in the afternoon she said she had no comment to make.

TO HEAR WIRELESS SUIT.

Jersey Court Says War Can't Stop Action Over Tuckerton Plant.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 2.—The war in Europe is not to affect litigation involving ownership of the wireless station at Tuckerton. The Court of Chancery of this State will hear the suit brought by corporations of France to compel corporations of Germany to comply with an alleged contract entered into for the sale of the wireless station, an opinion to this effect having been filed in the court by Vice Chancellor Stevens. He holds that if a suit could be heard in time of peace there is no reason why it should not be in time of war.

The German company has filed an application that no action be taken by the court because of the existing circumstances; that Germany is at war with France, and that to enforce the contract at this time would cut off the only means of communication between Germany and the United States.

The bill for specific performance was filed by the Compagnie Universelle de Telegraphie et de Telephonie Sans Fil against the United States Service Corporation and the Hoch Frequenz-Malhinnen Aktiengesellschaft fur Drahtlose Telegraphe of Berlin, Germany.

The contract between the French and German corporations was entered into on Sept. 30, 1912. It provided that certain patents of invention for the production of high frequency currents especially intended for wireless telegraphy should be transferred to the French corporation and also the Tuckerton station. The consideration was to be 2,500,000 francs and 50,000 founders' shares of stock in the French company.

It is the claim of the French concern that the time has come to carry out this contract, and that because of the present war the German company refuses to fulfill the agreement.

The present controversy concerns land title in New Jersey and is a subject over which New Jersey courts have exclusive control, says the Vice Chancellor.

NO TRACE OF CORNELIUS.

Bonding Company Sends Slepths on Trail of Missing Bank Cashier.

Special to The New York Times.

ENGLEWOOD, N. J., Aug. 2.—No tidings have been received of either Abraham Cornelius, Jr., for nineteen years teller and cashier of the Citizens National Bank in Englewood, or Miss Loretta N. Adelgais of Rochelle Park, who for five years was his stenographer and secretary, who disappeared on last Wednesday.

Mrs. Mary Adelgais, the girl's widowed mother, was made ill today by worry over her daughter.

"Of course, Loretta was my only support and I'll miss her $18 a week, but that isn't worrying me," said Mrs. Adelgais, with tears streaming down her face. "It's the fact that this man has finally prevailed upon this good girl of mine to run away with him and do this awful thing."

It was said that not even the Englewood police had been notified officially by the bank officials of the theft, but it was asserted that the bonding company had sent their men out on the trail of the missing cashier.

The statement of Mrs. Adelgais that the cashier complained of his unhappy home life surprised the missing man's friends here, many of whom said they could hardly credit that phase of the case. They insisted that Mr. Cornelius was always attentive to his family, even though he did oppose the marriage of his elder daughter to John Meehan, a steamship clerk of New York.

SCOLDED GIRL ENDS LIFE.

Forbidden a Sweetheart at 14, She Leaps Into Passaic River.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., Aug. 2.—Last Friday night fourteen-year-old Elizabeth Garrity, a high school student, who lives with her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Grey, at 225 Park Avenue, received a visit from her widowed mother, who lives in another part of town. The girl has not lived with her mother since she was 14 months old, but her mother made her frequent visits and exercised considerable supervision over her. On Friday Mrs. Garrity found tucked under her daughter's mattress a postal card signed "Eugene," which told that the writer was going away for a vacation and could be addressed at Box 64, Lake Hopatcong. Mrs. Garrity upbraided her daughter severely for having anything to do with boys at her age, and the girl was morose after her mother left.

The next morning she was still gloomy, and her aunt ordered her sharply to sweep out the dining room. Mrs. Grey then went into another part of the house and when she came back the girl was gone. The police were notified that she was missing, and at 8 o'clock this morning Detectives William Lord and Otto Keppler found her body in the Passaic River.

SENATORS TAKE UP CITY'S DUAL SYSTEM

Ask McCall Why He Doesn't Stop Third-Tracking in Fulton Street.

MATTER IS BEFORE COURT

Thompson Committee Sits in Shirt Sleeves and Questions Public Service Commissioners.

Senator George F. Thompson and the members of his legislative committee from up State sat in their shirt sleeves on the bench usually occupied by the Public Service Commissioners yesterday and Chairman Edward E. McCall and his fellow-Commissioners occupied seats in the body of the hearing room, refusing the invitation to doff their coats. Mr. McCall was very indignant at the suggestion made by Senator Thompson last Friday that city officials "passed the buck" and enjoyed too many week-end vacations.

Merton E. Lewis, counsel to the committee, mollified Mr. McCall, and Senator Burr said it was all the fault of the newspapers. This seemed to satisfy everybody, and the committee plunged into the grievances of the Brooklyn property owners who had told the legislators how the third-tracking of the Fulton Street elevated was depreciating property in that borough.

"I am satisfied that the third-tracking work is being carried on satisfactorily under the commission's authority," said Chairman McCall, "and I feel confident also that the Brooklyn Rapid Transit is building under the terms of the contract."

In answer to a question he said the use of heavy steel girders instead of light lattice work was now before the courts, and he would deem it highly improper to comment on it. He said the company intended to run twenty-two-ton cars over the structure, which for the safety of the public must needs be strong.

Calls Elevated "Gingerbread."

"Why, the old structure on Fulton Street is gingerbread," said Chairman McCall. "You can ask our engineers if the heavier girders are necessary. This commission is in sympathy with the persons who complain that the third-tracking construction spoils their property, but we cannot, of course, go over the head of the courts."

Later Mr. McCall took a fling at the Committee of One Hundred of Brooklyn, which complained to the committee last week that the work darkened the roadway on Nostrand Avenue and Fulton Street.

"I'll tell you what the Committee of One Hundred is," said he with some heat. "It is an organization of men with personal, political axes to grind." Mr. McCall amended by saying he would not include Mr. Crawford in this category, and of the Rev. Father Belford, who appeared before the Thompson Committee last week, he said: "Father Belford uses very good judgment but intemperance of speech."

In the course of the hearing Senator Thompson remarked soothingly:

"We are not down here to get anybody. We are here to aid the city and not to criticise any commission, corporation, or citizen."

Also, in the course of the proceedings, Chairman McCall announced:

"This commission does not stand for any terrorism. You sit here about a month and you'll see what we have to contend with."

Getting back to the Fulton Street elevated, Mr. McCall said he was sorry for the property owners, and that personally he objected to elevated structures.

"But," he added, "how can the city afford to spend between $4,000,000 and $8,000,000 on additional subways? I have been protesting all along against erecting new stations and other things that eat up money that the city can ill afford and I am opposed to any action that seeks to delay the completion of the Dual System."

McCall Won't Stop Work.

"I don't expect to see the city at a standstill," he added, referring to the suits to stop the Fulton Street third-tracking, "but the matter will be left to the adjudication of the courts as long as I am at the head of the commission. I don't believe the courts will decree the third-tracking a nuisance."

Chairman McCall surprised the legislators by telling them that the Public Service Commission had not the power to overrule the decision of the engineer of the commission.

"The Fulton Street work calls for an expenditure of $500,000 a mile, while as a fact, the actual cost is $500,000 a mile. Is it your purpose to approve the most expensive kind of plan?" was asked.

"Speaking for myself, I don't care what kind of plan it is so long as it meets the heavy traffic," said Mr. McCall.

Senator Thompson declared that the Public Service Commission had the power to interrupt the work on the Fulton Street elevated pending the action of the courts, while Mr. McCall said the commission had no power to do so and would not interfere with the courts.

"I tell you," insisted the Senator, "that you can stop that work so unpopular among Brooklynites now if you wish. Your powers enable you to do so."

"Then, who would take the responsibility if the courts said the work is legal and must go on?" asked Chairman McCall. "Who would bear the responsibility of throwing all those men out of work?"

Thompson Sides With Owners.

"It would be no more an injustice to cease the work to those employed on it than to continue it against the wishes of the property owners," said Senator Thompson.

Herbert L. Carpenter of the Fulton Street Association said that the commission had ignored the requests of his organization to stop the work. He said lattice work could have been used on the cross beams instead of solid girders now being used which shut out the light from the street. Mr. Carpenter had photographs with him to show this.

"Millions of dollars could have been saved in property losses," said Mr. Carpenter, "if the other style of construction had been employed, and it would have left a way open to disassemble the elevated lines in the future when the city has enough money to do it. We believe that if the commission had made inquiry into the charter rights of the B. R. T. on April 14 last when we made complaint to the commission, they would have stopped the present work and made the company build an adequate but not permanent structure which would have saved Brooklyn an inestimable loss. It is not too late yet for the Public Service Commission to take action."

A stenographer's bill for $750 for work done during the Spring investigation of the commission is in dispute. Secretary Whitney said that as the Senators had an appropriation from the State they should pay it. Senator Lawson of Brooklyn said the commision should be made to pay for the folio work in the present case. Secretary Whitney said he would have one of the commission's own stenographers do that work now.

The hearing was adjourned until 10 o'clock this morning.

LEFT A "TITANIC" WILL.

J. M. Greenfield Provided for Trust Fund in Case of Disaster.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., Aug. 2.—When he executed his will on March 16, 1914, Joseph M. Greenfield, well-to-do candy manufacturer and horseman, inserted what is known as a "Titanic" clause, which provided for the possibility of the testator and his wife meeting death together in a catastrophe. The will was offered for probate today. After providing for several specific bequests, in which he remembered relatives and employes, the testator left the residue of his estate to his wife.

Mrs. Marjorie F. Metcalf of Orange is given $1,000 and an additional $100 with which to purchase a token of remembrance of Mr. Greenfield. Miss Erna Linington, a grandniece, is bequeathed $500. Mr. Greenfield left $500 each to Mrs. John Fort, who formerly was his servant, and Daniel Hildebrandt, his gardener. To Miss Bella Henderson, a trained nurse, is bequeathed $1,000. To each of the following the testator directed that $100 be given to provide for the purchase of tokens in his memory: Mrs. H. G. Shepherd, his sister; Mrs. Erna G. Delano, Franklin A. Chappell, Samuel V. Bogert, Louis E. Brown, Frederick I. Gisburne, Frederick H. Linington, Edward Neuhous, William Keish, John H. O'Meara, and Nicholas Wolff.

The inoperative "Titanic" clause of the will provided for the creation of a trust fund of $30,000 for Mrs. Elizabeth C. Chisholm, a $10,000 trust fund for Miss Linington, and a $10,000 trust fund for Mr. Hildebrandt. The residue of the estate would have been shared by Mrs. Shepherd, Mrs. Metcalf, Kenneth C. Chisholm, a nephew; Mrs. Erna G. Delano, a niece, and Mrs. Alva Linington, a niece.

CLOSE PART OF ERASMUS.

1,200 Children Who Were in Old Building Will Be Housed Elsewhere.

The end of the old frame buildings of Erasmus Hall High School was decreed yesterday, when President Thomas W. Churchill of the Board of Education sent directions to the Board of Superintendents to find such accommodation this Fall for the 1,200 children who were housed last term in the frame buildings as they could, and if such accommodations could not be found to deny them admission.

This order followed the letter to Mr. Churchill sent by Fire Commissioner Robert Adamson on Friday, in which he detailed the results of inspections made during the past week by Fire Chief John Kenlon, Deputy Chief Thomas Lally, and Deputy Chief of the Bureau of Fire Prevention William H. Swartwout, who had all condemned the buildings as unsafe and constituting a serious fire hazard. This was not an order, but merely a letter calling the attention of the President of the Board of Education to the danger. President Churchill took prompt action and ended the various compromises by which the use of the old buildings had been prolonged since they were first pronounced unsafe a year ago last Spring.

Prison for Girl's Annoyer.

A man who told the Magistrate that he was "John Doe" was arraigned yesterday in the Harlem Court charged with annoying Miss Lena Goldfield, 18 years old, of 183 West 100th Street. The man was middle-aged and said he had no home. Miss Goldfield said that he followed her for a considerable distance while she was walking along 104th Street and repeatedly spoke to her in spite of the fact that she ignored him, until finally she called a policeman. The prisoner was sentenced to thirty days in the Workhouse.

NEWARK.—Out of work and estranged from his only son, Fred G. Ortland, 66 years old, of 94½ Bleecker Street, committed suicide yesterday by hanging himself in his rooms.

OLD-FASHIONED WIFE SEEKS A SEPARATION

Mrs. Coyne, Who Has Had Eleven Children, Finds Sorrow in Wake of Prosperity.

'FORCED TO DO HOUSEWORK'

Husband Complained She Had Not Advanced Socially, She Says —He Denies Allegations.

Written into the formal language of the law in a separation suit started by Mrs. Margaret Coyne against Edward Coyne, a retired hotel man, is the story of a tired woman whose husband has told her that she is "old-fashioned and out of date." The quoted characterization was made part of the record of the case which was placed before Justice Ford in the Supreme Court yesterday.

Across the record was written the woman's added grievance that her husband complained she had "not progressed as rapidly socially as he."

Mrs. Coyne recited that she and the hotel man were married in England in 1878. She bore eleven children, sewed for them, did all the housework, and economized against a rainy day. The children grew up and went to school. The husband became more able at his business, and his possessions accumulated.

With prosperity shadows entered the home. Five of the children died at different times. The husband began to return home at two or three o'clock in the morning, intoxicated, according to the wife's complaint, and in place of his fond greetings of earlier days there were grumbling and at times downright harshness.

All the unhappiness cropped up after the family arrived in this country. Mr. Coyne had prospered still further, but, according to his wife, he "forced the plaintiff to do housework and washing and to make careful provision for his comfort."

Meantime, in contrast with her own busy and frugal life, she alleged, her husband spent from $5 to $10 a day for drinks in treating his friends, and expended large sums while enjoying himself at his Winter home in Miami, Fla., apart from her.

Mrs. Coyne related a long list of alleged cruelties, asserting that her husband once threw the contents of a bottle of beer in her face at Bergen Beach in the Summer of 1909, when their little daughter Virginia was at the table, and that several times he spoiled her plans to have a Thanksgiving or Christmas Day reunion of the family.

Mr. Coyne in 1910 sold a hotel in New York City for $70,000 and his equity was $50,000, which he received in cash, his wife declared. She said also that he had refused an offer of $10,000 in cash for his house at Miami, and owned thirty-five acres of tomato-growing land in Florida and an island in Jamaica Bay which nets him yearly $400. He has deposits in eight different banks in New York City.

Mrs. Coyne alleges that her husband failed to live up to a separation agreement entered into since December, when she threatened to start a separation suit. He has sent her only $35 with which to pay the June rental for her apartment, she says, and although she has flinched from bringing the suit necessity has driven her to the courts. Her slender income is insufficient to maintain herself and daughter Virginia, and to educate her at a private school for girls which she has attended for several years.

Justice Ford awarded Mrs. Coyne alimony of $20 weekly and counsel fees of $150, pending trial. She was represented by Thomas E. Brownlee of 27 Cedar Street. The husband's attorney is John Delahunty of 32 Nassau Street, who has set up a complete denial as a defense.

Raid Tenement Poolroom.

In the presence of a crowd of spectators, a squad of detectives under Lieutenants McNeil and O'Connor of Inspector Morris's staff, raided an alleged poolroom on the second floor of a tenement house in Third Avenue yesterday. Thirty-two men were arrested and carried away from the premises in three automobile patrols. According to the police, the men were engaged in placing bets on the races at Saratoga. Racing charts and betting sheets were found on the tables. Temporary telephone connections had also been established with Saratoga. The prisoners were all discharged in the Night Court.

HACKENSACK, N. J., Aug. 2.—The skeleton of a man supposed to be about 50 years old was found wedged between two rocks about 100 yards below the top of the Palisades at Alpine by several boy campers this morning. The body was fully dressed in duck trousers and belt, a black coat, and black soft hat. There was nothing in the pockets that would tend to identify him—only a package of tobacco and a comb.

MEXICO CONCERT PLANNED IN JUNE

Six American Republics Informed a Month Ago of President's Purposes.

PROGRAM ARRANGED THEN

And Accepted in Principle by the Other Nations—Details Not Revealed.

MEXICO CITY WIRES CUT

Bandits on Border Kill American Troopers and Wound Two Others —Filibusters Caught.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON Aug. 3.—The invitation of the United States to six Latin-American countries to have their diplomatic representatives confer with Secretary Lansing over the conditions in Mexico was extended more than a month ago. This significant fact was made known in an authoritative way at the State Department today. Its significance lies in two circumstances revealed: First, that more than a month ago the United States Government had ready a plan for the settlement of the Mexican troubles, and, second, that the Latin-American republics approached have had time to give careful consideration to this Government's suggestion, and have assented, in principle at least, to the plan of the United States for establishing orderly government in Mexico.

The invitation to the Ambassadors of Brazil, Chile, and Argentina, as well as to the Ministers from Bolivia, Uruguay, and Guatemala—the three senior members of the body of Latin-American Ministers—was extended on June 30. This afforded Ambassadors da Gama, Suarez, and Naon and Ministers Calderon, de Peña, and Mendez ample time tot confer with their respective Governments and obtain instructions authorizing them to participate in the conference.

The fact that Secretary Lansing was able to keep secret for a month that these overtures had been made to the ranking Latin-American diplomats in Washington not only came as a distinct surprise, but illustrated the extreme care and deliberation with which the Administration has been proceeding during the past two months in its efforts to solve the Mexican problem and aid in the restoration of order in that stricken country. It is not the purpose of the United States Government to commit itself to any plan with respect to Mexico without first consulting the ranking South and Central American countries and endeavoring to obtain their consent to whatever President Wilson does in his adoption of means "to be employed by the United States in order to help Mexico save herself and save her people," if the leaders of the factions in Mexico fail "to accommodate their differences and unite within a very short time," as he said in his statement of June 2.

Plan Still a Secret.

Secretary Lansing has consistently refused to discuss or comment upon the plan looking to a settlement of Mexican affairs which the United States will consider in co-operation with the Latin-American nations. There are many evidences that the peace plan which it will now be sought to perfect contemplates the active moral support and recognition by the leading Latin-American nations of a provisional President behind whom the people of Mexico can rally.

The plan does not contemplate the recognition of Carranza, Villa or Zapata, but looks to the settlement of the Mexican problem by going outside of the leaders of the present factions. With the active moral support and recognition of the United States Government, Brazil, Chile, Argentina, and other Pan-American countries, the United States would consider Mexican affairs as distinctly a Pan-American problem. The presentation of a united front is expected to exert a far-reaching influence on the warring factions in Mexico, and if this fails to impress the factional leaders, the United States Government, with the backing of the Latin-American republics, will be ready to proceed in the way best calculated to promote the restoration of peace and the constitutional régime in Mexico.

The present active leaders of Mexico are out of the question for the Provisional Presidency, in the eyes of the Washington Government, for the reason that, having virtually won the revolution, the professed object of which was to rid Mexico of men who ignored the Constitution and eliminate Huerta, they have disagreed and turned their arms against one another. All hope of any accommodation of differences and reunion of the Carranzistas, Villistas, and the Zapatistas under their present leaders has been virtually abandoned by the Wilson Administration. Two months have elapsed since President Wilson made to them his appeal of June 2 to unite within a very short time and there is less prospect now than then that Carranza and Villa can ever be brought together in a program of peace.

Whether a Provisional President once set up in Mexico would be immediately recognized is a detail to be discussed later. The probability is that instead of according official recognition to the Provisional President, the United States and the Latin-American nations would first give their "active moral support" to this man, in an effort to rally the Mexican people and unite the rank and file of the Mexican factions, and, after the lapse of a sufficient time, give formal recognition, this President serving until order has been completely restored, supervised elections held, and a President formally elected.

It is believed to be the plan of the United States Government to prohibit the shipment of arms and ammunition from this country to any and all factions that may oppose the new Provisional President. This can be done by re-establishing an embargo on shipment of arms from the United States to Mexico, whether by land or sea, when such arms are destined to any consignee except the provisional government. Once having committed themselves finally to the details of such a project, the Latin-American nations would naturally be expected also to assist in rendering this embargo strict and effective.

Besides the embargo it is the idea that the provisional president and his government would receive the financial support of prominent American and South American bankers who would be assured of the sanction of this and the Latin-American nations.

The Washington Government is still awaiting definite official confirmation of the reoccupation of Mexico City by the Carranza forces commanded by General Pablo Gonzales. On Sunday night Commander Luke McNamee of the American gunboat Sacramento, at Vera

SUBMARINE SINKS A BRITISH TRANSPORT

Majority of the Arneuron's Crew Drowned, Says Athens Dispatch to Berlin.

BERLIN, Aug. 3, (via Wireless to Sayville, N. Y.)—The Overseas News Agency today made public an Athens dispatch saying that a German submarine had sunk the British transport Arneuron.

It is added that a majority of the crew of the vessel were drowned.

BRITISH SHIP SUNK; THREE MEN MISSING

Ranza Probably Torpedoed—Captain and Twenty Sailors Reported Safe.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The British steamer Ranza has been sunk. The captain and eleven members of the crew of twenty-four have been landed safely, and a Lloyds dispatch says the Dutch steamer Prins Willem V. has signalled she has on board nine of the crew. This leaves three to be accounted for.

The Ranza, of 2,320 tons gross, 303 feet long with a beam of 43 feet, probably was sunk by a German submarine, but a statement to this effect is withheld by the British Admiralty, which has announced that it will no longer make public information showing the waters in which German underwater boats are operating. The Ranza, which was built at West Hatlepool in 1902, was owned by W. Christie & Co., of London, was last reported as having arrived at Liverpool on July 4.

REICHSTAG TO VOTE NEW WAR CREDITS

Unlimited Loan to Be Offered—Berlin Banks Report Favorable Conditions.

BERLIN, Aug. 3, (via London.)—The chief business of the Reichstag, which assembles on Aug. 19, will be to vote new credits for war purposes. While the details for the new bonds have not been arranged, it is assumed in banking circles that the amount, like that of the last loan, will be unlimited. The rate will be 5 per cent., but the subscription price is expected to be somewhat above 99, as compared with 98½ for the March loan.

The prospects for the success of the next loan are regarded as being highly satisfactory. The great German banks say they have completely sold out their bonds of the two previous war loans, and now have unusually heavy deposits. These recently were swollen so abnormally that the Berlin banks a short time ago reduced the rate paid on current deposits to the normal level.

POPE'S PLEA BRINGS PRAYER FOR VICTORY

French Cardinals Say Cause Is Just and Army Invincible—Amette Quotes Joan of Arc.

PARIS, Aug. .—Pope Benedict's appeal for peace has elicited from the French Cardinals, Luçon of Rheims, Andrieu of Bordeaux, Cabrières of Montpellier, and Sevin of Lyons, a joint letter enjoining all French Bishops to appoint a day of prayer for "the blessing of a durable peace, with the triumph of our army."

The letter reviews the circumstances under which the neutrality of Belgium was violated, under which France "was attacked by an enemy long prepared to violate her territory," and states France's cause as that of "our justice and civilization," adding:

"And this cause has for its support an army whereof the valor of its leaders and the heroism of its soldiers render it invincible."

Cardinal Amette Archbishop of Paris, did not sign the letter. He has issued, however, a pastoral letter to the clergy and the faithful of his diocese on the occasion of the Feast of the Assumption, recalling the story of Joan of Arc, who replied to the theologians objecting that if God decided to give victory to Charles VII., it was needless to fight, by saying: "Soldiers should fight and God will give victory!"

RIVAL PRIZE CREWS ON AMERICAN SHIP

Both British and German Aboard Cotton Vessel Sent to Cuxhaven by a Submarine.

BERLIN, Aug. 3, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—Among the items given out today for publication by The Overseas News Agency was the following:

"The American ship Pass of Balmaha has arrived at Cuxhaven, having on board one non-commissioned officer of a German submarine boat, which had stopped the ship and placed the officer on her as a prize crew.

While the officer was asleep the Captain of the Pass of Balmaha changed his course toward the British Coast, but when the officer awakened he compelled the Captain of the ship to obey his orders and put into Cuxhaven.

"On investigation at Cuxhaven it was discovered that a British prize crew of one officer and four men were on board, hiding below.

"The bark was bound with cotton for Archangel, Russia. She sailed from New York on June 24."

NEEDS 1,000,000 MEN'S WORK

Cost of British Navy's Supremacy Described by Mr. McKenna.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The labor of 1,000,000 men will be required to insure the predominance of the British fleet at sea, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Reginald McKenna, declared at a meeting at Preston tonight.

The British Government, he said, was spending upon the navy nearly half a million pounds ($2,500,000) daily in excess of what was spent in peace times.

CLOUDBURST KILLS 25 IN ERIE, PENN.

Light and Power Plants Put Out of Commission by Terrific Flood.

MANY HOUSES DESTROYED

Many Still Imprisoned in Wrecked Houses, and the Death List May Grow.

BROKEN DAMS SWELL FLOOD

Communication Cut Until Associated Press Man Wades to Wire Still Intact and Sent Message.

ERIE, Pa., Aug. 3.—Twenty-five lives are estimated to have been lost and millions of dollars in property damage was done in this city as the result of a cloudburst, soon after 6 o'clock tonight, which caused a flood that inundated a large section of the city.

The heavy precipitation caused dams south of the city to burst, letting out a flood of water that filled the main business streets to a depth of five feet, and, in some sections, reaching to the second-story windows of dwellings.

Among the first plants to go out of commission was the Erie County Electric Company, which supplied the city with light. Then The Erie Dispatch, a morning paper, whose building adjoins the electric light plant, was flooded, and all idea of getting out a morning paper was abandoned until midnight, when the staff was moved to the plant of The Erie Times.

In the meantime the first bulletin of the flood was sent to the outside world by an Associated Press operator, who waded in water up to his arm pits, to the Western Union Telegraph office, a distance of five blocks, and there sent out a story of the flood.

All telephone wires were put out of commission by the flooding of conduits, and it was hours before crippled telegraph communication could be partially restored.

At Ninth Street, along Mill Creek, the flood was at its worst. It is impossible tonight to ascertain how many persons have lost their lives there. Many are still imprisoned in houses, and the rescuers, led by Mayor Stern and members of the City Council, have been unable to get them out.

The entire eastern section of the city is cut off by the water, and what conditions prevail in the centre of this district cannot be conjectured.

Among the missing are Assistant Fire Chief James Suernon and four firemen. Reports were made to the police that a house floated down Mill Creek with four women and three children clinging to it. Suernon and the firemen tried to rescue them, but lost their lives in the attempt.

Every store in State Street, the main business street of the city, is flooded, and at least fifty houses are reported washed away.

The Narecki manufacturing plant has been washed away, and twenty automobiles that were in the garages went with them.

A little girl standing on the banks of Mill Creek was carried down to her death when the bank caved in.

WAVES BREAK OVER TRAINS.

Fear That Highland Beach Bulkheads Will Be Washed Away.

Special to The New York Times.

HIGHLANDS, N. J., Aug. 3.—This resort, as well as Normandie, is again in the grip of a fierce storm, the ocean having been whipped into a fury by strong northeast winds which have been blowing a gale for the past twelve hours. Late this afternoon the sea was breaking over the bulkheads at Highland Beach and was breaking against the east side of the Highland Beach railroad station, which is in danger of being washed away.

Locomotives and passenger coaches travelling between here and Highlands were frequently submerged with spray as the ocean broke against the stone bulkheads of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, tearing out large rocks from the bulkheads. Frequently the waves broke against trains. Thousands of Summer visitors and cottagers from all along the coast visited the scene today.

Life guards are stationed at Highland Beach and the sightseers have been warned to keep a certain distance from the bulkheads, which may be washed away at any minute. The storm is said by many to be nearly as bad as those of last winter, which wrought such havoc to homes and property along the coast.

Passengers on Train 78, the Monmouth Express leaving Asbury Park at 1:55 o'clock, saw the storm at its height. Conductor J. W. Creby ordered all windows and ventilators closed as the train came into the danger zone at Sea Bright, and soon the passengers watched the waves leap the massive new bulkhead and smash against the sides of the cars. The big locomotive was shedding sea water like an emerging submarine, and Engineer W. F. Hartman's clothes were wet through.

The steamer Monmouth rolled before she cleared the Horseshoe. About halfway between the Hook and Coney Island passengers on the port side saw the body of a drowned man in a bathing suit plunged by the waves within fifty feet of the rail.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 3.—The two-masted schooner Tartar, which left New York City twelve days ago on a fishing trip, crumbled before the lashing combers on Brigantine Beach this afternoon. The vessel was falling away when Captain Jacob Riley of the Little Egg

SING SING INMATES WENT OUT VISITING

Prison Supt. Riley Has Warden Osborne's Orders for "Leaves of Absence."

WHITMAN WILL NOT ACT

Is Dissatisfied, but Would Like Riley to Swing the Axe—Osborne Denies Insubordination.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 3.—Convicts from Sing Sing with long terms to serve have visited New York City on several occasions under orders from Warden Thomas Mott Osborne. Sometimes they have gone alone, in some instances they have been accompanied by a keeper.

State Supt. of Prisons John B. Riley has copies of Warden Osborne's orders in his possession. They were among the papers over which Mr. Osborne and Patrick H. McDonald, confidential agent of the prison department, had a fight at the railroad station in Ossining on the day of Becker's execution.

All of the convicts permitted to leave the prison and go to New York returned to Sing Sing. One prisoner, Daniel O'Day, who was serving a term of six to twenty-four years for attempted murder in the first degree, after being returned safely from such an excursion, made an attempt to escape from Sing Sing on July 14 this year and was transferred to Dannemora.

Governor Glynn ordered the removal of Thomas J. McCormick, Mr. Osborne's predecessor, as Warden of Sing Sing for permitting David a Sullivan, wrecker of the Union Bank in Brooklyn, to act as his chauffeur and to accompany him and his family on automobile trips to Yonkers and to New York City. Neither Governor Whitman, nor Superintendent of Prisons Riley, however, are showing the slightest inclination to take any action against Warden Osborne as a result of the unusual liberties permitted prisoners at Sing Sing during his régime.

Whitman Is Dissatisfied.

The general opinion at the Capitol is that the Governor while deeply dissatisfield with the management at Sing Sing under Mr. Osborne and anxious to see him replaced prefers to have Superintendent Riley swing the axe. The Superintendent then would bear the brunt of any criticisms that might follow, from the very influential people who have signified their unqualified approval of the Osborne plan of prison management.

Mr. Riley, it is known, would remove Mr. Osborne without much delay if he felt certain that h ewould have the Governor's support and is deterred from drastic action purely because he fears that he would be made "the goat" in case Mr. Osborne's removal would arouse a storm of adverse public sentiment, strong enough to drive Governor Whitman to cover.

The papers now in Mr. Riley's possession show that to "Tough Tony" Marino and another convict named Duffy were given passes to leave Sing Sing by Mr. Osborne. They were to go to an undertaking shop to view the body of "Canada Blackie," a notorious criminal with a long prison record and three sensational escapes to his credit.

Convicts Went to Funerals.

In March, Warden Osborne signed an order to permit J. S. Block, a forger sentenced to a long term as a second offender, to go to Brooklyn to attend his mother's funeral. A keeper was sent along because Block had a bad prison record. He had been punished several times for infractions of the prison rules. Daniel O'Day also obtained "leave of absence" for the purpose of attending a funeral, while George Stahl and another prisoner named Sonnenberg gained a temporary release to visit sick relatives.

It was learned today that the practice of letting prisoners take journeys away from the prison had been continued by Warden Osborne in disregard of positive orders issued by Superintendent Riley not to allow such liberties.

Mr. Riley received his first information of the practice at Sing Sing when a convict at Great Meadow wrote the Prison Department and asked permission to go to his home in Buffalo to see a sick child. Mr. Riley wrote this convict, who was a model prisoner, a letter couched in the most considerate terms, but telling him that his request could not be granted. This prisoner had been transferred from Sing Sing a short time before.

In replying to Mr. Riley's reply, he wrote that if he had remained at Sing Sing he could have obtained permission without appealing to the department, and did not see why he, a model prisoner, should be discriminated against in such fashion.

It was then that Superintendent Riley issued his general order against "leaves of absence" which, judging from the evidence in Mr. Riley's possession, Warden Osborne ignored.

Warden Denies a Fake.

Governor Whitman said this evening that there was "nothing new" in the prison situation. Superintendent Riley declined to be dragged into any discussion of conditions at Sing Sing, but gave out for publication a denial from Warden Osborne to a newspaper article in which he had been quoted as telling the prisoners at Sing Sing that he would be removed within ten days, but that he would "come back." The denial came in this telegram:

"Tribune article this morning with account of my remarks in mess hall yesterday utterly inaccurate and false. I made no such statements as those printed."

It was said here today that Warden Osborne had "tightened up" somewhat in his methods of prison management at Sing Sing. It was inferred that the "tightening up" was due to advice from Superintendent Riley, who is said to have received inside information to the effect that Sing Sing was on the verge of a serious outbreak among the prisoners, due to the unusual relaxation of prison discipline that has marked the Osborne regime.

MEDIATION ATTEMPT IN HAITI RESENTED

Authorities at Cape Haitien Refuse to Entertain Commission's Proposals.

FAMINE THREATENS ISLAND

Many Towns on the Verge of Starvation and This Country May Have to Send Supplies.

CAPE HAITIEN, Aug. 3.—The commission sent by Rear Admiral Caperton, composed of five members, including the French Archbishop of Port au Prince, and escorted by an officer of the American cruiser Washington, arrived here today from the Haitian capital. Its object is to make an effort to bring about peace between the Government troops commanded by General Bourand, Minister of the Interior in the Cabinet of the late President Guillaume, and the followers of Dr. Rosalvo Bobo. Both leaders are aspirants for the Presidency of Haiti.

The authorities of Cape Haitien refused to entertain any mediatory proposals.

Fighting continues in the Morin quarter.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Rear Admiral Caperton, in command of the American forces in Haiti, cabled to Secretary Daniels today that all was quiet at Port au Prince and at Cape Haitien and that the battleship Connecticut would arrive at Port au Prince tomorrow with the expeditionary regiment of marines to be used as reinforcements in restoring order.

Admiral Caperton made no report concerning the peace commission which he has sent from Port au Prince to Cape Haitien under instructions to require the rival factions in that vicinity to disarm and disband. This commission will endeavor to persuade Generals Blot and Bobo, leaders of the rival forces, to return to Port au Prince from Cape Haitien with the commission in order to participate in conferences with a view to restorin gorder in the republic.

Haiti, racked by revolution and mob rule, is now also threatened by famine. Reports coming in today say many towns are on the verge of starvation, and it probably will be necessary to send food supplies and sanitary relief as one of the first steps in establishing a Government there.

The gunboat Osceola was ordered today from Guantanamo to Port au Prince to join Admiral Caperton's squadron.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 3.—The gunboat Castine, now at the New Orleans Navy Yard, was ordered today to proceed at once to Port au Prince.

She will probably get away tomorrow.

REPORT TURKS SHOT WOMEN AND CHILDREN

Nine Thousand Armenians Massacred and Thrown Into Tigris, Socialist Committee Hears.

PARIS, Aug. 3.—B. Varazdate, a member of the Executive Committee of the Armenian Social Democratic Party, writing to L'Humanite, the Socialist daily, says that the committee has received word to the effect that Turks, after massacring all the males of the population in the region of Bitlis, Turkish Armenia, assembled 9,000 women and children and drove them to the banks of the Tigris, where they shot them and threw the bodies into the river.

These advices have not been substantiated from any other source.

The Armenian population of Cilicia, in the Turkish Vilayet of Adana, also has been subjected to persecutions, according to the reports of the committee. More than 40,000 persons already are dead and it is feared that the Armenians at Moucks and Diarbekr, in Kurdestan, also have been massacred.

Twenty members of the Armenian Social Democratic Party, M. Varzadate says, have been publicly hanged in Constantinople after being charged with wishing to found an independent Armenia.

BRITISH COLONIALS TAKE GALLIPOLI RIDGE

Position "Materially Improved," Gen. Hamilton Reports—Turks Claim Success Over Russians.

LONDON, Aug.3.—The crest of a ridge in the Gallipoli Peninsula has been gained by British troops and the position of the British in the Dardanelles has been improved, according to a statement given out today by the Official Press Bureau.

The text of the statement follows:

General Sir Ian Hamilton reports on Aug. 2 that on the right position held by the Australian and New Zealand corps a successful attack was carried out against a network of Turkish trenches which was beginning to threaten the safety of an advanced post called "Tasmania Post."

The attack consisted of a bombardment of neighboring works and the explosion of three mines under sections of a trench. These sections were occupied at once.

Another section was rushed with the bayonet. The Turks did not counter-attack. At least seventy Turks were killed in and around the work.

The result has been to gain the crest of the ridge and it has materially improved our position in that section of the line.

BRITISH NOTES HOLD BLOCKADE LEGAL; RUSSIAN DEFENSE MAY SAVE WARSAW; RESISTANCE UPSETS GERMAN PLANS

Great Britain Expects Further Notes, But Hopes Controversy With Us Can Be Settled

LONDON, Wednesday, Aug. 4.—In connection with the publication here this morning of recent diplomatic correspondence between London and Washington concerning delays to American commerce and Great Britain's Orders in Council, the Foreign Office explains that all phases of the controversy between the United States and Great Britain, except with regard to cotton, are covered in the British notes, and that when a decision is arrived at on the cotton situation it is probable that a note on this subject will be sent to Washington.

No question at the present time is giving the Government here more vexatious moments than cotton. The Government already has indicated that its decision not to treat the staple as contraband is not irrevocable, but it is not yet convinced that the proposed alternatives might not cause more trouble and friction than the present system of detaining cotton which is suspected of having an enemy country for its destination.

The correspondence concerning the seizure of the American steamer Neches, while bound from Rotterdam to the United States with a cargo of Belgian and German goods, already has been followed by positive results, as several of the consignments originating in Belgium which were aboard that steamer have been released and handed over to the American claimants.

Official circles here are not optimistic that the British replies will end the shipping controversy, but it is felt that the negotiations will not come to an impasse, as the Government has expressed its willingness to submit the differences between it and the United States to arbitration if an agreement is found to be impossible.

Reinforcements Rushed to Warsaw Invaders; Raw Levies Replace Veterans in West

Great Losses Inflicted by Russians on Germans Throughout Poland.

LONDON, Wednesday, Aug. 4.—The stubborn resistance which the Russians are offering to the Austro-Germans and the slowness with which the forces of the invaders have been able to move during the last few days has led to the belief in some quarters that the German supply of ammunition is beginning to feel the effect of the protracted struggle and that Russia may yet save the Polish capital.

Previous experience with German tactics, however, has been that a temporary slowing down has been followed soon by greater efforts, and when Field Marshal von Mackensen has concluded his present operations in the southeast, Field Marshal von Hindenburg, it is expected, will renew his heavy blow on the Narew front.

For the moment, therefore, the greatest interest attaches to the southeast, where, according to last night's Berlin official report, the Germans have extended their bridgehead positions south of Warsaw, the Austrians have gained a decisive success to the west of Ivangorod, and von Mackensen, after meeting with considerable resistance, has broken the Russian line east of Leczna and north of Chelm.

Similar successes have been gained by the Germans in Courland and in the direction of Lomza. To the minds of many military men, the Courland operations, which General von Bülow is directing, are fraught with the greatest danger to the Russians, as a big victory for the Germans in this region would enable them to move across the railways which feed the Russian armies. Further west they are already near Poniewesch, which is the junction of two branch lines of the Vilna-Petrograd Railway.

German Losses Serious.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 3, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—The position at Warsaw is still unchanged. Actions north and south of the city are proceeding successfully for the Russians, who are stubbornly holding back the enemy while their own main body continues to retire in proper order.

The civil life of Warsaw continues. People are still to be seen in the cafés and parks, but the hotels are empty, visitors having left for their homes.

So far everything has gone well in regard to the disposition of the Russian forces. The position in the Polish theatre is slowly becoming narrower, but in various battles the Germans are suffering great losses. So serious have these losses been that several corps were brought hastily from France to support Hindenburg's troops on the Narew, who are straining every nerve to break through to the branch line which connects the Warsaw-Petrograd Railway with Ostrolenka. The enemy is, however, met by the obstacle of the River Oje.

Further east is the station of Ostrov, beyond which the nature of the country would make open fighting too terrible. Consequently should the enemy reach Ostrov he would be obliged to dig himself in and endeavor to make further progress by means of sapping.

Throughout Friday and Saturday most bloodthirsty battles took place about twenty miles from Ivangorod. The Germans lost heavily in futile attempts to throw a foot bridge across the Wieprz. These efforts were made by Germans disguised in Russian uniforms taken from the dead. However, Cossacks who were riding near heard the Germans talking and soon the entire party was shot down.

Lose 20,000 Men in Latest Battles.

GENEVA, Aug. 3.—A dispatch to The Tribune from Innsbruck, dealing with the fighting in Poland, says:

"A large force of Germans from Komorova and Mazowieckie (in the region between the Narew and the Bug) are making an advance on the Bug, which is twenty miles distant. Heavy fighting is ensuing, as the Russians are making a firm stand. The Germans already have lost 20,000 men. Cossacks are making brilliant charges. The Germans, defeated at Orz, are retreating, surrounded by the Russians.

"General von Woyrsch's army suffered such heavy losses recently that he was obliged to rearrange it. On Aug. 1 Archduke Joseph Ferdinand sent large reinforcements, which enabled General von Woyrsch to cross the Vistula and occupy positions before the fortresses of Ivangorod and Novo Alexandria. Wet weather is hindering the German advance in this section."

Rush Reinforcements to East.

ZURICH, Aug. 4, (via London.)—The Russian defensive has proved much more effective than was expected by the Austro-Germans and has necessitated a complete change in their original plans or campaign, according to private information received here from Munich.

It is learned that the stream of troops from the western front to the eastern front, which began more than three weeks ago, continues undiminished and with greater speed. The places of these troops are being taken by men of five

POINTS TO OUR WAR TRADE

More Than Compensates for Losses—Five Notes Given Out, Three British in Full.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Five diplomatic communications relating to the detention of American ships and cargoes by the British Government, exchanged by cable between Great Britain and the United States, were made public textually and in paraphrase by the State Department this evening. Generally considered, the British responses to the American representations in opposition to the course of the British Government are a denial of the American contentions, but a disposition is shown by Great Britain to "make reasonable concessions to American interests," to quote a phrase of one of the notes.

In connection with the American protest against British prize court procedure, the British Government suggests that appeals in behalf of American interests claiming to have been injured be taken to the proper British tribunals and, if these appeals are denied, that recourse be had to an international tribunal. But Great Britain hopes that her disposition to make reasonable concessions "will prevent the necessity for such action arising."

The British communications are signed by Sir Edward Grey, Secretary for Foreign Affairs. They comprise an answer to the American protest of March 30 against the aphication of the British Order-in-Council for preventing supplies from going into Germany—an answer to a brief telegram from this Government serving notice of an intention to insist upon the rights of American citizens without limitation by Orders-in-Council and of a refusal to recognize the validity of prize court proceedings in derogation of the rights of American citizens, and an answer to a note sent by Secretary Lansing on July 15 objecting to compulsory unloading at a British port of goods from Belgium brought in the American steamer Neches, the compulsion being aplied on the ground that the goods originated in territory held by an enemy of Great Britain. The American communications furnished to the press for publication consisted of paraphrases of the brief telegram serving notice with respect to the Orders-in-Council and prize court proceedings and the note sent in connection with the seizure of the cargo of the Neches.

Seeming Note of Criticism.

The response of Sir Edward Grey with respect to the Neches is one of the most interesting in the series. German and British methods of warfare at sea are cited to show justification for the strict measures taken by Great Britain to restrain trade with Germany, and then appear these paragraphs.

"His Majesty's Government are not aware, except from the published correspondence between the United States and Germany, to what extent reparation has been claimed from Germany by neutrals for loss of ships, lives, and cargoes, nor how these acts have been the subject even of protest by the neutral Governments concerned.

"While these acts of the German Government continue, it seems neither reasonable nor just that his Majesty's Government should be pressed to abandon the rights claimed in the British note of the 23d, and to allow goods from Germany to pass freely through waters effectively patroled by British ships of war."

In another British communication, that of July 23, in answer to the American note of March 30, on the subject of the restrictions imposed on American commerce by the British Orders in Council, Sir Edward Grey defends the Order in Council measures on the ground that it is incumbent on Great Britain and her Allies "to take every step in their power to overcome their common enemy in view of the shocking violation of the recognized rules and principles of civilized warfare of which he has been guilty during the present struggle." Sir Edward Grey recalls that the attention of the American Ambassador in London already had been drawn to some of the German irregularities of warfare in a memorandum of Feb. 19, and adds:

"Since that time Lord Bryce's report, based on evidence carefully sifted by legal experts, describing the atrocities committed in Belgium; the poisoning of wells in Southwest Africa, the use of poisonous gases against the troops in Flanders and finally the sinking of the Lusitania without any opportunity to passengers or non-combatants to save their lives have shown how indispensible it is that we shall leave unused no justifiable method of defending ourselves."

Justified by Circumstances.

In the note in which this argument is used the British Foreign Secretary contends, in answer to the American objection to the Orders in Council, that his Government is unable to admit that a belligerent violates any fundamental principle of international law by applying a blockade in such a way as to cut off the enemy's commerce with foreign countries through neutral ports, if the circumstances render such an application of the principle of blockade the only means of making it effective. It

RUSSIAN DUMA FOR WAR TILL VICTORY IS WON

Punishment Demanded for All Officials Responsible for Lack of Munitions.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 3.—Michael V. Rodzianko of Ekaterinoslav was re-elected President of the Duma today by a vote of 296 to 24.

On the conclusion of the debate on the war the Duma placed itself on record by the unanimous adoption of a resolution, declaring it to be the Empire's unshakable determination not to conclude peace before Russian victory was complete, and pledging the willing assistance of the entire population for the creation of fresh means for continuing the struggle.

The resolution emphasized the necessity of forgetting old political quarrels and recalled the Government's benevolence with regard to the interests of "all loyal citizens of Russia without distinction of race, language, or religion."

The members also expressed their "unshakable faith that the shortcomings which hitherto have existed in the provision of munitions for the army will be immediately removed and that those responsible for criminal omissions will be made to pay the penalty, no matter what their position."

is asserted by Sir Edward Grey that the only question that can arise in regard to the new character of blockade instituted by the British Government, the so-called long distance blockade, is whether the measures taken conform to "the spirit and principles of the essence of the rules of war," these being the words used in the American note of March 30.

Arguing from that basis, Sir Edward Grey cites the Union blockade of Confederate ports in the American civil war and points out that, in order to meet a new difficulty produced by the fact that neighboring neutral territory afforded convenient centres from which contraband could be introduced into the Southern States and from which blockade running could be facilitated, the United States applied and enorced the doctrine of continuous voyage. Under this application, Sir Edward Grey points out, "goods destined for enemy territory were intercepted before they reached the neutral ports from which they were to be re-exported."

It is contended that Germany is in a position of peculiar advantage in the shipment of goods to neutral ports. In supporting the British restrictions on trade with neutral ports near Germany territory, it is asserted that a blockade limited to enemy pots would leave open routes by which German commerce could pass almost as easily as through the ports in her own territory. By this argument Great Britain seeks to show that she found precedent for her "long-distance blockade" in steps taken by the United States in attempting to prevent supplies from reaching the Southern Confederacy. The position of the British Government is that if a blockade is the appropriate method of intercepting the trade of an enemy country and can be made effective only by extending it to enemy commrce through neutral ports, the extension is in accordance with principles generally accepted.

Proper Discrimination.

Assurances are contained in the British response to the American communication of March 30 that Great Britain is not interfering with goods with which she would not be entitled to interfere by blockade if the geographical position and conditions of Germany at this time were such that her commerce passed through her own ports. The utmost possible care is being taken, it is declared, not to interfere with commerce "genuinely destined for or proceeding from neutral countries." The only commerce with which Great Britain proposes to interfere is that of the enemy.

The main argument of Great Britain is that when the established underlying principles governing blockade and contraband are not violated it is permissible to adopt new measures of enforcement. In view of this and the contention that there has been no violation of the underlying principles, reat Britain holds that it is impossible to maintain that the right of a belligerent to intercept the commerce of an enemy is limited in the wsy suggested by the United States.

Sir Edward rey says the British Government has been gratified to observe that the measures Great Britain is enforcing have had no detrimental effect on the commerce of the United States. Figures of recent months, he points out, show that "the increased opportunities afforded by the war for American commerce have more than compensated for the loss of the German and Austrian markets."

The note of the British Government, dated July 31, supplementary to the answer to the American note of March 30, is primarily a response to the so-called caveat telegram of Secretary Lansing sent on July 14, in which notice was given of the intention of this Government to insist on the rights of American citizens under the principles of international law hitherto established without limitation or impairment by Orders in Council or other municipal legislation, and to refuse to recognize the validity of prize court proceedings taken under British municipal law in derogation of the international law rights of American citizens.

Sir Edward Grey says he is not aware of any differences between the two Governments as to the principles of law applicable to cases before the prize courts, and then discusses prize court procedure at length, quoting Lord Stowell in the case of the Fox to show that a prize court must care for the interests of subjects of other countries as well as for the interests of its own Government, but that the court must assume that there is no violation of the rights of the subjects of other countries in orders which it receives from its own Government.

Willing to Find a Way.

Sir Edward Grey then makes the suggestion that if appeals open to dissatisfied American litigants in the prize court are denied by British appellate courts, an international tribunal shall be called on to decide. The United tates and Great Britain, he says, have both conceded that the decisions of national prize courts may properly be subjected to international review—by the Jay Treaty of 1793 and the Treasy of Washington of 1871. It is clear, therefore, he says, that both Governments have adopted the principle that the decisions of a national prize court may be open to review in certain circumstances; but if the United States should take a contrary view Great Britain would be prepared to negotiate with the United States as to the best means of procedure to apply the principle mentioned. But Sir Edward Grey hopes that the British willingness to make concessions will obviate necessity for this procedure.

The compulsory discharge of the Neches cargo because it came from belligerent territory held by Germany is made cause of complaint in the American note of July 15. The legality of the seizure is disputed on several grounds, among them that it violates the right of the citizens of one neutral country to trade with those of another. This Government calls for the expeditious release of the goods taken from the Neches which belong to American citizens.

In his response Sir Edward Grey mentions the difference between the character of the sea warfare of Great Britain and Germany as justification for not permitting goods from Germany to pass freely through waters controlled by British warships, but expresses a willingness to examine the facts in a spirit of consideration.

President Wilson is expected to return to Washington on Monday to consult with Secretary Lansing and other members of the Cabinet with reference to the character of the response to be made to the several communications of the British Government.

TEXT OF THE BRITISH AND AMERICAN NOTES

Detention of Ships, Seizure of Neches' Cargo and Prize Court Methods Covered.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Following is the text in each case of the five notes exchanged between the United States and Great Britain, which the State Department gave out tonight for publication:

BRITISH ANSWER TO AMERICAN PROTEST ON SEIZED SHIPS.

Ambassador W. H. Page to the Secretary of State:

(Telegram No. 2,225.)

From the American Embassy, London, July 24, 1915.

Following note, dated July 23, received from Sir Edward Grey this morning:

1. On the 2d of April your Excellency handed to me a copy of a communication containing the criticisms of the United States Government on the measures we have been constrained to take on account of the menace to peaceful commerce resulting from the German submarine policy. This communication has received the most careful consideration of his Majesty's Government.

2. I fully appreciate the friendly spirit and the candor which are shown in the communication, and, replying in the same spirit, I trust that I may be able to convince your Excellency, and also the Administration at Washington, that the measures we have announced are not only reasonable and necessary in themselves, but constitute no more than an adaptation of the old principles of blockade to the peculiar circumstances with which we are confronted.

3. I need scarcely dwell on the obligation incumbent upon the Allies to take every step in their power to overcome their common enemy, in view of the shocking violation of the recognized rules and principles of civilized warfare of which he has been guilty during the present struggle. Your Excellency's attention has already been drawn to some of these proceedings in the memorandum which I handed to you on the 19th February. Since that time Lord Bryce's report, based on evidence carefully sifted by legal experts, describing the atrocities committed in Belgium, the poisoning of wells in Germaed Southwest Africa, the use of poisonous gases against the troops in Flanders, and, finally, the sinking of the Lusitania without any opportunity to passengers and noncombatants to save their lives, have shown how indispensable it is that we should leave unused no justifiable method of defending ourselves.

4. Your Excellency will remember that in my notes of the 13th and 15th March I explained that the allied Governments intended to meet the German attempt to stop all supplies of every kind from leaving or entering British or French ports by themselves intercepting goods going to or from Germany. I read the communication from your Excellency's Government not as questioning the necessity for our taking all the steps open to us to cripple the enemy's trade, but as directed solely to the question of the legitimacy of the particular measures adopted.

Blockade of Neutral Ports.

5. In the various notes which I have received from your Excellency the right of a belligerent to establish a blockade of the enemy ports is admitted, a right which has obviously no value save in so far as it gives power to a belligerent to cut off the sea-borne exports and imports of his enemy. The contention which I understand the United States Government now put forward is that if a belligerent is so circumstanced that his commerce can pass through adjacent neutral ports as easily as through ports in his own territory, his opponent has no right to interfere, and must restrict his measures of blockade in such a manner as to leave such avenues of commerce still open to his adversary.

This is a contention which his Majesty's Government feel unable to accept and which seems to them unsustainable either in point of law or upon principles of international equity. They are unable to admit that a belligerent violates any fundamental principle of international law by applying a blockade in such a way as to cut off the enemy's commerce with foreign countries through neutral ports if the circumstances render such an application of the principles of blockade the only means of making it effective. The Government of the United States indeed intimates its readiness to take into account "the great changes which have occurred in the conditions and means of naval warfare since the rules hitherto governing legal blockade were formulated," and recognizes that "the form of close blockade, with its cordon of ships in the immediate cffing of the blockaded ports, is no longer practicable in the face of an enemy possessing the means and opportunity to make an effective defense by the use of submarines, mines, and aircraft."

6. The only question, then, which can arise in regard to the measures resorted to for the purpose of carrying out a blockade upon these extended lines is whether, to use your Excellency's words, they "conform to the spirit and principles of the essence of the rules of war"; and we shall be content to apply this test to the action which we have taken in so far as it has necessitated interference with neutral commerce.

Civil War Precedent.

7. It may be noted in this connection that at the time of the civil war the United States found themselves under the necessity of declaring a blockade of some 3,000 miles of coast line, a military operation for which the number of vessels available was at first very small. It was vital to the cause of the United States in that great struggle that they should be able to cut off the trade of the Southern States. The Confederate armies were dependent on supplies from overseas, and those supplies could not be obtained without exporting the cotton wherewith to pay for them.

To cut off this trade the United States could only rely upon a blockade. The difficulties confronting the Federal Government were in part due to the fact that neighboring neutral territory afforded convenient centres from which contraband could be introduced into the territories of their enemies and from which blockade running could be facilitated. Your Excellency will no doubt remember how, in order to meet this new difficulty, the old principles relating to contraband and blockade were developed, and the doctrine of continuous voyage was applied and enforced, under which goods destined for the enemy territory were intercepted before they reached the neutral ports from which they were to be re-exported.

8. The difficulties which imposed upon the United States the necessity of reshaping some of the old rules are somewhat akin to those with which the Allies are now faced in dealing with the trade of their enemy. Adjacent to Germany are various neutral countries which afford her convenient opportunities for carrying on her trade with foreign countries. Her own territories are covered by a network of railways and waterways, which enable her commerce to pass as conveniently through ports in such neutral countries as through her own. A blockade, limited to enemy ports would leave open routes by which every kind of German commerce would pass almost as easily as through the ports in her own territory. Rotterdam is indeed the nearest outlet for some of the industrial districts of Germany.

Blockade Extension Justified.

9. As a counterpoise to the freedom with which one belligerent may send his commerce across a neutral country without compromising its neutrality, the other belligerent may fairly claim to intercept such commerce before it has reached, or after it has left, the neutral State, provided, of course, that he can establish that the commerce with which he interferes is the commerce of his enemy and not commerce which is bona fide destined for or proceding from the neutral State. It seems, accordingly, that if it be recognized that a blockade is in certain cases the appropriate method of intercepting the trade of an enemy country, and if the blockade can only become effective by extending it to enemy commerce passing through neutral ports, such an extension is defensible and in accordance with principles which have met with general acceptance.

10. To the contention that such action is not directly supported by written authority, it may be replied that it is the business of writers on international law to formulate existing rules rather than to offer suggestions for their adaptation to altered circumstances, and your Excellency will remember the unmeasured terms in which a group of prominent international lawyers of all nations condemned the doctrine which had been laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Springbok, a doctrine upheld by the Claims Commission at Washington in 1873. But the United States and the British Government took a broader view and looked below the surface at the underlying purpose, and the Government of this country, whose nationals were the sufferers by the extension and development of the old methods of blockade made by the United States during the civil war, abstained from all protest against the decisions by which the ships and their cargoes were condemned.

Protection of Neutrals.

11. What is really important in the general interest is that adaptations of the old rules should not be made unless they are consistent with the general principles upon which an admitted belligerent right is based. It is also essential that all unnecessary injury to neutrals should be avoided. With these conditions, it may be safely affirmed that the steps we are taking to intercept commodities on their way to and from Germany fully comply. We are interfering with no goods with which we should not be entitled to interefere by blockade if the geographical position and the conditions of Germany at present were such that her commerce passed through her own ports. We are taking the utmost possible care not to interfere with commerce genuinely destined for or proceeding from neutral countries. Furthermore, we have tempered the severity with which our measures might press upon neutrals by not applying the rule, which was invariable in the old form of blockade, that ships and goods on their way to or from the blockaded area are liable to condemnation.

12. The communication made by the United States Embassy on April 2 describes as a novel and quite unprecedented feature of the blockade that it embraces many neutral ports and coasts and has the effect of barring access to them. It does not appear that our measures can be properly so described. If we are successful in the efforts we are making to distinguish between the commerce of neutral and enemy countries there will be no substantial interference with the trade of neutral ports, except in so far as they constitute ports of access to and exit from the enemy territory. There are at this moment many neutral ports which it would be mere affectation to regard as offering facilities only for the commerce of the neutral country in which they are situated, and the only commerce with which we propose to interfere is that of the enemy who seeks to make use of such ports for the purposes of transit to or from his own country.

Confusion of Methods.

13. One of the earlier passages in your Excellency's memorandum was to the effect that the sovereignty of neutral nations in time of war suffers no diminution, except in so far as the practice and consent of civilized nations have limited it "by the recognition of certain now clearly determined rights," which it is considered may be exercised by nations at war, and these it defines as the right of capture and condemnation for unneutral service, for the carriage of contraband, and for breach of blockade. I may, however, be permitted to point out that the practice of nations on each of the three subjects mentioned has not at any time been uniform or clearly determined, nor has the practice of any maritime nation always been consistent.

14. There are various particulars in which the exact method of carrying a blockade into effect has from time to time varied. The need of a public notification, the requisite standard of effectiveness, the locality of the blockading squadrons, the right of the individual ship to a preliminary warning that the blockade is in force, and the penalty to be inflicted on a captured blockade runner are all subjects on which different views have prevailed in different countries and in which the practice of particular countries has been altered from time to time. The one principle which is fundamental and has obtained universal recognition, is that by means of blockade a belligerent is entitled to cut off, by effective means, the sea-borne commerce of his enemy.

15. It is the same with contraband. The underlying principle is well established, but as to the details, there has been a wide variety of views. As for unneutral service—the very term is of such recent introduction that many writers of repute on international law do not mention it—it is possible, in the view of his Majesty's Government in these circumstances, to maintain that the right of a belligerent to intercept the commerce of his enemy is limited in the way suggested in your Excellency's communication.

Seizure of Enemy Goods.

16. There are certain subsidiary matters dealt with in your Excellency's communication to which I think it well to refer. Among these may be mentioned your citation of the Declaration of Paris, due, no doubt, to the words which occur in the memorandum sent by me to your Excellency on the 1st of March, wherein it was stated that the allied Governments would hold themselves free to detain and take into port ships carrying goods of presumed enemy destination, ownership, or origin, and to our announcement that vessels might be required to discharge goods of enemy ownership as well as those of enemy origin or destination.

17. It is not necessary to discuss the extent to which the second rule of the Declaration of Paris is affected by these measures or whether it could be held to apply at all as between Great Britain and the United States. In actual practice, however, we are not detaining goods on that sole ground. They are the property of an enemy. The purpose of the measures we are taking is to intercept commerce on its way from and to the enemy country. There are many cases in which proof that the goods were the property of the enemy would afford strong evidence that they were of enemy origin or enemy destination, and it is only in such cases that we are detaining them. Where proof of enemy ownership would afford no evidence of such destination in goods, origin or destination we are not in practice.

18. His Majesty's Government have been gratified to observe that the measures which they are enforcing have had no detrimental effect on the commerce of the United States. Figures of recent months show that the increased opportunities afforded by the war for American commerce have more than compensated for the loss of the German and Austrian markets.

19. I trust that in the light of the above explanations it will be realized that the measures to which we have resorted have been not only justified by the exigencies of the case, but can be defended as in accordance with general principles which have commended themselves to the Governments of both countries. I am glad to be able to assure your Excellency that we shall continue to apply these measures with every desire to occasion the least possible amount of inconvenience to persons engaged in legitimate commerce.

I have, &c. E. GREY.

AMERICAN PROTEST ON PRIZE COURT PROCEDURE.

The Secretary of State to Ambassador W. H. Page:

(Telegram—Paraphrase No. 1,848.)
Department of State,
Washington, July 14, 1915.

In view of differences which are understood to exist between the two Governments as to the principles of law applicable in prize court proceedings in cases involving American interests, and in order to avoid any misunderstanding as to the attitude of the United States in regard to such proceedings, you are instructed to inform the British Government that, in so far as the interests of American citizens are concerned, the Government of the United States will insist upon their rights under the principles and rules of international law, as hitherto established, governing neutral trade in time of war, without limitation or impairment by Orders in Council or other municipal legislation by the British Government, and will not recognize the validity of prize court proceedings taken under restraints imposed by British municipal law in derogation of the rights of American citizens under international law.

BRITISH ANSWER ON PRIZE COURT PROCEDURE.

Ambassador W. H. Page to the Secretary of State:

(Telegram.)
American Embassy,
London, July 31, 1915.

I have today received the following note from Sir Edward Grey:

Foreign Office, July 31, 1915.

Your Excellency: (1) I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the note dated 16th inst., in which you were good enough to communicate to me for the information of his Majesty's Government the opinion held by the Government of the United States, that, in view of differences which they understand to exist between the two countries as to the principles of law applicable in cases before the Prize Court, they could not recognize the validity of proceedings taken in his Majesty's Prize Court in derogation of the rights of citizens of the United States.

(2) I do not understand to what divergence of views as to the principles of law applicable in cases before the Prize Court the Government of the United States refers, for I am not aware of any differences existing between the two countries as to the principles of law applicable in cases before such courts.

3. British prize courts, according to the ancient form of commission under which they sit, are to determine cases which come before them, according to the course of Admiralty and the law of nations and the statutes of rules and regulations for the time being in force in that behalf.

As to the principles applied by the American prize courts, I note that in the case of the Amy Warwick (2 Sprague, 123) it was held that prize courts are subject to the instructions of their own sovereign, and in absence of such instructions their jurisdiction and rules of decision are to be ascertained by reference to the known powers of such tribunals and the principles by which they are governed under the public law and the practice of nations. It would appear, therefore, that the principles applied by the prize courts of the two countries are identical.

Quotes Lord Stowell.

4. As illustrating further the attitude adopted by the judges of British prize courts toward these two sources of law, the municipal legislation of its sovereign on the one hand and the principles of international law on the other, I should like to refer your Excellency to a classical passage in the judgment of Lord Stowell, in the case of the Fox, in which that famous Judge observed in the course of the discussion:

A question has been stated: What would be the duty of the court under Orders in Council that were repugnant to the law of nations? It has been contended on one side that the court would in such events be bound to enforce the Orders in Council, on the other that the court would be bound to apply the rule of the law of nations adapted to the particular case, in disregard of the Orders in Council.

This court is bound to administer the law of nation to the subjects of other countries in the different relations in which they may be placed toward this country and its Government. That is what others have a right to demand for their subjects, and to complain if they receive it not. This is its unwritten law, evidenced in the course of its decisions and collected from the common usage of civilised States. At the same time, it is strictly true that by the Constitution of this country the King in Council possesses legislative rights over this court and has power to issue orders and instructions, which it is bound to obey and enforce; and these constitute the written law of this court.

These two propositions, that the court is bound to administer the law of nations and that it is bound to enforce the King's Orders in Council, are not at all inconsistent with each other, because these orders and instructions are presumed to conform themselves, under the given circumstances, to the principles of its unwritten law. They are either directory applications of those principles to the cases indicated in them—cases which, with all the facts and circumstances belonging to them and which constitute their legal character, could be but imperfectly known to the court itself; or they are positive regulations, consistent with these principles, applying to matters which require more exact and definite rules than those general principles are capable of furnishing.

The constitution of this court, relatively to the legislative power of the King in Council, is analogous to that of the Courts of Common Law relatively to that of the Parliament of this Kingdom. These courts have their unwritten law, the approved reasons, principles of natural reason and justice; they have likewise the written or statute law in acts of Parliament, which are directory applications of the same principles to particular subjects or positive regulations consistent with them upon matters which would remain too much at large if they were left to the imperfect information which the courts could extract from mere general speculations.

What would be the duty of the individuals who preside in these courts if required to enforce an Act of Parliament which contradicted those principles is a question which, I presume, they would not entertain a priori because they will not entertain a priori the supposition that any such will arise. In like manner this court will not let itself loose into speculations as to what would be its duty under such an emergency; because it cannot, without extreme indecency, presume that any such emergency will happen. And it is the less disposed to entertain them because its own observation and experience attest the general conformity of such orders and instructions to its principles of unwritten law.

5. The above passage has recently been quoted and adopted by the President of the prize court in the case of the Zamora, in which Sir S. Evans said: "I make bold to express the hope and belief that the nations of the world need not be apprehensive that Orders in Council will emanate from the Government of this country in such violation of the acknowledged laws of nations that it is conceivable that our prize tribunals, holding the law of nations in reverence, would be called upon to disregard and refuse obedience to the provisions of such orders."

International Adjudication.

6. In the note which I handed to your Excellency on the 23d of July, I endeavored to convince the Government of the United States, and I trust with success, that the measures that we have felt ourselves compelled to adopt, in consequence of the numerous acts committed by our enemies in violation of the laws of war and the dictates of humanity, are consistent with the principles of international law. The legality of these measures has not yet formed the subject of a decision of the prize court; but I wish to take this opportunity of reminding your Excellency that it is open to any United States citizen whose claim is before the prize court to contend that any Order in Council which may affect his claim is inconsistent with the principles of international law, and is, therefore, not binding upon the court. If the prize court declines to accept his contentions, and if, after such a decision has been upheld on appeal by the Judicial Committee of his Majesty's Privy Council, the Government of the United States of America consider that there is any real ground for holding that the decision is incorrect and infringes the rights of their citizens, it is open to them to claim that it should be subjected to review by an international tribunal.

7. This proposition, that the decisions of the national prize courts may properly be subjected to international review, was conceded by Great Britain in Article VII. of the Jay treaty of 1793 and by the United States of America under the Treaty of Washington of 1871. Your Excellency will no doubt remember that certain cases (collectively known as the "Matamoros cases") were submitted to the commission established under Articles XII.-XVII. of the Treaty of Washington, in which claims for damages and proceedings in prize had been instituted in the prize courts of the United States, and in each case the judgment of the Supreme Court, the court of last resort in cases of prizes, had been obtained. The United States filed a memorial in these cases, alleging that, as they had been heard by the prize courts of the United States of original and appellate jurisdiction, the decision of the appellate court was final, and no claim based upon it could be before the commission. The demurrer was unanimously overruled and the cases heard, and the agent of the United States, in his reports of the proceedings of the commission, stated that he, personally, maintained no doubt the jurisdiction of the commission as an international tribunal to review the decisions of the prize courts of the United States where the parties alleging themselves aggrieved had prosecuted their claims by appeals to the court of last resort; as this jurisdiction, however, had been sometimes questioned, he deemed it desirable that a formal adjudication by the commission should be held upon this question.

8. The same principle was accepted both by the United States Government and his Majesty's Government in 1907 in connection with the proposed establishment of an international prize court, although certain constitutional difficulties have led the United States Government to think that the right of recourse to the international prize court in connection with a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States should take the form of a direct claim for compensation.

Reasonable Concessions.

9. It is clear, therefore, that both the United States Government and his Majesty's Government have adopted the principle that the decisions of a national prize court may be open to review if it is held in the prize court and in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, on appeal, that the orders and instructions issued by his Majesty's Government in matters relating to prize are in harmony with the principles of international law; and, should the Government of the United States unfortunately feel compelled to maintain a contrary view, his Majesty's Government will be prepared to concert with the United States Government in order to decide upon the best way of applying the above principle to the situation which would then have arisen. I trust, however, that the defense of our action which I have already communicated to your Excellency, and the willingness of his Majesty's Government, (which has been shown in so many instances,) to make reasonable concessions to American interests, will prevent the necessity for such action arising.

10. In any case, I trust that the explanations given above will remove the misapprehension under which I can not but feel the Government of the United States are laboring as to the principles applied by British prize courts in dealing with the cases which come before them.

AMERICAN PROTEST ON SEIZURE OF NECHES CARGO.

The Secretary of State to Ambassador W. H. Page:

Telegram-Paraphrase. No. 1852.
Department of State, Washington, July 15, 1915.

Ambassador Page is informed that it has been brought to the attention of the department that the steamship Neches, of American register, sailing from Rotterdam for the United States, carrying a general cargo, after being detained at the Downs, was brought to London, where it was required by the British authorities to discharge cargo, the property of American citizens. It appears that the ground advanced to sustain this action is that the goods originated, in part at least, in Belgium, and fall, therefore, within the provisions of Paragraph 4 of the Order in Council of March 11, which stipulates that every merchant vessel sailing from a port other than a German port, carrying goods of enemy origin, may be required to discharge such goods in a British or allied port.

Ambassador Page is instructed in this case to reiterate the position of the Government of the United States as set forth in the department's instruction of March 30, 1915, with respect to the Order in Council mentioned, the international invalidity of which the Government of the United States regards as plainly illustrated by the present instance of the seizure of American-owned goods passing from the neutral port of Rotterdam to a neutral port of the United States, merely because the goods came originally from territory in the possession of an enemy of Great Britain.

Mr. Page is also instructed to inform the Foreign Office that the legality of this seizure cannot be admitted and that, in the view of the Government of the United States, it violates the right of the citizens of one neutral to trade with those of another, as well as with those of belligerents, except in contraband or in violation of a legal blockade of an enemy seaport; and that the right of American owners of goods to bring them out of Holland, in due course, in neutral ships must be insisted upon by the United States, even though such goods may have come originally from the territories of enemies of Great Britain. He is directed further to insist upon the desire of this Government that goods taken from the Neches, which are the property of American citizens, should be expeditiously released to be forwarded to their destination, and to request that he be advised of the British Government's intended course in this matter at the earliest moment convenient to that Government.

BRITISH ANSWER ON SEIZURE OF NECHES CARGO.

Ambassador W. H. Page to the Secretary of State:

(Telegram.)
American Embassy,
London, July 31, 1915.

Sir Edward Grey has today sent me the following note:

The note which your Excellency addressed to me on the 17th inst. respecting the detention of the cargo of the steamship Nechas has, I need hardly say, received the careful attention of his Majesty's Government.

The note which I had the honor to send to your Excellency on the 23d instant has already explained the view of his Majesty's Government on the legal aspect of the question, though it was prepared before your Excellency's communication of the 17th had been received, and, pending consideration by the Government of the United States of the views and arguments set forth in the British note of the 23d, it is unnecessary for me to say more on the question of right or of law.

There is, however, one general observation that seems relevant to the note from your Excellency's respecting the cargo of the Neches.

It is the practice of the German Government, in the waters through which the Neches was passing, to sink neutral as well as British merchant vessels, irrespective of the destination of the vessel or origin of the cargo, and without proper regard or provision for the safety of passengers or crews, many of whom have lost their lives in consequence. There can be no question that this action is contrary to the recognized and settled rules of international law, as well as to the principles of humanity.

His Majesty's Government, on the other hand, have adhered to the rule of visit and search, and have observed the obligation to bring into port and submit to a prize court any ships or cargoes with regard to which they think they have a good case for detention or for condemnation as contraband.

His Majesty's Government are not aware, except from the published correspondence between the United States and Germany, to what extent reparation has been claimed from Germany by neutrals for loss of ships, lives, and cargoes, nor how far these acts have been the subject even of protest by the neutral Governments concerned.

While those acts of the German Government continue, it seems neither reasonable nor just that his Majesty's Government should be pressed to abandon the rights claimed in the British note of the 23d and to allow goods from Germany to pass freely through waters effectively patroled by British ships of war.

If, however, it be alleged that, in particular cases and special circumstances, hardships may be inflicted on citizens of neutral countries, his Majesty's Government are ready in such cases to examine the facts in a spirit of consideration for the interest of neutrals, and in this spirit they are prepared to deal with the cargo of the Neches, to which your Excellency has called attention, if it is held that the particular circumstances of this case fall within this category.

CROWN COUNSEL SAYS PACKERS TRIED FRAUD

British Solicitor General Asks Court to Condemn American Meat Cargoes.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—Sir Samuel Evans, President of the British Prize Court, reserved judgment in the meat cargo cases when the hearing closed today with the conclusion of the summing up of the case for the Corwn by Sir Frederick C. Smith, the Solicitor General.

The case affects the disposal of the cargoes of the Norwegian steamships Alfred Nobel, Kim, and Bjornstjerne-Bjornsen, and the Swedish steamer Fridland, consisting of farm produce, meat from the great American packing houses, and lard, which have been detained by the British Government.

Sir Frederick claimed that the entire cargoes should be condemned on the ground that they had been intended for Germany; that the claimants had failed to prove their innocent destination, and he alleged fraud on the part of the American packers.

The Solicitor General pointed out that it was only by accident that the Crown had been enabled to obtain a gleam of light through the interception of telegrams which had found their way into the hands of the British censors because the messages were obliged to traverse the cables passing through this country. There had been a vast system of communication, he said, which had not come within the reach of the censors, and he asserted that the claimants had persistently refused to produce any documents.

In conclusion the Solicitor General asked that the goods be condemned on the ground that: First, there was sufficient evidence of a military or Government destination; second, that fraud carried condemnation, and third, that fraud shifted the burden of proof to the packers who had failed to prove innocent destination.

If the court released the cargoes the Solicitor General asked that no compensation for demurrage be allowed.

Relative to goods consigned to others than agents of the packers Sir Frederick Smith contended that the claimants had not produced evidence to show that ownership had passed to them and, therefore, that the property was involved in condemnation with other property of the packers; and that the claimants were involved in general frauds organized by the packers and that the Government could not be expected to separate the good from the bad."

The court indicated that it would be some time before it had digested the complicated case and had reached a decision.

WAY TO GET BELGIAN GOODS.

British Suggest Americans Might Settle Through London.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Financial settlement through London is one of the conditions laid down by Great Britain in reply to American efforts to secure Belgian goods consigned to this country and now held at otterdam.

The State Department has represented unofficially that no benefit would accrue to Germany through this trade, but Great Britain apparently intends to see in each case that the money paid by American importers goes to Belgians only. Belgian goods will be released only when payment is made in London, Great Britain to forward the money to the Belgian shippers direct.

State Department officials believe that American importers cannot comply with this condition, as in many cases the goods held up at Rotterdam have already been paid for. Further negotiations will be undertaken to secure agreement as to this class of traffic.

HOLDS UP CARGO OF COAL.

British Admiralty Cables American Agents for Name of Consignee.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 3.—A cablegram received here today announces the seizure of the American schooner Laura C. Anderson by a British cruiser, which took her into Gibraltar. The schooner cleared from Newport News June 29 for Melilla, Morocco, with bituminous coal.

The message, which was received by A. D. Cummins & Co., agents for the schooner, asked that the consignee's name be cabled to the British Admiralty. From this request the agents here assumed that the cargo was shipped "to order." If this is so, the agents said, a mistake was made at Newport News in clearing the vessel. The clearance papers, they said, should have contained the consignee's name. The coal was shipped by a firm with offices in New York, and the agents expected to forward the name as soon as they heard from New York.

NORFOLK, Va., Aug. 3.—The American schooner Laura C. Anderson was cleared in proper order from Newport News, according to a statement made today by Collector Hamilton. He said there was no necessity that the name of the consignee be inserted in the clearance papers. When the name of the consignee was requested for the files of the Custom House it was not furnished.

PRESS OPINIONS OF NOTE.

New York Newspapers Comment on Its "Admirable Temper."

The following editorial opinions on the British note appear in this morning's papers:

Case Fatally Weak.

From The New York World.

Conceding the admirable tone and temper of the British note, and admitting the force of much of the argument, the British case nevertheless is fatally weak in that the blockade is not applied "impartially to the ships of all nations." No attempt is made to enforce the blockade in the Baltic. German traffic with Norway, Sweden and Denmark goes on without interruption. Where it is not convenient, no pretense of effective enforcement is made. Under the form of blockading Germany, Great Britain in reality is blockading the United States, while permitting German commerce with the Scandinavian States to proceed without restraint.

It is useless to deny that changing conditions of warfare modify the ancient rules of blockade. The United States would be the last country in the world to repudiate its own record. But there are two principles of a blockade which cannot be set aside without abandoning the whole structure of international law as affecting the trade rights of neutrals. One is that the blockade must be effective, and the other is that it must be impartial, and these rules are now habitually disregarded by Great Britain.

British and German Contrast.

From The New York Herald.

By their omissions as well as in their contents the British notes, made public today, present striking contrasts to the notes sent to the Government of the United States by Germany. It is notable that in the British notes there is none of the "might makes right" truculence which has permeated the communication from Berlin, and no such affront to American intelligence as the German whine about a "struggle for self-defense" advanced as an excuse for a war which the world knows is a war of German offense.

The outstanding impression the two main British notes will make on all intelligent and fair-minded men is that they reflect absolute confidence in the justnes of the cause they uphold. The Government of Great Britain proceeds on the theory that the American people are intelligent, and in appealing to American intelligence it gives with utmost frankness the reasons for its faith in the justice of its cause.

BRITISH APPEAL TO US.

Morning Post Urges Americans to be Tolerant and Generous.

In an article addressed to America The Morning Post says:

"We have been compelled, as an incident of war, in that struggle for national existence which we are now waging, to interfere with the commerce of America, in common with that of all neutrals, so as to prevent our enemy from obtaining from neutrals those articles necessary to the prosecution of the war.

"This duty has been peculiarly imposed on England because of her predominant naval strength. We should have betrayed our Allies, we should have been guilty of treachery to them had we not exerted our full power against Germany. In performing our duty we brought certain financial losses to America, and it is only natural that Americans should feel irritated, that they at times even question the justice of our actions. Yet we must ask them not to look at the matter entirely through their own eyes, even from the standpoint of their own material interests, but tolerantly, generously, just to understand our position."

The Post refers to the blockade against the South during the American civil war, which brought disaster to the English cotton industry, and the failure of England to declare cotton contraband in the present war, which the writer terms a "mistaken kindness" out of consideration to the United States and its people.

"Surely the United States will not add to our burdens," continues the article, "or weigh humanity against money, nor have we that fear. Americans have given too many proofs of their idealisms and have so repeatedly made sacrifices to sustain their principles that they will not, we are sure, in this great crisis allow material considerations, of passing magnitude to individuals but no more than a grain of sand in the scale of civilization, to imperil the world's future."

BERLIN WAITS CALMLY NEWS OF WARSAW'S FALL

Capital Unexcited by the Passing of the Anniversary of War's Beginning.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 3 (via London.)—The war anniversary was featureless here. There were no demonstrations or excitement, for the world war has become a grim acquired habit with the Germans. Even the bulletins of victories from the East do not arouse superfluous enthusiasm, neither does the apparently impending fall of Warsaw, which is awaited with tenseness.

Special significance attaches to the fact that by the Kaiser's orders the new battle cruiser launched at Wilhelmshaven on Sunday was named the Hindenburg, the naming ceremony being performed by Mrs. Hindenburg, thus giving the lie to rumors that Germany's idol had fallen into imperial disfavor. The Field Marshal's telegram of thanks to the Kaiser concludes with this sentence:

"My most heartfelt wishes will always accompany the cruiser in the unshakable confidence that wherever she appears she will watch over the welfare, safety and honor of the Fatherland as the faithful servant of her imperial master."

Eugen Zimmermann, writing in the Lokalanzeiger on the beginning of the second year of war, says:

"The Kaiser's memorable dignified anniversary message found an echo in all the churches throughout Germany in prayers for ultimate victory and an honorable peace justifying our tremendous sacrifices in blood and treasure. We do not believe that our enemies are ready yet to sheathe their swords in answer to the Pope's moving appeal. They are trying to accomplish their ultimate purpose of crushing Germany by enlisting new allies.

"Even as they are trying to drag America into the war, they are working feverishly in the Balkans, and have not yet given up hopes of success. The uncertainty as to the ultimate grouping of interested powers who are still onlookers cannot last long. The unheard of efforts on all sides must bring results soon.

"The unity of the whole German people guarantees ultimate success. Great deeds have been accomplished, but much still remains to be done. That every one in Germany, from high to low, knows."

SWEDEN HOLDS OUR WHEAT.

Discovers Cargoes Bound for Germany and Detains Ships.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 3, (via London.)—The Malmo (Sweden) correspondent of the Berlingske Tidene telegraphs that several ships, laden with wheat from America, have been detained there owing to the discovery that the wheat, which was consigned to a Malmo merchant, was destined to Germany.

Three large steamships to which it was intended to transfer the wheat are also held.

DANISH SHIP DETAINED.

British Seize the Sulda Maersk with a Cottonseed Cargo.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The Danish steamship Hulda Maersk, which sailed from Savannah July 10 and Norfolk July 13 for Malmo, Sweden, with a cargo of cottonseed, is being detained in a port of the United Kingdom by the British authorities.

GERMAN GUNBOAT RUN ASHORE BY SEAPLANES

Russian Machines Also Rout a Zeppelin and Bring Down a German Aviator.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 3, (via London, Aug. 4.)—An official communication issued this evening says:

Our hydroplanes attacked near Windau a German gunboat and forced it to run ashore. The same hydroplanes attacked and forced to retreat a Zeppelin and two hydroplanes, of the latter of which one was brought down.

In the direction of Riga our troops withdrew beyond the River Eyu.

CAPT. VON MUECKE MARRIED IN GERMANY

Emden Hero Weds Miss Finke—Crew of the Emden Attend the Wedding.

BERLIN, Aug. 3, (By Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The Overseas News Agency gives out the following:

"At the country estate of Karl Finke, at Oslebshausen, Captain von Mücke, who was one of the officers on board the cruiser Emden, which was destroyed by the Australian cruiser Sydney in the Pacific last November, was married to Miss Clara Finke."

"The members of the crew of the Emden, who reached Germany some time ago, were present as witnessess."

Von Mueck's title was Lieutenant when he was sent ashore with a boat's crew from the Emden last Nov. 10 to destroy the British wireless station at Cocos Island, in the Indian Ocean. Before he could return to his ship she had been engaged by the Australian armored cruiser Sydney, and he never sa

VON JAGOW PLANNED PARTITION OF CONGO

Urged on French Ambassador Common Action to Get Belgian Territory.

SNEERED AT LITTLE POWERS

Hinted That They Must Give Up Colonizing, According to Statements in Belgian Gray Book.

PARIS, Aug. 3.—The Belgian Government has published a second Gray Book containing various documents relating to the war.

Revelations in the Gray Book include the text of a dispatch dated April 2, 1914, from Baron Beyens, Belgian Minister at Berlin, to his Government, relating a confidential conversation between Jules Cambon, the French Ambassador to Germany, and Herr von Jagow, the Imperial Foreign Secretary, in which the latter proposed common action by France and Germany looking to the partition of the Belgian Congo. The message said:

"Von Jagow has developed the opinion that only the great powers are in a position to colonize. He revealed the basis of his thought by maintaining that the little States could no longer lead, in the transformation taking place in Europe for the benefit of the strongest nationalities as a result of the development of economic forces and means of communication, the independent existences they have enjoyed until now. They are destined to disappear or to gravitate in the orbit of the great powers."

Baron Beyens reports that M. Cambon promptly informed him of this conversation.

Another notable document is a communication from Baron Guillaume, Belgian Minister to Paris, to the Belgian Minister of Foreign Affairs, dated Feb. 22, 1913, apparently contradicting documents recently published by the Germans, alleged to have been found in the State archives at Brussels and purporting to have been written by Baron Guillaume.

"Explaining to M. de Margerie of the French Foreign Office the meaning of the Belgian military law, M. Guillaume writes that he said:

"'We wish to avoid, if possible, having Belgium again become as she too often has been the battlefield of Europe. * * * President Poincaré has assured me France never would take the initiative to violate our neutrality. * * *. Our aim is solely to prevent to the limit of our forces the violation of our neutrality.'"

The second part of the Gray Book consists of protests addressed by the Belgian Government to the Austrian and German Governments against alleged violations of the laws of war and The Hague Convention.

Germany's desire to extend her Africa possessions in the direction of the Congo has been made evident frequently in recent years. In 1911 she forced France to cede her 107,270 square miles of the French Congo, which she annexed to the Kamerun.

Even during the present war Germany has coveted the Belgian Congo. Almost as soon as she had invaded Belgium she sent a force across the Congo River from the Kamerun, but this was promptly cut off by a French force from the French Congo.

Certain German publicists, onbeing asked to name the terms of settlement at the end of the present war, have been quoted as saying that Belgium might preserve her territorial entirety in Europe provided certain commercial concessions were made, together with the cession of the Belgian Congo. The views of one of these publicists, who in this instance was "a well-known statesman," were recently repeated by Miss Jane Addams in an interview.

The Congo proper, [the Congo Free State,] founded by Leopold II., King of the Belgians, as a private rubber enterprise in 1882, might have been Germany's at the time the delegates of the powers granted it perpetual neutrality in 1885, had not sheput forth her claims as protector in a manner to frighten France and England. After the rubber scandals the State was turned over to Belgium to manage in 1907, and was finally annexed with the approval of the powers.

The area of the Belgian Congo is 900,654 square miles and it has a population of about 15,000,000. As the Congo Free State, its revenue about equaled its expenditure, (on paper,) although King Leopold and his associates are known to have made vast fortunes out of the enterprise. In 1914, however, its revenue was over $8,000,000 and its expense to the Belgian Government over $10,600,000.

BELGIAN ARMY STRONG AS EVER, SAYS KING

Appeal to Young Belgians Dispersed Abroad Effective, and Losses Were Made Up.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MILAN, Aug. 3, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—Through the medium of Il Secolo, which has above all other Italian papers supported the cause of Belgium, King Albert expresses his thanks for the sympathy which has been shown to the Belgians by the Italians.

After having spoken of the events of the first year of war and the present position on the Belgian-German front, the King remarks that the prolongation of the war has allowed the Belgians to re-form their cadres (organizations) and complete their effectives by means of the appeal which the Government made to young Belgians dispersed throughout England, Holland, and France.

The result, says the King, is that after a year of war the Belgian Army now finds itself again as strong as it was at the moment of the German invasion last August. This unhoped for position is, he adds, proof of the brilliant virtues of endurance and patriotism of the Belgian people.

Cholera Ravages Hungary.

AUSTRIANS WEAKEN ON ISONZO FRONT

Prepare to Evacuate Their First Lines from Travignol to Avisia.

DRIVEN BACK IN TYROL

Novereto Forts Battered—Italians in Carinthia Capture Several Miles of Railroad.

GENEVA, Aug. 3.—A dispatch to The Tribune from Laibach says:

"The Austrians are preparing to evacuate their first lines of defense in the Isonzo region from Travignolo to Avisia.

"In Tyrol the Italians are forcing the enemy across the railway. In a strong Italian advance in the Gail River Valley the best Tyrolese troops were overcome and several points on the Gail were occupied.

"In the Fella River region (Carinthia) the Italians took possession of several miles of the railway."

VERONA, Aug. 3.—Although the weather still is unsettled the advance of Italian forces against Rovereto, thirteen miles southwest of Trent, is progressing along the Arsa Valley.

The forts surrounding the town already are said to be suffering under the fire of Italian siege guns which were transported to platforms prepared on the mountains south of Rovereto.

VIENNA, Aug. 3, (via London.)—The War Office today gave out the following:

The coastal district from Krn to the bridgehead at Gorizia is almost completely quiet.

The border plateau of Polazzo has been attacked by strong Italian forces five times. The enemy attacked our infantry who held positions east of the village and at Monte Sei Busi. On each occasion, after heavy fighting, the attack was repulsed. The Italians suffered great losses. Reinforcements brought up by the Italians were surprised by our artillery and dispersed.

While this battle was ragin other sections of the plateau were kept under strong fire by the artillery of the enemy.

On the Carinthian frontier the enemy under cover of a thick fog attempted an attack against Gelion Kofel, east of Ploeken, which completely failed. Otherwise there is nothing new on this front.

In the district of Monte Cristallo one of our patrols met a strong enemy detachment and in a short skirmish the enemy lost twenty-nine men.

GORIZIA BATTLES LONG AND HEAVY

German Observer Draws Vivid Picture of Great Struggle for Austrian Fortress.

BERLIN, July 21, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—Attacks that in bitterness and determination beggar description, losses that run into the thousands, desperate, useless infantry assaults following hour-long artillery fire, have characterized the terrible struggle between the Italian and the Austrian forces along the lower Isonzo River.

When the war shall have ended it is doubtful whether Neuve Chapelle and Ypres will stand out more grimly terrible than some of the bloody battles of early July along the Austro-Italian frontier.

A picture of the green Isonzo literally afloat with bodies, of the meadows and fields along its course a veritable shambles, of whole companies and battalions wiped out of existence on both sides, of prowling night attacks checked by ghost-like searchlights, and of almost unbearable artillery fire withering and destroying everything in its path, is drawn by Leonard Adelt, correspondent of the Berlinger Tageblatt, in a dispatch from the Isonzo River.

Adelt sketches dramatically the events leading up to the fearful Italian attacks, the secrecy of the preparations, the terrible strain of withstanding them when they did come, and the bravery displayed on both sides. His dispatch is in part as follows:

"In single file the Dalmatians groped their way up the path through the woods to the 'saddle' of the Plava Heights. Soon they could hear the rasp of spades and the hack of picks, and took their appointed places in the shelters that are shot to pieces by the Italians in the daytime, and that are repaired again each night.

Searchlight Foils Foe's Sappers.

"On the night of July 4 it was unusually still, on both sides. The ghostlike arm of our searchlight groped its way along the fortifications of the enemy, the bags of sand in which looked like rows of dead men. The white shaft of light in one of its journeys revealed the enemy's sappers, lying flat behind rocks, their faces distinguishable through a glass in the bright light.

"They had placed iron tubes with explosives under the barbed wire entanglements, and when they found themselves discovered they rose fearlessly and advanced. A few of the mines exploded suddenly, the explosions followed by tangled wires and flying posts and stones. But before they could get to our trenches the rifles opened fire and the sappers dropped, annihilated.

"Behind the ruin of every house in Oslavija, Gradiscutta and Podgora, behind every stone and bush, there were Italians. Their number grew to an entire corps, three infantry divisions.

"Their catapults spat mines into our obstructions and at night smaller groups assailed our positions with hand grenades and rifle fire. All through the 3th of July the cannon thundered about us. Again and again they made dirt heaps of our covering and graves of our shelters. The howitzer shells acted much like a sword that mows down everything in front of it, and under their shelter there advanced toward us from Oslavija column after column of the enemy.

"Opposition looked impossible and retreat out of the question, yet the Dalmatians, the Hungarians, and the Croatians did resist, outlasted the shell-covered death zone, dug themselves out of living graves into which they had been catapulted, and met the enemy with a lightning fire that decimated the attacking lines. They held the positions all that day and until the attack stopped at night.

"While an entire Italian army corps was trying to force the northern entrance to Gorizia, not less than three army corps were trying to get at it from the south, by a route which has as its pivot the Plateau of Doberdo.

"The next general attack on the 2d of July was prefaced again by a bombardment by cannon of all calibres. In some spots more than sixty shots a minute were counted. Two divisions then stopped the front lines between Sagrado and Vermegliano, and one regiment each at Polazzo and Redipuglia. But the Croatian troops, in bitter counter-attacks, drove the Italians back into the plains of the Isonzo, and even captured their machine guns.

"The 3d of July brought not only a bombardment of Redipuglia, but a night attack as well, which was repulsed.

"On the 4th and 5th of July the siege operations against the great natural bastion of Doberdo turned into a huge field conflict.

Croatians Face Five Divisions.

"The night of the 6th five strong divisions of Italians advanced against the Croatians who were in the inferior numbers, robbed of their shelters by the Italian artillery bombardment. Discharging their rifles and machine guns until the muzzles threatened to burst, they met the onslaught, literally mowing down as with scythes whole columns, but the gaping holes continued to fill up, and the Italian flood swept on, crested the first hill and threatened to engulf the exhausted defenders.

"Every available reserve was thrown into the breach, and by almost superhuman efforts it was possible to bring the enemy to a halt, and then to throw him back. Then the Italians took refuge behind bags of sand that had been brought along, and rested, awaiting another day and reinforcements.

"Dawn broke once more, and the bloody, dusty warriors rose wearily after a short, disturbed sleep among the stones and went at the bloody work once more like wild animals. The ground was almost as blood-red as the sky. Thousands lost their lives during these two days."

KILL 10,000 WITH ROCKS.

Italians Make Good Use of Nature's Weapons—Excel with Bayonet.

ROME, Aug. 3.—Letters received from officers at the front agree that the fighting on the Isonzo River and on the Carso Plateau may well be taken as an excellent example of the perfect realization of the plans of the Italian commanders. Nothing in these engagements was left to a chance. Everything was worked out with mathematical precision.

A Lieutenant of artillery, writing from the front, says the formidable Austrian defenses on Mount Podgoro and on Mount San Michele are no longer recognizable, the Italian artillery having done its work so well. A few days saw the destruction of what cost Austria a vast sum of money to build.

Other letters relate that a large proportion of the Austrian losses were caused, not by the Italian fire, but by the hurling down of rocks. Over 10,000 men were thus crushed to death in their trenches. At San Martini no fewer than 2,500 Austrian dead were found in a group of ternches, crushed by falling rock.

The Italians, these letters et forth, lost comparatively few men in this fighting. The reasons would appear to be two—first, the excellent use of artillery, and, second, frequent charges with the bayonet, a weapon which the Italians apparently handled to better advantage than did their opponents.

KAISERJAEGERS WIPED OUT.

Francis Joseph's Crack Regiment Annihilated on Carso Plateau.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TURIN, Aug. 3, (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.)The crack regiment of Kaiserjaegers, or Emperor's Own Tyrolese Chasseurs,' whom Emperor Francis Joseph passed in review at Schoenbrunn on July 18, immediately before their departure for the Austrian front on the Isonzo, were almost completely wiped out early in the morning of Aug. 1 on the Carso plateau.

Throughout the previous night the enemy had indulged in demonstrative actions all along that sector, in the hope of hoodwinking the Italians as to the precise point where a decisive attack was to be made. Then, at the first break of dawn, huge forces were hurled against the Italian right wing in a determined effort to recapture Mount Sei Busi, which dominates the plain.

The flower of the imperial army faced the fury of the guns with magnificent bulldog courage, but they were mown down almost to the last man. Thereupon the Italian Bersaglieri went forward in one of their impetuous, inimitable dashes, charging the foe simultaneously on the front and flank and causing them to flee in the wildest disorder. Six officers and 144 other prisoners were taken.

WINTER MODELS SHOWN BY PARIS MODISTES

Opening Displays at Jenny's and Doeuillet's Present Striking Novelties.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 3.—The small effect that the war has had on Paris as a fashion centre was demonstrated today, when Jenny was one of the first houses to exhibit Winter models. These are actually superior to those of the previous year. Before a crowd naturally smaller than usual, but comprising all the most important buyers, some 140 models were shown.

The principal feature is the absence of military models, with the exception of some Muscovite effects in fur-trimmed velvet. For afternoon gowns, which were one of the features of the show, the favorite material is velvet. Dark shades are preferred, including navy blue and black. Skirts are wide.

In tailored suits there is little new. The jackets are all below the waistline, with full godets.

Evening dresses are made in metal brocaded silks, generally of yellow shades, maize, and narcisse. They are trimmed with silver or gold lace.

Another good feature is theatre and restaurant gowns and evening wraps in velvets, trimmed with fur. The colors are mostly cerise and violet.

Among Jenny's new effects are a new wide, high collar for afternoon gowns, made of oval, and touching the front and back away from the side. Another novelty is a round revolutionary collar, single or double, in pelerine effects, also in postillion and Girondin styles. Another is a new sleeve for afternoon and the theatre, slightly puffed and full.

For similar wear she makes skirts with alternate rows of mousseline de sole and velvet, each band of velvet growing wider toward the bottom of the skirt from the waist, the muslin remaining unchanged. A striking novelty is a jersey blouse to wear with tailor-mades.

Doeuillet also opened today, showing a very Parisian collection, principally of velver corduroy and velvet faille for tailor-made suits and walking dresses. The colors, like Jenny's, are sombre. Quiet-colored blue and green plaids are also used. A feature of this collection is a wonderful show of evening gowns for young women in lancret blue and rose manon with silver lances.

HEAR BIG BATTLE ON YPRES FRONT

Reports from Courtrai Say British Are Engaged in Heavy Fighting.

HOLD GAINS, GERMANS SAY

Denying London Claims—French Repulse Attacks in the Argonne and Alsace.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—There has been considerable fighting in the western zone, in Artois, the Argonne, and Alsace, but, as usual, the claims of the French and German General Staffs conflict, both asserting that the fighting favored their troops.

Unofficial reports from Holland say that a big battle has been in progress along the British front in Flanders since Saturday, but there is no confirmation of this. A dispatch from Amsterdam received here says:

"Heavy fighting again is in progress on the British front near Ypres.

"According to telegrams from Courtrai, Belgium, the boom of great guns and mine explosions was audible there for hours, and it was quickly followed by a steady stream of wounded men from the vicinity of Hooge. Most of the casualties were the result of shrapnel wounds."

The following official communication was issued by the French War Office tonight:

There has been less activity on the part of the artillery along the whole front. In the Argonne a spirited struggle with petards and hand grenades continued throughout the day in the western section of the forest as far as the region of St. Hubert.

No modification of the front at any point has taken place. Before Vauquois the Germans exploded two mines, which caused no damage to our

The French War Office this afternoon gave out an official report reading as follows:

In Artois, in the vicinity of Souchez, there was spirited fighting during a part of last night in which hand grenades and bombs were largely used. On the Plateau of Quennevières and in the valley of the Aisne yesterday saw rather violent artillery exchanges. Soissons was again bombarded.

In the Arzonne, in the sectors of St. Hubert Marie Thérèse, Fontaine-aux-Charmes, and at Hill No. 214, the fighting continued throughout the night. The Germans endeavored to deliver several attacks, but were not successful. At Eparges there was yesterday a rather severe bombardment.

In the Vosges the enemy yesterday evening delivered one attack against our positions on the River Linge and three attacks against our positions on the Barrenkopf. These violent attacks all were repulsed.

The German Army Headquarters Staff today gave out the following official statement:

The English position near Hooge, which we captured on July 30 is, contrary to the report issued from the British Headquarters, still entirely in our hands.

In the Champagne, after successful mine explosions west of Perthes and west of Souain, we occupied the borders of the craters.

In the Argonne, northwest of Four-de-Paris, we captured some hostile trenches, capturing sixty prisoners. In a bayonet attack yesterday we captured altogether four officers and 165 men, and took two machine guns.

In the Vosges during the fighting on the night of Aug. 1-2 we lost a small portion of a trench on Schratzmannele, between Lingekopf and Barrenkopf. A trench on Lingekopf which had been completely destroyed on the night of Aug. 1-2 has not been reoccupied by us.

A French captive balloon, torn from its anchorage during a thunderstorm, was caught by us to the northwest of Etaine.

BELGIANS ACROSS FLOODS.

Have Carried Their Lines North of Great Lake in Flanders.

DUNKIRK, July 20 (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—The Belgian lines along the flooded district north of Dixmude have been practically stationary for so long a time that the soldiers are beginning to assume the domestic characteristics of settlers. Chicken coops are found at frequent intervals in the clear spaces behind the trenches, and hundreds of small vegetable gardens provide variety to the daily menu of their soldier owners. Officers and men find frequent opportunity to give themselves the pleasure of an afternoon's fishing, the usual reward being a fair haul of savory carp, found in the streams and canals which empty themselves into the flooded district.

The flooded district in front of the Belgian base position now covers about 10,000 acres, extending in a huge rectangle from north of Dixmude to a point east of Nieuport. It is hardly correct to say that the Belgian lines have been absolutely stationary here, even for the last few months. Little by little the Belgians have pushed forward here and there, until they have established their advance trenches in most places well on the north side of the flooded area, at distances of a mile to two miles, and from their base positions.

These advance positions are approached across the water barrier over narrow roadways of planking supported on piles. All the supplies for the troops in the advanced trenches are carried from the base over these crooked, rickety bridges.

Although the mosquitoes, millions of them, make theidr presence constantly known throughout the flooded area, the sanitary conditions everywhere are excellent, and the health of the soldiers has been phenomenally good. The fear that contamination of the stagnant flood waters would inevitably lead to epidemics has been neutralized by the excellent work of the Belgian medical and sanitary officers, who with great care have removed and destroyed every possible source of contamination, particularly the dead bodies of men and horses which for a time rose frequently to the surface of the waters.

The average depth of the water in the flooded area is about four feet. It is impossible for the enemy to advance on foot through this comparatively shallow lake because of the presence everywhere of depressions,—many of them abandoned cellars or huge shell holes.

BRITISH PLEA FOR BULGARS.

Their Co-operation Held to be Imperative—Coercion of Serbia Urged.

LONDON, Wednesday, Aug. 4.—Discussion of the possible course likely to be taken by the Austrians and Germans after the capture of Warsaw leads The Standard to advocte editorilly that the Allies make a tremendous effort to gain Bulgaria by influencing Serbia to make the territorial concessions desired by Bulgaria, on the theory that a Germanic force on the south side of the Danube would overwhelm Serbia, relieve Turkey, open the road to the Black Sea and the Aegean, bring about the complete discomfiture of Russia, and have the gravest effect on the fortunes of the Allies.

All this would be impossible, The Standard sets forth, if the Balkan States were solidly on the side of Great Britain, Russia, and France, Bulgaria being the "keystone to the arch."

"It is not at all to the credit of Franco-British diplomacy," says The Standard, "that this question was not settled long ago. We want Bulgaria's co-operation. We have known from the beginning the price to be paid, yet while we have been talking and arguing nothing has been accomplished and Bulgaria is losing patience and beginning to listen to the cajolments and offers of our adversaries.

"This is a sad bungling which ought to be made good without further delay by businesslike and straightforward proposals. The Serbs must be told that we cannot have the issue of this war, in which we are vindicating their rights to exist, jeopardized because they insist on clinging to their booty."

SAYS CZAR LACKS AVIATORS.

Aero Club Credits Germain Gains in East to Kaiser's Fliers.

German victories on the eastern front are attributed to their superiority in aeroplanes in a statement issued last night by the Aero Club of America, prepared from reports of the club's observers in the warring countries by Henry Woodhouse, Managing Editor of Flying.

"The Germans," said Mr. Woodhouse, "have compelled the Russian Army to retreat, abandoning strongly fortified places. This success has been due to the following circumstances:

"Failure of the Russian Army chiefs to recognize the possibilities of employing aeroplanes to good advantage for reconnoitring, directing artillery fire, co-operating in the work of cavalry and infantry, and protecting the Russian lines from the prying eyes of the efficient air scouts.

"Similar failure to see the necessity of shifting of front and making strategic moves to offset the advantage gained by the enemy through his superiority in aeroplanes and aviators.

"The small number of Russian aviators and their lack of experience.

"Russia committed the same mistake Germany committed at the beginning of the campaign against Belgium. Germany relied entirely on the overwhelming strength of her army, and did not consider it necessary to employ air scouts to find the vulnerable spots and offset the advantage gained by Belgium through its judicious employment of its very efficient air scouts. The Germans played the game according to plans made many years ago, while the Belgians moved as circumstances dictated. The result was a comparatively large loss of men and an inestimable loss of time on the part of the Germans, which undoubtedly saved Paris."

AIR RAID ON STRASSBURG.

Geneva Hears That French Dropped 25 Bombs There.

PARIS, Aug. 3.—A flotilla of Anglo-French aeroplanes today flew over the German city of Strassburg and dropped twenty-five bombs, according to a dispatch from Geneva to the Havas News Agency.

The extent of the damage caused by the explosion of the missiles has not yet been ascertained. Strassburg is the capital of Alsace-Lorraine, and lies eighty miles southeast of the German fortress of Metz.

BRITISH PRISONER KILLED.

The Half-yearly Sale of

Saks Suits for Men

reduced from

$30, $28, $25, $23, $20—to

$17

The real significance of the savings in this sale consists in the fact that these suits are Saks suits, and that they are just as notable for individuality and style today as they were a few weeks ago at their former prices. That fact and that fact alone makes these important reductions worth while. We have sacrificed the prices, but there the sacrifice ends. Sale or no sale, the excellence of Saks suits is a permanent quality. But it's now or not at all, if you want to get in on the remaining selections, for they are going fast.

A BOOM IN OUR BONDS.

Mysterious Movement on the London Market Quickly Ended.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Wednesday, Aug. 4.—THE TIMES financial editod says:

"Whether it be that purchases of American bonds before the holiday were on behalf of American finance houses, with the proceeds of British Government disbursements, or on behalf of the British Governments itself, they seem quite properly to have ceased suddenly. Purchases were going on at prices several points above what financiers of the United States could give for bonds. Indeed, there is some reason to believe that those financiers might have been tempted, had the buying been continued, to seize the opportunity of unloading from across the Atlantic any British-stamped bonds they could manage to sell here.

"Should the British Government require American bankers as security for temporary loans until such time as what appears to be the inevitable British loan is issued in the United States, then the best method of procuring those bonds is certainly not to purchase them in the market. That is a clumsy method, exceedingly expensive, because large purchases naturally put up the prices to an abnormal level against the buyer.

"It would doubtless be within the power of the Government to secure the bonds it requires by negotiations with insurance companies, trust companies, and other large holders of American bonds here. Options could be obtained on the basis of a price which would yield about 4½ per cent., and by arrangement bonds could be shipped to New oYrk for deposit as security for temporary borrowing.

CHECKS COAL EXPORTS.

Great Britain Limits Shipments to Her Foreign Possessions.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—After Aug. 30 British coal cannot be shipped anywhere except to British possessions and protectorates according to an Order in Council issued today.

The export of coal heretofore has been restricted to the British possessions and to countries which are allies of Great Britain. The new ruling eliminates all the Allies.

KOLYNOS

Dental Cream

Refreshes the Mouth Like a Cool Drink on a Hot Day

AS an "appetizer" before a meal, on a hot Summer day, leaving the mouth in a cool, refreshed, stimulated condition, nothing excels brushing the teeth with KOLYNOS DENTAL CREAM.

★ ★

Next to the pleasure of a dip in the surf, or a cold shower, is the refreshment of a cool, clean mouth.

If you have not tried KOLYNOS, a new and pleasant sensation awaits you.

★ ★

Brushing your teeth with KOLYNOS, just before dinner, is the pleasantest and most healthful kind of hot-weather cocktail you can take.

The actual cleanliness it produces is sufficient reason to cause you to use KOLYNOS through all the seasons.

But the APPEALING SENSATION OF CLEANLINESS AND COOLNESS makes it doubly inviting in sultry weather.

★ ★

It is far better as an "appetizer" than a drink with a "kick" in it. If the strain of hot weather robs you of your appetite, try this idea of brushing your teeth with KOLYNOS just before meal time.

When you come in from the office, or a shopping trip, or the motor ride, or the day on the links, the first thing you do is to prepare your face and hands for the coming meal by washing them.

They have become soiled by dust and perspiration and contact with many unsanitary surfaces.

KOLYNOS cleanses your mouth and throat of these organisms, many of them of a dangerous character. It effectually cleanses the teeth and all the mouth membranes, leaving a cool, soothing sensation in place of the bad taste prevalent on hot days.

STRIKE DATE IS SET FOR 60,000 TAILORS

Kept a Secret Pending Further Parleys of Union and Employers.

WILL MEET AGAIN TODAY

Right to Peremptorily Discharge Workers Will Not Be Accepted by the Union Leaders.

In a final effort to avert a strike of the 60,000 workers on women's garments in New York City, Mayor Mitchel's Council of Conciliation last night, after a whole day of vain attempts to settle the differences of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union and of the Cloak and Skirt Makers' Protective Association, obtained the consent of the unions for an extension of twelve hours from last midnight before final action is taken. They issued an invitation to the Executive Board of both employes and employers to barley in the Bar Association rooms this morning. None of the parties concerned is very hopeful of a peaceful settlement.

The union had given the manufacturers until midnight to accede to the findings of the Council of Conciliation. After the union officials heard of the attitude of the manufacturers, as evidenced before the council yesterday, they set a day and hour for the general strike. This was admitted by Benjamin Schlesinger, President of the union, who said that the date would not be divulged before the strike was called. The needle-workers have almost a 100 per cent. organization, and when the general strike is called it means that 2,200 shops will be shut down and that 60,000 workers and a great number of persons dependent upon them will lose their source of income.

It is understood that the manufacturers have agreed to all of the demands of the union as embodied in the recommendations of the Council of Conciliation except that relating to the discharge of workmen. The union leaders regard it is fundamental that the employers do not have the power to peremptorily discharge a union member. The employers insist they have a right to say who shall work in their shops, and on this point hinges the strike.

The language of the findings of the conciliators was interpreted by the union leaders as a victory; the manufacturers said they would never accept the findings if the union interpretation were the right one. The Council yesterday tried to effect a rewording of its recommendations, but union counsel said that the workers thought the original findings very fair, and insisted the manufacturers must take them or leave them. The manufacturers' lawyers showed no disposition to accept the findings.

It was after a whole day of argument and persuasion that Dr. Felix Adler, Chairman of the Council of Conciliation, suggested that the Council meet leaders of both sides this morning. The following letter was sent by messenger to the headquarters of both manufacturers and workers:

"The Mayor's Council of Conciliation has requested the Executive Board of the Cloak and Skirt Manufacturers' Protective Association and of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union to meet with it tomorrow morning at 10:30 o'clock at the rooms of the Bar Association, 42 West Forty-fourth Street, in a final, and we trust successful, effort to adjust the differences between employers and workers in the cloak industry. We hope your committee will find it convenient to attend."

Morris Hilquitt, attorney for the union, said last night that the union would suspend action pending the outcome of today's meeting.

Schlesinger said last night that he could hold out no hope of a compromise. He said the plans which had been under way for six weeks for a strike had been completed and that everything was ready for a strike whenever the union officials chose to call the 60,000 workers out.

"If the manufacturers have the right to discharge whom they please, they would soon fire every union official," he said. "They want the right of unrestricted discharge in order to cripple the unions. Now we are strong enough to say flatly that they cannot do that thing. I repeat, we don't want a strike, but we will strike if we have to, and if we strike we will win."

TO BREAK MASSENA STRIKE.

Aluminum Company Said to be Gathering New Men for Factory.

MASSENA, N. Y., Aug. 3.—Strike-breakers imported from distant points, it was stated here today, are on their way to Massena to replace the dissatisfied employes of the Aluminium Company of America who went on strie last Saturday. Some of the new men are expected tomorrow.

The three companies of militia guarding the plant were prepared today to remain here the rest of the week and to maintain order when the strikebreakers arrive.

Officials of the company are desirous of reopening the plant as soon as possible, as it is estimated that the enforced idleness resulting from the strike is costing the company $25,000 a day.

The situation was quiet today.

MISUNDERSTANDING AT ILION.

Eight-Hour Day Caused Walkout of Remington Piece Workers.

Special to The New York Times.

ILION, N. Y., Aug. 3.—The misunderstanding which caused 1,500 pieceworkers in the Remington Arms plant here to stop work yesterday, is likely to be cleared up tomorrow, and all the men are expected to be back at their machines within a day or two. The plant is not tied up, as all the day men are at work.

When the change in the working hours was announced last week, it was said that it would be equivalent to an increase in wages of 25 per cent, as the men would earn as much in eight hours as they had been earning in ten. This was true of the day men, and they have no fault to find. The piece-workers, however, who received an increase in pay of 15 per cent., found that in order to make it equivalent to an increase of 25 per cent. they would have to speed up, making an advance in their output equal to six minutes an hour. This caused the msiunderstanding, and the walkout.

General Superintendent C. C. Tylor talked with the men who still remain in the shops on piece work today, and they appeared to be well satisfied.

SHERIFF KINKEAD RETURNS.

Proves He's in Health by Starting Fund for Bayonne Riot Victims.

Sheriff Kinkead went to Bayonne, N. J., yesetrday from his Summer home at Deal Beach for the first time since he, single handed, settled the sarike at the plants of the Standard and Tidewater Oil Companies. He found the plants operating full and the former strikers contented. He said he had fully recovered frmo the breakdown he suffered as a result of his strenuous work as a strikebreaker, and to prove it he took up the work of raising a fund for the families of the five men killed in the riots. The Sheriff said he would call today upon the heads of the plants and on the strikers for contributions.

While he was at Bayonne Sheriff Kinkead announced that he would press the charge of inciting riot which he made against Samual W. Edwards, Superintendent of the Tidewater Oil Company. Edwards was released under $500 bail, and was to have had a hearing on Aug. 1, but adjournment was taken because of the illness of Sheriff Kinkead. Recorder William J. Cain said he would arrange for a hearing soon.

The City Commissioners, who were criticised by Sheriff Kinkead for inactivity during the strike, met yesterday and appointed Commissioner of Public Safety Henry Wilson a committee to investigate the conduct of the Sheriff. One of their number, Commissioner Hugh O'Mara, was arrseted by the Sheriff while the strike was on. Mr. Wilson will report on Tuesday next.

NO STRIKE IN PLAINFIELD.

Pond Company Makes Concessions Machinists Demanded.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Aug. 3.—Following conferences between the officials of the Pond Machine Tool Company and J. J. Keppler, Vice President of the International Association of Machinists, a notice was posted at the plant today that the 800 machinists would get the eight-hour day, a 10 per cent. increase in wages, and time and a half for overtime.

The Pond plant is now on a fifty-four hour schedule. These concessions were in effect the demands of the mechinists' union as presented by Mr. Keppler and Hugh Reilly, Business Agent for the machinists of New Jersey.

REFUSES POWDER ORDERS.

Branze Company, with German Employes, Won't Sell to Europe.

Special to The New York Times.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Aug. 3.—The Bronze Powder Company, which has a practical monopoly of the manufacture of bronze powder in this country, issued a statement today that it would no longer sell its product t oany of the belligerent European countries. The largest plant of the company is in Elizabeth and the total output of all kinds of powder approximated more than 1,500,000 pounds in the last year.

Carl A. Schlenk, a Director, said this afternoon that the war had increased the demand of the certain munitions and implements turned out by the local factory. At a directors' meeting, he said, it was the unanimous opinion that to fill the present orders would be encouraging the prolonging of the war, and an order for $500,000 powder shipment was accordingly refused.

About 600 are employed at the local plant, practically all of whom are Germans.

PARACHUTE FOR AVIATORS.

Inventor Says His Will Open Quickly and Prevent Accidents.

A representative of the British Embassy who sailed recently for England will present to the War Office the plans of a life-saving device for aviators designed by Vaulx Carter, a graduate of the United States Naval Academy and an engineer. Mr. Carter, who was for years a Lieutenant in the Naval Reserve here, believes his device will give airmen a chance for life when their aeroplanes become stalled or break down high in the air.

Mr. Carter was seen yesterday at the Hotel Gerard. He would not go into the details of the aerial life saver, but he said a demonstration would be given by Robert Crawford, a Tennessee aviator, who would drop 100 feet into the water from an aeroplane. The device is a form of parachute, but the inventor claims for it that it becomes operative by the simple pulling a string, and that, unlike regular parachutes, it opens quickly in the air and is as effective for short as for long drops. Mr. Carter said:

"The apparatus I have designed is so constructed that, knowing a man's weight, he can be equipped with an appliance to land him at a desired speed. The calculation figures show that from 500 feet in the air he would land with the force of a man jumping from a ten-foot wall.

"Actual test drops have been made in the presence of engineers, and they have commented favorably on its lightness of weight and quickness of operation. Parachutes from baloons have required several hundred feet before they open. My machine during tests was fully extended and drawing before it had dropped twice its length."

One of the best aeronautical engineers in the country is now going over Mr. Carter's calculations, he said, and one prominent engineer has promised to examine the design and supervise further tests.

VATICAN ORGAN HOPEFUL.

Sees Possibility of Peace Move in Anniversary Messages.

ROME, Aug. 3.—Discussing the many messages and statements issued in various countries on the first anniversary of the war, the Observatore Romano, official organ of the Vatican, says:

"Reading these foreign messages, we are pleased to note that the language adopted has been modified in tone so that in a sense it is more pacific, or more humane. In place of inexorable war cries and proposals to annihilate the enemy, there begins to be substituted a more humane accent.

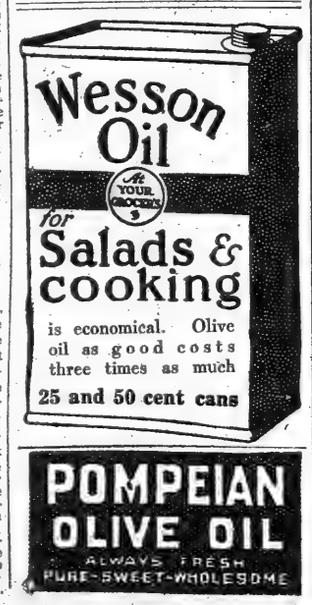
"Although circumscribed, we see in this the possibility of a discussion leading to peace. It is a most comforting sign, although very weak as yet."

KAISER TO SPONSOR ALL.

Widens Rule Under Which He Will Be Godfather.

BERLIN, July 15.—The Emperor William is probably godfather to more boys than any other person on earth, but he is so well able to stand up under the strain that he has issued an order that presently will increase the number. The rule formerly was that he would assume the responsibility of being godfather to a seventh son born to any family provided the boy was seventh son by one and the same marriage.

Under this ruling many seventh sons have had to do without the honor, because the mother had been twice married. The Emperor now has modified the rule and announced that he will become godfather to any seventh son, regardless of the number of marriages the mother has contracted, provided all seven boys are living.



KEEP STATE CONTROL OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS

DELEGATE CRIES 'BIGOTRY!'

Declares Religious Narrowness Prompted the Proposal—Louis Marshall Supports Measure.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 3.—The Constitutional Convention today by a vote that seemed almost unanimous, advanced to the order of third reading this proposed amendment to Section 1, Article IX., of the Constitution, which had been recommended by the Committee of Education, of which President Jacob Gould Schurman of Cornell University is Chairman:

The State shall continue its supervision and control of the education of children as a State function and no powers in derogation thereof shall be conferred upon the local authorities of any civil division thereof.

In the debate ex-Senator Anthony J. Griffin of the Bronx, a Democratic delegate, made a vicious attack on the proposed amendment, and, reading a letter from the Guardians of Liberty, an anti-Catholic organization, indorsing it, asserted that it had been prompted by religious bigotry. This attack was resented by Thomas A Kirby, Republican, from Orleans County, who said:

"The injection into the discussion of this proposal of the circular letter from the Guardians of Liberty is repellant to me as an American citizen. This amendment as as plain and simple as can be. It merely writes into the Constitution what is there now, only in language more direct. Why should this atmosphere of apprehension, of fear and doubt be created?"

Shortly before Mr. Griffin spoke, Louis Marshall, who made the chief argument in favor of advancing the proposal, replying to an interrogation from the floor, had said that there was nothing in the wording of the proposed amendment which possibly could be taken to restrict the activities of private or parochial schools.

"I favor this amendment," said Mr. Marshall, "and if there is anything I have been contending for and shall continue to contend for, it is that nothing shall be done here to interfere with the freedom of the citizen in matters of education, and above all things where the religious belief of the citizen is involved."

Mr. Marshall said that, while he favored the amendment in the form it finally was accepted by the convention, he would much prefer to have the proposal restored to its original form as drafted by President Schurman. The Schurman draft was as follows:

The supervision and control of the education of children in this State shall remain the function and duty of the State and shall never be surrendered.

Ex-Attorney General Wickersham, majority leader of the convention, made a formal motion with a view of having the original language restored. Then, on motion of President Shurman, the proposal was recommitted to the committee on Education, whose members will meet and consider the motion and report at the afternoon session of the convention. At the meeting of the committee fifteen of the seventeen members were present and voted unanimously against the Wickersham motion. When the convention met again in the afternoon Mr. Wickersham, learning what the committee had done, formally withdrew his motion.

Alfred E. Smith, one of Tammany's spokesmen in the convention, assailed the present distribution of the State's school fund. He showed that New York City in 1913, with 40,000 school children more than all the rest of the State, had received $4,150,000 less than was allotted to the State outside of New York City. This provoked an attack from ex-Senator Brackett, who accused Mr. Smith of injecting politics into the discussion and seeking to disturb the "fraternal feeling" between New York City and the rest of the State.

De Lancey Nicoll, another Democrat, taking up the statement of Mr. Kirby that the proposed amendment simply put into the Constitution what was in substance there already, said that he could see no reason for "constitutionalizing a status quo." Ex-Justice Morgan J. O'Brien, the Democratic Vice President of the Convention, took the same view.

"Will the amendment interfere with the reasonable control of expenditures of the New York City Board of Education by the Board of Estimate?" asked Senator Robert F. Wagner.

"In my opinion it would not unless the Board of Estimate should adopt a policy that would involve starvation for the common schools," said Mr. Marshall.

The proposal was then advanced, after various amendments had been defeated, by a viva voce vote.

Another amendment affecting the powers of local school boards which has been reported favorably by the Committee on Education is on the calendar and may come up for debate tomorrow with the likelihood that it will provoke a lively fight. This amendment provides that every city shall have a local Board of Education which, subject to general laws, shall have the power "to determine the amound and direct and control the expenditure of all funds to be used for education within its jurisdiction."

The woman teachers in New York City, who in past years, especially when Tammany has controlled the Legislature, have been able to appeal successfully from the Board of Education to the Legislature in matters affecting their salaries, have objected strenuously to this proposal and have many spokesmen among the Tammany element in the convention.

MAKES R. L. DAVIS JUSTICE.

Gov. Whitman Also Designates Justice Pound for Court of Appeals.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 3.—Rowland L. Davis of Cortland was appointed a Justice of the Supreme Court for the Sixth District by Gov. Whitman today, and Cuthbert W. Pound of Lockport, a Justice of the Supreme Court for the Eighth District, was designated as Associate Judge of the Court of Appeals. Mr. Davis succeeds Justice Nathan L. Miller of Cortland, who resigned last Saturday so that his successor may be elected this Fall. Justice Davis will serve until Dec. 31. It is expected that he will receive the Republican nomination for the Justiceship; the district is strongly Republican.

In making the announcement Governor Whitman said that Mr Davis had the unanimous endorsement of his organization and the bar of the district. He is 44 years old and has served Cortland at County Judge.

Governor Whitman said that he had not yet made up his mind as to the temporary appointment of a Justice of the First District to fill the vacancy caused by the death of John J. Delaney. Samuel S. Koenig has been a frequent caller at the Capitol lately, and there have been whisperings that he would like the Justiceship.

ARMOR BEING REINTRODUCED

Return to Mediaeval Methods One of Strange Results of War.

LONDON, July 20, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—The London newspapers are urging upon the British Government the advisability of adopting the steel helmet, as well as some simple form of protective breast armor, for the troops in France and Flanders. France, Russia, and Germany have been experimenting along this line for some time, and France has recently definitely adopted a light steel helmet, suggesting in design the headpiece worn by men-at-arms six centuries ago.

"'One of the most remarkable features of this war,'" remarks The Times, "has been the return to older, if not to ancient, methods. The steel fort has been discredited, and the earthwork justified. The strength and direction of the wind has become a leading factor once again, as it was in the days of bows and arrows, since aeroplanes are affected by the wind and gas attacks determined by it; hand grenades, bombs, and catapults have assumed real importance. Finally, the question of armor for the fighting man himself has come up for consideration."

The value of a light protective armor is attested in several recent articles in the British medical journals. Dr. Devraigne, a French Army surgeon, discusses in the Lancet the result of his tests of the new French helmet, and gives it his unqualified indorsement. "The soldier who wears a helmet," he says, "escaped light wounds of the head, and even wounds that would in ordinary circumstances have been severe are greatly mitigated. The helmet frequently turns off the bullet, in other cases dents or stops it, while in other cases it is perforated; but even in such cases upon the force of the projectile, so that hair and dirt are not driven into the tissues of the head."

Dr. A. J. Hewitt, chief surgeon of the warship Pagasus in her fight with the Königsberg, writes in the Journal of the Royal Medical Service urging the adoption of some kind of protective armor for the men. One of the remarkable features of the wounds which came under his observation, he says, was the smaller penetrating power of the fragments of projectiles in open spaces like the upper deck. The danger zone, so far as life was concerned, seemed to be confined to a small area around the bursting space, and though the initial velocity of the fragments seemed to be very great, it diminished rapidly, perhaps owing to their irregular shape.

"One seaman," writes Dr. Hewitt, "had his right arm so shattered that complete amputation was necessary, but not a fragment of the same shell hit the brass buckle of his belt, breaking it, but not even bruising the abdomen. Small fragments were also the cause of the loss of four eyes, but I am of the opinion that a pair of motor goggles would have saved all these. A case of injury to the jugular vein caused by a minute particle of shell probably could have been stopped by a linen collar.

"In my opinion a coat of light chain armer, or even leather, with a pair of goggles made of toughened motor screen glass, would be invaluable to Captains of destroyers, navigators, and others in exposed positions who are likely to encounter ships armed with similar guns."

Dr. Delorme, Medical Inspector General of the French Army, believes that protective armor would cause a marked decrease in the large number of minor wounds which have serious results owing to the development of infection. "It is infection through hair, shreds of headgear, soiled bullets, irregular dressings, &c.," he says, "that makes many head lesions so dangerous and causes a mortality varying from 15 to 57 per cent."

Judge Crain Told Prisoner Was Tricked Into Pleading Guilty to Annoying Women.

HID HIS IDENTITY IN PRISON

Calvary Baptist Church Members Say if Parsons Is Freed He Will Get Back His Former Position.

Charging that their client's conviction had been obtained by fraud, Attorneys John L. Marshall and H. W. Wack applied to Judge Crain in the Court of General Sessions yesterday for the release of Raymond Parsons of 365 West Fifty-sixth Street, a member of the Calvary Baptist Church choir, who was arrested on June 20 for annoying women in the monkey house at Central Park. Parsons was sentenced to serve three months in the workhouse on his plea of guilty. Nearly half of his term had expired before friends, worried over his sudden disappearance, discovered that he was a prisoner on Blackwell's Island.

They made an investigation of the circumstances leading to his arrest. The prisoner, who had made every effort to keep his arrest a secret, informed them that he had been tricked into pleading guilty by a detective who suggested that such a step would alone prevent any knowledge of his predicament from reaching his family and his friends. According to Parsons the arresting officer, a Detective McDermott, assured him that if he would plead guilty the Judge would suspend sentence and the matter would be hushed up without further difficulty.

"I was so shocked at the charge and the predicament I was in," Parsons said in his affidavits, "that my senses almost left me. I never had been arrested before. I could only think of the terrible disgrace which would cause me the loss of friends, my business position in my church and choir, and most of all the grief and sorrow of my parents. I mentioned these things to the detective, and he told me that I need have no fear if I would take his advice and plead guilty. He said the Magistrate would undoubtedly suspend sentence."

In his affidavit Parsons said that on the afternoon of June 20 he was in the Park, and in the course of his rounds he stepped into the monkey house. He did not remain long because the air was foul and oppressive. But as he was leaving, he said, a man touched him on the arm and said he wanted to speak to him.

"When we got out," Parsons stated, "the man showed me his badge and told me that he was an officer and asked me to go with him to the station house. Strange as it may seem, I had no idea at that time that I was under arrest. At the station house the officer told me that I was suspected of annoying girls in the monkey house. I told him in the most emphatic manner that I was innocent."

Describing his arraignment before Magistrate Nolan in the Night Court, Parsons said that Attorney Vermont took the stand and spoke to the Magistrate in voice so low that Parsons could not hear what was said. Then, following the detective's advice, he pleaded guilty.

He was sentenced to three months in the Workhouse on Blackwell's Island, from which place he was transferred to the West Side Prison. Many friends visited him there and in affidavits which were presented to Judge Crain yesterday they expressed their implicit faith in Parsons's innocence. Warren Spalding of 27 West Ninety-seventh Street, Clerk of the Calvary Baptist Church, said he had known Parsons since last November when the latter became a member of the church and choir.

In another affidavit, I. Newton Williams of 233 Broadway, a Trustee of the Calvary Church, said:

"I find after a very painstaking inquiry that every one who knows Parsons about the church, believes as I do, that he is entirely innocent of the charges against him. He will be received in his old place, if he chooses to accept it, and welcomed by all as if these charges had never been made."

Affidavits of a similar nature were filed by Raymond P. Herrick of 1,575 Broadway, Henry A. L. Potter of 411 West Fifty-seventh Street, S. Raymons Estey of 270 Union Avenue, Brooklyn, and Edwin M. Warder, Jr., of 988 St. Nicholas Avenue.

The appeal to set aside his conviction was made before Judge Crain in the presence of several members of the Calvary Church. Judge Crain said he was in doubt whether he had the power to set aside a conviction where the defendant had pleaded guilty. He reserved his decision, however, pending investigation by Assistant District Attorney Ellison.

A STRANGE PASSPORT CASE.

British Subject Held—Traveled in Germany on American Passport.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—Harold J. Fraser, described as a British subject, was remanded without bail today in the Bow Street Police Court, charged with having in his possession an American passport to which he was not entitled.

The passport was issued by the American Embassy in London last March, and Fraser is said to have traveled with this passport over a considerable part of Germany and Austria. He obtained the passport by representing himself as an American, and, according to his own admissions, took two hours to persuade the Embassy to issue it.

COLD-BLOODED

An Owner is bound in his own best interests to consider the selecting of a Contractor from a cold-blooded point of view, and he cannot for one minute afford to jeopardise those interests by substituting sentiment for judgment.

Nobody appreciates this more than we ourselves and no building Contractor is more anxious than we are to have its candidacy for a contract based on a cold-blooded analysis of the facts.

TESLA SUES MARCONI ON WIRELESS PATENT

Alleges That Important Apparatus Infringes Prior Rights Granted to Him.

BASIC PRINCIPLES INVOLVED

Marconi Company Manager Claims Ownership of All Underlying Wireless Inventions.

A suit brought by Nikola Tesla against the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company of America, seeking the annulment of one of the chief Marconi patents, will have its first public argument in the United States District Court tomorrow, when counsel for Mr. Tesla will seek to have the court strike out nine paragraphs in the Marconi Company's answer to Mr. Tesla's complaint. Simultaneously with the suit for the annulment Mr. Tesla has brought a suit against the Marconi Company for infringement of his patents.

This litigation is a new development in the Marconi Company's claim to ownership of all basic patent rights in the transmission of wireless messages. In a number of other wireless patent suits against companies and individuals the Marconi Company is the plaintiff, and, though a defendant in this latest litigation, Edward J. Nally, Vice President and General Manager of the Marconi Company, believes that Mr. Tesla's suit will serve as one of the mediums through which the Marconi Company hopes to establish the broad claim of its right to all basic wireless patents.

The dispute over patent rights between the Marconi Company and Mr. Tesla began in August, 1914, when the Marconi Company sued Fritz Lowenstein, a German engineer, alleging that certain wireless apparatus sold by him to the United States Navy was made in violation of Marconi patent 763,772. It was announced then that Mr. Tesla would testify for Lowenstein, it being that the Lowenstein devices were developed from Tesla patents 645,576 and 649,621, which were granted prior to the Marconi patent.

In the present suit, Mr. Tesla bases his action on the allegation that his two patents were granted in 1900, and that the Marconi patent was not granted until 1904. The bill of complaint asks for a decree adjudging the Marconi patent null and void, and asserts that the Marconi patent covers the inventions and combinations of apparatus described and claimed in the Tesla patents.

The answer of the Marconi Company denies that the Marconi patent covers the inventions or combination of apparatus described by the Tesla patents, and also denies that it is guilty of any infringement. The company claims that its patent was granted to Guglielmo Marconi as the first and independent inventor by Mr. Marconi, not in any way due to or based on any invention of Mr. Tesla's. The paragraphs of the answer which Mr. Tesla seeks to have stricken out deal with details which, according to Mr. Tesla's counsel, "are not proper and are not defenses to a suit to annul a subsequent patent by a prior patentee."

Regarding the alleged infringement of his patents, Mr. Tesla said:

"My patents describe a new and original wireless system characterized by the employment of four circuits in perfect resonance, a condition essential to successful practice. Long after their grant to me Marconi filed an application and secured a patent which covers exactly the same fundamental arrangements. Such cases happen occasionally, as it is quite impossible for the examiners in the Patent Office to keep abreast with workers in new and special fields. A notable instance of this kind is my single phase induction motor, on which a celebrated inventor obtained a patent which was subsequently invalidated through my earlier application.

"In a recent suit in France, involving the same or corresponding patents, the highest court, acting on a statement submitted by me, decided against Marconi and recognized fully my priority of invention in all the important features."

Mr. Nally, however, said last night that he had no reason to fear the Tesla suit.

"The Marconi Company has a right to its patent," he said, "and can establish that right in the courts. Many individuals and companies have infringed the Marconi patents, and others have attempted to disprove the originality of our inventions, but when our present litigation shall have gone through the courts, I am confident that the leadership of the Marconi Company in the invention and development of wireless communication will be established."

In his suit for annulment of the Marconi patent, Mr. Tesla is represented by George H. D. Foster and Lemuel E. Quigg of 32 Liberty Street. The Marconi Company is represented by Sheffield & Betts of 52 William Street.

The original papers in the annulment suit were filed on April 16, 1915, and the answer of the Marconi Company on May 25 following.

LET GERMANS COME HERE.

British Did Not Interfere with Passengers on Frederik VIII.

Several Americans who have been serving in Russia, Germany, and Austria in the army medical corps of the respective armies arrived yesterday from Copenhagen on the Scandinavian-American liner Frederick VIII. The steamer was detained twenty-four hours at Kirkwall, while the passenger and cargo manifests were inspected, and although there were half a dozen Germans on board, they were allowed to proceed to New oYrk. Among them was Miss Helen Thierfelder, sister of Captain Thierfelder, the commander of the German auxiliary cruiser Kronprinz Wilhelm, now interned at Newport News. The Captain was at the pier at Hoboken to meet his sister.

Another German passenger was Miss Charlotte Oehlenschlager, the champion ice skater of the world, who has given exhibitions of her skill before the German Emperor.

Miss Hannah Melchion of New York, who went to Europe a year ago to study music in Germany, had some interesting experiences in traveling through the war zones. After being in Germany some time Miss Melchion made a trip to Russia, and had great difficulty in getting back to Berlin. At Ponevesk, near the German border line, she said, part of the army was only three hours' march away, and as no trains were running she had to walk for thirty hours until she reached Vilna. From that station Miss Melchion managed to get a ride in a freight train, which took her to Petrograd, where she did Red Cross work for several months until there was an opportunity to get back to Germany.

Dr. Edward N. Egbert of the American Red Cross, who had charge of the base hospital at Lodz, returned on his way to Washington to report. He expects to go back shortly.

Another passenger was Miss Regina V. Wisly of Holyoke, Mass., who has been fifteen months in Germany, Austria, and Switzerland.

EXPLAINS DEFEAT TO KAISER

Had No Supplies, Says Governor of German Southwest Africa.

BERLIN, Aug. 3, (via London.)—The Emperor, it is officially announced, has received a dispatch from Dr. Seitz, Governor General of German southwest Africa, explaining his surrender to General Louis Botha in July.

Dr. Seitz says that the surrender was due to the fact that further successful resistance was impossible, as the German colonial force was surrounded by enemies greatly superior in numbers and cut off from the base of supplies.

"The condition of the horses, for which no oats were available for several months, he adds, rendered it hopeless to attempt to break through the enemy lines.

TO RENAME GERMANY'S DOGS

Move to Change Foreign Appellations of Canine Pets.

BERLIN, Aug. 3.—The campaign foreign words continually taken on new and often amusing phases.

The latest is a protest against giving foreign names to dogs. Even the Greek and Latin Hector and Nero are found objectionable. Proposed substitutes are Blitz (lightning); Flamme, (flame); Zorn, (anger,) and a long list of monosyllabic adjectives, such as Free, Fast, Strong, True, and Sly. Or, says one proposal, friends of nature can use the names Stream, aWter, Birch, Oak, Fir, or Flower.

VANDERBILT HOUSE WILL BE ALTERED

Fifth Avenue Home of Wm. H. to be Occupied by His Grandson, Cornelius.

FRICK HAD LIVED THERE

After Expenditure of $240,000 One of Famous Twin Residences Will Not Resemble Its Neighbor.

Cornelius Vanderbilt has decided to make extensive alterations to the residence of his grandfather, William H. Vanderbilt, on the northwest corner of Fifth Avenue and Fifty-first Street, and which, on the death of his uncle, George Vanderbilt, more than a year ago became the property of Cornelius. He announced soon afterward that he intended to make it his future home, and yesterday plans were filed by his architect, Horace Trumbauer of Philadelphia, for alterations estimated to cost $240,000.

The residence is one of the famous twin Vanderbilt houses and has recently been occupied by Henry C. Frick, who made radical changes when he leased it from George Vanderbilt ten years ago. Mr. Frick's lease expired last May, but before that he moved to his new residence on the old Lenox Library site, Fifth Avenue, between Seventieth and Seventy-first Streets.

The changes contemplated by Cornelius Vanderbilt embody an entirely new arrangement of the exterior entrance and the tearing out of the interior, putting in new floors and altering the suites of rooms.

Mr. Vanderbilt's present home is at 667 Fifth Avenue, a large house in the middle of the block between Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth Streets, adjoining the twelve-story business structure erected a short time ago on the site of the former home of ex-Governor Levi P. Morton.

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—An advertisement published in a Chicago newspaper today offered employment to mechanics on Government work in England. Free transportation both ways, with a six months' contract, is promised. Horace D. Nugent, Consul in Chicago for Great Britain, when questioned about the advertisement, said:

"Various rumors have come to us, but we do not believe anybody is qualified to engage men here for Government work. I have read the advertisement, and cannot imagine its source. It looks like the unauthorized enterprise of private individuals."

SAYS GERMANY USED HUERTA AGAINST US

Providence Journal Tells of Alleged Plot to Embroil This Nation with Mexico.

PUTS BOY-ED IN SCHEME

Asserts Much Money Was Spent Before Washington Foiled Plan by Arresting ex-Dictator.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I. Aug. 3.—The Providence Journal will say tomorrow morning:

"The arrest of General Huerta at El Paso on June 27 closed the first chapter of a plot to embroil the United States with Mexico and to put a stop to the exportation of munitions of war to the Allies, a plot directed and almost brought to a conclusion by the German Ambassador, Count von Bernstorff, and Captain Boy-Ed.

"The German Foreign Office, working in conjunction with the German Embassy at Washington, was not only familiar with the entire plot from the day it was actually put into operation at Barcelona, Spain, but originated it and planned all its details.

"It was when Captain Boy-Ed, acting as the mouthpiece of Count von Bernstorff, tried to hire some American citizens to secure Huerta's safe conduct into Mexico, and to undertake the work of transporting German reservists and arms across the border that the exposure came.

"The moment this offer was made, The Providence Journal was notified of it, and, acting under the advice of this newspaper, the men to whom the infamous proposal came went to Washington and laid the entire matter before President Wilson.

"As a result of this information, Huerto and many of his fellow-plotters in New York were shadowed day and night by Secret Service officials. When Huerta left New York with the avowed intention of going to the San Francisco Exposition, the Department of Justice was warned that this alleged objective was a blind. Had Huerta proceed to California, he would not have been molested at that time. The moment he turned south and headed for El Paso it was decided to arrest him on his arrival in that city.

Arrest Astounded Huerta.

"Confident of the protection and safe conduct that had been pledged to him personally by Captain Boy-Ed, Huerta was astounded at his arrest. He did not know that the moment the German Embassy ascertained that the knowledge of the plot was in possession of the authorities at Washington it had become panic-stricken and at once began to eliminate all possible clues by which the connection with Huerta's affairs could be traced.

"The operation of covering up the tracks of his Government was placed in the hands of Captain Boy-Ed, who spent two weeks in New York doing his best to break down any possible evidence that the United States Secret Service men might have against him. The German Embassy, using Huerta's ambitions for its own purposes, simply made him a cat's paw and attempted by vague promises of the support of many thousands of German reservists in this country to bring about a condition in Mexico that would compel the United States to interfere.

"The purpose of this plot was fivefold:

"(1) To divert the public mind in the United States from the crime of sinking of the Lusitania.

"(2) To divert the transportation of munitions of war from their British and Continental destinations and to bring about a condition that would compel the Government, in order to carry through a successful campaign in Mexico, to insist that manufacturers of arms and munitions should cease supplying foreign Governments until home demands were filled.

"(3) To compel the lease or purchase by the United States of the Hamburg-American and North German Lloyd ships now tied up in New York Harbor, and which would be necessary for use by the American Government for transportation purposes in hostilities with Mexico.

"(4) To put a stop to the traffic now going on from Mexico to Great Britain and France in large quantities of oil from Mexican fields.

"(5) To force President Wilson to proclaim another embargo on the shipments of arms to Mexico and to use that declaration in the attempt to bring before the American people the apparnet difference in the Washington policy as between Mexico and the Allies in this respect.

Germany Had Nothing to Lose.

"Germany had everything to gain and nothing to lose by a war between the United States and Mexico, or by American intervention in Mexico. England had much to lose and nothing to gain.

"Germany has realized from the beginning of the war that unless Great Britain, France, and Russia were able to gain the use of immensely increased facilities for the manufacture of ammunition and arms than they then had, Germany's enormous preparations would compel a victory.

"Germany had figured on the possibility of America supplying the Allies with munitions, but never reckoned for a moment that American ingenuity and skill would be able to transform great machinery and mechanical plants into arms and munition factories with the speed with which this has been done. Therefore, when it was discovered that this immense flow of munitions of war would more than equal the output of Germany, and that nothing apparently could stop this importation by the allied countries, Germany began in earnest to figure on embroiling the United States and Mexico and also on building submarines of such a character that they would be able to operate from the American coast by the time the shipments of arms began in earnest.

"The bringing on of actual war conditions between the United States and Mexico would have forced the United States at once to make use of the Hamburg-American and North German Lloyd ships now tied up in New York Harbor for the transporting of troops and supplies, and would have thus forced either a sale or a lease, a condition which Germany has been trying, ever since the beginning of the war, unsuccessfully to bring about.

Says Huerta Often Met Boy-Ed.

"When Huerta was living at the Hotel Ansonia in New York he was in conference may times with Captain Boy-Ed and other representatives of the German Ambassador, not only in his apartments at the Hotel Ansonia, but at the Hotel Manhattan, where with several of his adherents, he repeatedly met and conferred with German Secret Service agents and Captain Boy-Ed.

"Large sums of money have been paid to Huerta since his arrival in this country directly through German hands, and it is known that some of this money was used for the purchase of rifles which were subsequently sent by water from New York to Yucatan.

"Part of this money has also been used for shipment of large quantities of arms from California into Mexico.

"Huerta was able to show Captain Boy-Ed that the moment his standard was unfurled on Mexican soil he could rally several thousand supporters around him.

"All the details of the plot were worked out carefully. There never was any intention of organizing a filibustering expedition across the line, but the scheme was to bring about a gathering of all Huerta's adherents at some spot just over the border, and from there to begin an organized campaign with quantities of small arms and field guns which had been ready and stored at various points along the border. The Journal is in possession of wireless messages which prove the interest and activity of the German Embassy in Mexican affairs.

Promises of Rich Rewards.

"A number of large commercial concerns connected with the smelting business, the oil business, and the tobacco business in this country, a leading Spanish metal concern of great wealth, and other commercial interests were involved in this plot, and all that have been connected with it received assurances of unlimited regard after Huerta had attained his ambition.

"President Wilson was made acquainted with the entire details of this plot late in May, and if it had not been that some knowledge that this information had reached him leaked out through pro-German sources, the entire scheme would have been exploded at that time and the German Embassy and its direct representatives seriously involved.

"The moment it was discovered that President Wilson knew of the plot Captain Boy-Ed sea frantically to work to destroy every possible evidence of the conspiracy as far as it related to the German Embassy.

"Huerta, however, knowing nothing of the German defection, continued his plans, which were frustrated by his arrest on this side of the border.

"Before the German Ambassador withdrew from the scene, attempts were made by Captain Boy-Ed and German Secret Service employes to embroil well-known public men in the plot, but in no instance were they succesful.

Two New York Lawyers Mentioned.

"Two very prominent New York attorneys, both of whom have been before the public for years in activities outside of their profession, were paid handsome fees for a great deal of preliminary work in connection with this conspiracy, and both are still in the employ of the German Government, and of the Huerta interests also.

"Between Jan. 1, 1915, and Huerta's arrival in the United States secret agents of German interests met on a great number of occasions in Barcelona, Spain. At these meetings General Huerta agreed to follow the instructions of the German interests, with the object in view of fomenting and causing serious trouble virtually war between the United States and Mexico.

"In this conspiracy with General Huerta was General Aureliano Blanquet, Mexican Secretary of War under General Huerta. When General Huerta left Barcelona, Spain, General Blanquet remained there and on a number of occasions the secret agents of the German interests met Blanquet. By arrangement General Blanquet was to follow General Huerta to the United States at a later date. It was General Blanquet's intention at that time to land at New Orleans.

"Immediately after the arrival of General Huerta in the United States negotiations began between the different Mexican factions and General Huerta. The question under discussion at that was whether Huerta should head a filibustering expedition from the United States, which of necessity would involve the United States in war with Mexico.

Mexican Factions Could Not Agree.

"The different Mexican factions, on account of personal ambitions, could not, or did not, agree as to whether General Huerta should actually head this expedition and have it publicly known among the Mexicans that he was at the head of the expedition. This expedition involved large sums of money, and German interests were to supply the entire amount.

"This conspiracy was in substance as follows:

"A filibustering expedition was to be organized in the United States, and when the United States officials caused an attack to be made on this expedition a prominent Mexican would declare that the United States Government had made war against Mexico, and thereby they would expect to rally around them for the defense of Mexico against the United States, all the different factions in Mexico at war at the present time. All the different Mexican factions were diplomatically sounded out on this matter. The Carranzists refused to become involved in any way; neither could the Villa faction be brought in. However, the Huerta faction, or the 'Cientificos,' s the Mexicans term them, was able to control the situation so far as the Villa faction was concerned through General Angeles, who, while supposedly belonging to the Villa faction and a Villa man, and extremely close to Villa, was in reality a representative of the 'Cientificos.'

A Mexican living in the United States who was seriously involved in this German-Huerta conspiracy was Gustavo Sala, formerly military representative of Mexico in Germany and France, and who lived in a boarding house on Seventy-second Street in New York City under an assumed name. He speaks Spanish, German, French, and Italian fluently.

"He was carrying on the negotiations partly for German interests, and was seeing daily, or from time to time, American interests that had material advantages to gain by the immediate settlement of the difficulties in Mexico, or by the establishment of a protectorate by the United States Government.

Abraham Ratner Named.

"Likewise involved was Abraham Ratner, who is a personal and financial representative of General Huerta, and was at one time the owner and operating head of the Tampico News Company, located at Tampico, Mexico. This company formerly imported the bulk of arms and ammunition into Mexico. Abraham Ratner has a brother living in New York City, who has lived there for years, and it was generally supposed and understood that he had in his possession 200 machine guns that were to be used by this filibustering expedition.

"The conspiracy operated under the pretext of being a peace society to bring about peace among the different factions in Mexico. It was known as the "Junta X."

"Another prominent Mexican who was involved, though it is not known whether he knew what the real intentions and purposes of the Junta X were, included Juan Ochoa Ramos, who married into Porfirio Diaz's family, and who was Governor of the State of Michocan, Mexico, under both the Diaz and Madero Administrations. Later he was Governor of this same State under the Huerta Administration.

"Another Mexican concerned was Don Emileo Rabasa, who lived at 440 Riverside Drive, New York City, a very able lawyer and a man especially skilled in Mexican antional law.

Ernesto Madero, an uncle of the assassinated Presidaetn Madero, was familiar with some of the moves being made by the Junta @, but neither he nor Rabasa was given any inkling of the German connection with the plot.

CONSULS PARLEY WITH VILLA.

Try to Save Confiscated Property of Foreign Merchants.

EL PASO, Aug. 3.—A number of foreign shop keepers of Chihuahua arrived here today. Their departure was occasioned by the confiscation by General Villa of their wares.

The majority of shopkeepers remained in Chihuahua, it was said, pending the outcome of parleys between various foreign Consuls and Villa looking to a modification of the confiscation order. Villa is understood to have offered payment for the property taken, but upon what basis is not known here. The high prices complained of by Villa are justified, according to the arrivals today, because of the unstable currency and difficulties of exchange on the border.

"General Villa did not say, 'If the United States does not like my actions it can go to hell,' as quoted in dispatches yesterday," said one of today's arrivals. "What he did say was: 'My telegraph lines are open to you. You may protest to your Governments. If they do not like it, they can come; I am ready for them.'"

Latest advices from Guzman indicate that the mutiny in the Villa garrison there has been suppressed.

George Carothers, United States Department representative, arrived here today and went into consultation with Zach Cobb, Collector of the port. Mr. Carothers also denied General Villa had declared: "If the United States does not like my actions it can go to hell."

"I was in a room adjoining the conference on Saturday," he added, "and I am positive that of General Villa had used that language I would have known it."

CAPTURE 24 FILIBUSTERS.

Mexicans Seized at Border Thought to be of Huerta-Orozco Party.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Major Gen. Frederick Funston, commanding the United States Army patrol along the Mexican frontier, today notified the War Department that a filibustering expedition had been captured while trying to cross into Mexico, about ten miles west of Fort Hancock, the first important military post east of El Paso, Texas. Twenty-four men and twenty-eight rifles were captured.

The captured members of the expedition will be prosecuted for violation of American neutrality and criminal statutes, which forbid armed expedition to leave the United States. Details of the character of the movement have not been received in Washington, but the impression in official circles in Washington is that those filibusters may be identified with the alleged counter-revolution of General Victoriano Huerta and General Pascual Orozco.

Among the prisoners captured with the expedition was a former Huerta Captain and also Colonel Ricardo Aguilar, described as a former Red Flagger, which means that he was identified with the Orozco cause.

JEWELS LENT, THEN STOLEN

Samuel Rothbluth, Borrower, Arrested on Charge of Theft.

Samuel Rothbluth of 205 East 103d Street was held in $2,500 bail yesterday afternoon by Magistrate Ten Eyck in the Harlem Police Court on a charge of stealing jewelry worth $250 from Mrs. Max Ehrlich, whose apartment is in the same building.

According to the testimony Rothbluth went to Mrs. Ehrlich's apartment a week ago and told her he and his wife were going to a wedding party and asked that she let Mrs. Rothbluth wear her jewelry. Mrs. Ehrlich said she gave Rothbluth four diamond rings, a bracelet and diamond locket, which she took from a drawer of her dresser. She said she thought nothing of it when Rothbluth later returned the jewelry.

Mrs. Ehrlich said that last Friday night when she went to her apartment she found her jewelry gone. Detectives Myers and Kahn of the Third Branch Detective Bureau arrested Rothbluth yesterday morning. They said that when they searched him they found pawn tickets for the missing jewelry, and that Rothbluth admitted he had taken it.

BELGIUM TO RESTORE RING.

Mrs. Helen V. Engel of New York Robbed of $2,000 Jewel in Ostend.

Police Commissioner Woods received information yesterday relating to the theft of a three-stone diamond ring worth $2,000 from a Mrs. Engel of New York while bathing at Ostend, Belgium, before the war. A message reached the Commissioner from Ernest Goodefroy, who was Chief of Police in Ostend before the German invasion.

Mr. Goodefroy stated that the thief had been caught and the ring recovered. He desired to know whether Commissioner Woods could send him the address of Mrs. Engel. Commissioner Woods, put the matter in the hands of Detective Wickman, who later in the day identified Mrs. Helen E. Engel of 545 West 11th Street, as the owner of the ring. When asked by the detective whether she had ever been in Belgium, Mrs. Engel replied quickly:

"Indeed I have, and the last trip I made to Ostend cost me a three-stone diamond ring, worth $2,000.

"I guess you are the Mrs. Engel we are looking for," said the detective.

Cruz, notified the Navy Department that Carranzistas had reoccupied the city. While the message was official, it was based entirely on information supplied by the Carranza authorities at Vera Cruz. Dispatches to the State Department from Vera Cruz for three days have brought statements, based on information obtained from the Carranza authorities, first, that Mexico City was reoccupied on Sunday, then on Monday, and finally on Tuesday.

Mexico City Still Cut Off.

A telegram from Special Agent Silliman at Vera Cruz, received by the State Department early this afternoon, stated that "the Government line is handling messages to Mexico City, and that provisions began to enter Mexico City on Sunday." This was corrected in a later dispatch from Vera Cruz to the State Department, which said: "No wires Mexico City. Morning papers report Carranzista forces in suburbs of Mexico City." This surprised Washington officials, as they had supposed that the Gonzales forces had actually taken control of the city. Tonight the Carranza agency issued this statement, based on Vera Cruz advices:

"General Pablo Gonzales, at the head of his headquarters staff, entered Mexico City in triumph today. The appearance of the General surrounded by the war-stained veterans was acclaimed by the vast concourse of people gathered along the route of entry."

The dispatch purported to give details of the entry and asserted that distribution of food to the hungry had begun.

The Carranzistas also claim the defeat of the Villista flying column commanded by General Fierro which was operating around Pachuca. The Carranza announcement said:

"The Villista flying column under General Fierro, who were flying north after the defeat at Pachuca last week, have been met and routed between Irapuato and Queretaro. This defeat was administered by a column detached from General Obregon's forces and the assurance of its success made doubly sure by strong pressure from the rear by the division commanded by General Diegues."

The State Department lacked confirmation of this claim.

The State Department received an official message from Chihuahua today which was regarded as explaining General Villa's movement north from Torreon. It said that Villa had called a meeting of all mining men in the State of Chihuahua for next Monday, Aug. 9 "to discuss and regulate the mining industry."

WILSON AND LANSING CONFER.

President Works at Cornish on Mexican Program.

CORNISH, N. H., Aug. 3.—President Wilson was in communication with Secretary of State Lansing today regarding the Mexican situation and other foreign questions. It was said at the "Summer White House" tonight that arrangements for the preliminary conference of South and Central American diplomatic representatives regarding Mexican affairs were being handled directly by Mr. Lansing, and that, therefore, all information on the subject would have to come from the State Department.

The President is handling his communication with Secretary Lansing personally and is keeping his won counsel here regarding his plans. Letters from the State Department are opened by Mr. Wilson alone, and he writes his replies and his memoranda for the State Department on his own typewriter. He spent more than an hour working in his private study on communications to be sent t Woashington today.

GONZALES HAS SUPPLIES.

Says Distribution in Mexico City Will Begin Today.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 3.—General Pablo Gonzales, Commander of the Carranza forces, told The Associated Press today that with his army had come sufficient food supplies to plentifully furnish all the needs of the population of the federal capital for at least one month. These supplies, he said, include 7,000 sacks of flour, 100 cars of corn and large quantities of sugar, coffee, butter and beans. A commission will begin the distribution of the foodstuffs tomorrow.

General Gonzales said that communication both by rail and telegraph had been established and that food would soon begin to arrive from various sections of the Republic. He asserted that order everywhere in the Federal District had been restored and that business once more was assuming its normal way.

CARRANZA PLAN FOR CLAIMS.

Will Name Board of Mexicans and Foreigners When War Ends.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VERA CRUZ, Aug. 3.—General Carranza announces, regarding claims for damages suffered during the revolution, that the Secretary of the Treasury of the Provisional Government will appoint a commission consisting of an equal number of Mexicans and foreigners, who will examine all claims. Each nation will be represented by one member who will sit with the board for claims of citizens of that nation. The commission will be formed immediately after the present struggle has been finished, with headquarters in Mexico City.

Active preparations for removal to Mexico City of the Government are going on. The official organ El Pueblo will remove the same day as General Carranza.

General Castro announces that the railroad from San Luis Potosi to Tampic is pen. He has ordered shipments of oil for small factories in Central Mexico closed down for lack of fuel and reports that factory owners will resume employment of thousands of hands in the next fifteen days.

MEXICAN BANDITS KILL TROOPER AND ESCAPES

Two Other American Soldiers Wounded in a Clash on Texas Border.

BROWNSVILLE, Aug. 3.—Mexican bandits, believed surrounded by United States cavalrymen and Texas Deputy Sheriffs in the brush north of this city, escaped, according to information received here tonight.

The Mexicans' camp was rushed and six saddled hores were captured. Their riders, however, were gone.

In a fight earlier in the day between the bandits and cavalrymen Private McGuire of the Twelfth Cavalry was killed and Privates Curtis and Clapsaddle were wounded. A Deputy Sheriff also was hit by a stray bullet.

First reports said that a dozen Mexicans were killed, but tonight it was thought thot only two of them were hit. Two others were captured. The latter refused information about the band, but the camp rushed late today bore evidence that probably less than a dozen men had been in it.

The deputies and troopers continued tonight their search for the men who escaped and who apparently took to the brush afoot. All ranches and farms in the vicinity have armed their households against further raids.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—A telegram from Major William H. Hay, Chief of Staff of Major General Funston at oFrt Sam Houston, informed the War Department today that Judge Yates of Brownsville had urged the Governorof Texas to call on the War Department for 1,500 additional troops. General Funston has troops enough to handle the situation, and the War Department did not find it necessary to send him more troops. In the immediate vicinity of the trouble are Troops A, B, C, and D of the Third Cavalry at Brownsville, Troops A, B, C, and D of the Twelfth Cavalry at Harlingen, just north of Brownsville, and Battery D of the Sixth Field Artillery at Brownsville.

Major Hay's message read as follows:

"Judge H. L. Yates, of Brownsville, telegraphed Governor Ferguson that a band of Mexican armed marauders crossed the Rio Grande about four miles above Brownsville and were engaged in robbing and terrorizing citizens. He requested the Governor to call on the War Department for 1,500 additional troops, or, failing in that, to send regiments of National Guard to the disturbed district. With reference to the above the following has just been received from the commanding officer at Harlingen:

"'Lieutenant Lutz sent out yesterday from San Benito men in pursuit of the band, reportew twenty or thirty desperadoes, who are said to have crossed the river between San Benito and Brownsville the nigt before, reported this morning that two of his men were wounded in contact with the band near Allen Road, seven or eight miles south of Paso Real. Am sending remainder of troops at San Benito and Harlingen, with ambulance, to that point. Several detachments sent out from Brownsville yesterday. This morning two more troops have been ordered from there, (Brownsville.) Am leaving myself to join Lieutenant Lutz.'

"The troops in the Brownsville district are able to handle the situation. The commanding officer at Brownsville has been instructed to do everything he can to reassure the people of that district."

Villa Officer Shoots Two Others.

NOGALES, Sonora, Aug. 3.—General José Maria Acosta, one of Governor Maytorena's lieutenants, shot and killed Captain Casanoba of the Villa garrison today in front of Maytorena's office. Casanoba returned the fire and mortally wounded Lieutenant Carlos Mateo, a bystander. The affray was said to have been the outcome of the killing of a woman friend of Acosta by Casanoba last night.

BARON WERTHER KILLED.

Ex-Son-in-Law of Brazilian States man Shot in Fight Over Children.

RIO JANEIRO, Aug. 3.—Baron Aliemand Werther, son-in-law of the late Baron de Rio-Branco, Brazil's famous Foreign Minister, was killed last night while trying to gain possession of his children, who have been living with his former wife, who had obtained a divorce from him.

The divorce trial of Baroness Werther, which began in September, 1913, resulted in sensational disclosures. The Baroness declared that her husband seized important diplomatic documents belonging to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Brazil and threatened her with death when she protested. Baron Werther, she asserted, had frequent interviews with Herr Michahelles, then German Minister to Brazil. She said also that her husband communicated to the Krupps and other German firms documents referring to the defenses of Brazil.

About a year before the divorce proceedings were instituted Baron Werther was shot three times by his nephew, Senhor Alcides Paranhos Silva, but his wounds were not serious. The shooting took place at the Baron's home in Petropolis. Senhor Silva declared he mistook his uncle for a burglar.

EXPLOSION KILLS THREE.

Fuses Ignite Mysteriously at the Frankford Arsenal.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Aug. 3.—Two soldiers and a civilian lost their lives at the United States arsenal at Frankford, this city, today in an explosion of time fuses used on shrapnel shells. Another civilian was injured. The dead are:

RUNDLETT, ARTHUR B., first-class private, Ordnance Department; home, Boston.

FRASCO, PRASILEO, second-class private, Ordnance Department; home, New York City.

HARKINS, JAMES F., civilian, Philadelphia.

The men were at work near the artillery butts on the firing range some distance from the main buildings of the arsenal. They were engaged in unpacking fuses, which had been withdrawn from service and sent to the arsenal to be broken up, when one of the boxes exploded and bits of steel from the metal fuses were scattered in all directions, tearing and maiming the men. Harkins was so badly injured that he died while being conveyed to a hospital. The two soldiers died six hours later.

The cause of the explosion has not yet been ascertained by the officers at the arsenal. Arthur E. Brown, the injured civilian, the officers said, might be able to explain the cause. He was not in a condition today to be questioned.

For several months work has been at high tension in the ordnance department, and minor explosions are of not infrequent occurrence, but today's accident was the first in a long time in which there was loss of life.

SPENT LOOT IN BROADWAY.

Absconding Cashier Tells Police He Enjoyed Seeing the Sights.

Samuel Shipman, 21 years old, of 411 Bergen Avenue, Newark, who, the police say, confessed to stealing $500 from the Terminal Restaurant in Grand Central Station, where he was cashier, on June 18, spent his last quarter yesterday for a haircut in a Bowery barber's shop. As he stepped into the street Detectives Corbett and Kilginnon of the Second Branch Detective Bureau arrested him on a charge of grand larceny.

"Yes," the police say Shipman admitted, "I stole the $500. It's all gone now, though. I lived in swell Broadway hotels and did the rounds of the cabarets and lobster palaces on the White Way. Breakfast this morning and a haircut took my last jitney. I enjoyed Broadway. Market Street, Newark, doesn't compare with it."

LEAPS TO DEPARTING LINER.

Swiss, Delayed at German Consulate, All but Misses Boat.

On account of the strict examination of the passenger manifests of the Holland-America liners when they arrive in British waters the agents here are inforcing the passport regulations very strictly. Swiss passengers returning home have to get their passports vised by the German Consul as well as the Swiss Consul before they are allowed to board the ships.

William Metzga, a Swiss of New York City, who had booked to sail for Rotterdam on the Noordam yesterday, was turned back when he arrived at the pier in Hoboken and had to come to Manhattan to have his passport vised at the German Consulate. He returned just at noon as the Noordam was backing out into the stream. Metzga flung his satchel upon the ship and then made a flying leap and was caught by members of the crew amid the cheers of people on the pier.

Other passengers on the Noordam were R. S. Townsend, recently appointed U. S. Vice-Consul at Karlsruhe, Germany, and H. G. Waters, U. S. Vice-Consul at Berlin. Two stowaways, Dutchmen, were found in the coal bunkers when the liner got out into the river and were sent ashore on a tug. The Noordam had 150 passengers and a big lot of mail for Holland, Germany and Austria-Hungary.

HEN LAYS AN EGG IN TAR.

Would-be Rescuers Stick Fast, Police Called to Release Trio.

Special to The New York Times.

HARRISON, N. J., Aug. 3.—A little brown hen journeyed from William Aiken's place in Sunset Avenue today, got on top of a barrel of soft tar in an adjoining yard, and laid an egg. Then she cackled at first with pride in a task well accomplished, but presently in notes that expressed surprise, alarm, and finally anguish as the tar stuck fast and the little brown hen was held to the barrel.

So agonized were her utterances that Mr. Aiken and James Flannigan, a neighbor, rushed to her assistance. They plunged their hands into the tar beneath her and stuck fast, too.

The previous vocal efforts of the hen were as nothing to those she made under this new complication, and a local member of the S. P. C. A. telephoned to Chief of Police Fred Riepe for police protection for the fowl.

The Chief hurried to the spot and with his help the men and the hen were freed. The egg was past saving.

BRIDE LURES ACTOR TO DIVORCE COURT

Wife He Married Secretly Takes F. T. Hallock Auto Riding to Sheriff's Office.

LOCKED UP IN A JERSEY JAIL

Complaint Charges Improprieties, Though Wedding Was Only Last Spring.

Special to The New York Times.

HACKENSACK, N. J., Aug. 3.—Frank T. Hallack, a New York movie actor known in his profession as Hal August, came out to Rutherford yesterday evening to call on Miss Corinne M. Hoker, daughter of Frederick F. Hooker, Superintendent of the Flintkote Company. Hallack had been a frequent caller on Miss Hooker last Spring, and her friends suspected that they were engaged. But nobody in Rutherford, not even her parents, kne wthat the two had been married in Weehawken by the Rev. George Angleman on April 12.

Hallack had come out this time on a telephone request from his wife, who had said she would meet him at the station with the family automobile. She met him as had been arranged, and the two drove about Rurtherford for some time. Then she drew up in front of an office building and stopped the car, asking her husband to wait while she telephoned to see if her parents were at home.

She disappeared within, and in a moment there appeared Under Sheriff Thomas English, who announced to Hallack that his wife had sued him for divorce, with alimony and counsel fees, and served a writ of ne exeat. Then Hallack was brought down to Hackensack and taken to the county jail, where, in default of $1,000 bail, he was locked up overnight.

He told his story today of how he had met and courted his wife. He and his brother, Edwin August, went into a dancing school in Broadway one afternoon last Spring, he said, and there he met a girl who told him she would like to introduce him to a niece girl in Rutherford. He mailed an autograph photo to Miss Hooker, and shortly afterward, through another friend, they met at an apartment on Riverside Drive. They took a walk down the Drive, and Hallack told the girl his life story—that he was a movie actor from sunny California, and longing to go back. But he told her, according to the narrative which he set forth in jail to Sheriff Robert Heath, that if he had a little girl like her to love he might stay in New York, and she told him she was "game."

But when they began to talk of ways and means it developed that Hallack couldn't support her in the style to which she had been accustomed, so it was agreed that they would be married and she would return home and he would call on her like any other suitor.

They were married a week after they first met, and then Hallack began to make his calls in Rutherford. Some time after that her friends thought things were settled, and Miss Hooker was the guest of honor at a kitchen shower given by Mrs. Addison Ely, Jr., whose husband is now Mrs. Hallack's attorney in her suit.

Hallack said he called regularly, but of late the arrival of the Summer season had made it impossible for him to go out to Rutherford as often as he had been accustomed. But he said he ktpt in constant communication with his wife, and denied vigorously the assertion of her attorney that from May 17 to July 27 she had never heard from him.

Ely, speaking for Mrs. Hallack, also made charges of misconduct, naming several girls who lived in the rooming house at 103 West Seventieth Street, where Hallack has been staying. He also named a woman living at 115 West Seventy-first Street, who came to Hackensack this afternoon with another man, and said that bail for Hallack would probably be furnished by his friends tomorrow.

At 103 West Seventieth Street the women named by Mrs. Hallack's lawyer all denied that they had more than a speaking acquaintance with the actor. "We used to see him on hot evenings," they said, "when we were sitting out on the stoop, and he went in or out of the house. That was all."

It was added that he paid his rent regularly.

ADVERTISE TO BUY GERMAN STEAMERS

St. Louis Interests Want to Get American-Owned German Goods from Rotterdam.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Aug. 3.—Arthur P. Meagher, President of Charles H. Wyman, customs brokers of St. Louis, and Vice President of the American Importers' Association, returned to St. Louis tonight from New York, where he launched plans to buy a German steamship to carry to American dealers merchandise that had accumulated at Rotterdam, Bremen, and other foreign ports.

"All of the $170,000,000 of German merchandise detained at Rotterdam," Mr. Meagher said, "is virtually owned in this country. It has been contracted for and largely paid for. We have tried to induce various steamship lines operating under neutral flags to load the cargoes, but they have refused to risk the British Order in Council. Now we are determined to get ships of our own.

"We figure that a ship can be purchased for about $300,000. Our aim will be to get small subscriptions to the ship fund, so no charge can be made with justice that any one will derive a great profit. It is expected that those who subscribe will get their money back from freight receipts in a short time.

"By establishing a co-operative ship line we also will be able to show Great Britain that there is a strong sentiment in this country against the illegal blockade of legitimate American commerce. After our ships have been procured we believe the Government of the United States will insist upon their uninterrupted passage to this country with the German-made goods.

Sir Richard Crawford has been quoted as saying that if the American manufacturers and jobbers could get ships to carry their goods from Rotterdam they would not be interfered with."

When in New York Mr. Meagher arranged for the publication of this advertisement there:

Notice to German Shipowners—Bids for outright purchase of first-class vessels for proposed service between Bremen and New York, carriage of American-owned cargoes only; submit bids to Charles H. Wyman & Co., St. Louis, Mo.

F. W. Ruhe of Fensterer & Ruhe, New Yrk, had active charge of the deal for the ship purchase.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Officials of the State Department declined to comment today on the advertisement printed in New York, asking German shipowners to submit bids for outright purchase of first-class vessels for proposed service between Bremen and New York.

It was learned, however, that Arthur P. Meagher conferred unofficially with minor officials of the State Department regarding the plan. Mr. Meagher conferred with Cone Johnson, Solicitor of the State Department, and William B. Fleming, one of the foreign trade advisers.

General Tracy Rallies.

General Benjamin F. Tracy, Secretary of the Navy under President Harrison, who was said on Monday night to be dying at his home, 14 East Sixtieth Street, was reported late last night to have rallied shightly. His condition was said to have improved with the cooler weather.

DISCUSS NEW TAX ARTICLE.

Wickersham Renews Fight to Keep State's Good Faith.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 3.—When debate on the proposed new Article on Taxation, recommended by the Committee on Taxation, was resumed by the Constitutional Convention late this afternoon, Mr. Wickersham entered another protest against the obvious intent of the committee to cancel teh moral obligation involved in the enactment of the secured debts law in 1911, under which the State has collected a tax on almost $1,000,000,000 of securities with the understanding that they should forever be free from local taxation. The part of the proposed new article to which Mr. Wickersham especially objected is:

"Laws granting exemption from taxation, whether heretofore or hereafter enacted, shall be subject to modification or repeal."

Mr. Wickersham wants this modification added: "But without prejudice to any contract heretofore made under the authority of such laws."

"The State should respect its moral as well as its legal obligations," said Mr. Wickersham in support of his proposed amendment. "My amendment will leave it to the Legislatue to determine whether the moral obligation in connection with the secured debts law is of such binding force that this law should not be interfered with."

George C. Linton, Sr., of Erie, called Mr. Wickersham's attention to the fact that "contract" was a technical term and urged that the word "agreement" be substituted. Mr. Wickersham accepted this suggestion.

"If we're going to use the Constitution to allay the apprehensions of certain gentlemen, who have paid a tax on securities under the secured debts law," said Senator Wagner, "the easiest way of accomplishing that end would be by saying nothing about laws 'heretofore' enacted and let it go at that. I can see no point to this quibbling over the word 'contract.' The Wickersham amendment would be useless in the event that the courts should hold that the secured debts law involved a contract, because any legislation to repeal it would then come under the ban of the Federal Constitution, which prohibits the States from doing anything to impair the right of contract. And if the courts should hold that no contract was involved, Mr. Wickersham's amendment would be of no effect also."

Mr. Wickersham, after further debate, moved that the article on taxation be considered section by section. Section 1 of the article reads as follows:

The power of taxation shall never be surrendered, suspended, or contracted away. No property shall be exempt from taxation, except as expressly provided by law. Laws granting exemption from taxation whether heretofore or hereafter enacted shall be subject to modification or repeal. Hereafter no exemption shall be granted except by general laws and upon the affirmative vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each House.

H. Leroy Austin, Republican from Greene County, moved that the first three sentences of this section be stricken out. He lost his motion to strike out the first sentence, but was upheld with regard to the other two.

Mr. Wickersham moved that this be substituted for the first sentence of the section: "The power of taxation shall always remain in the State and shall never be abridged."

Senator Wagner expressed doubt whether under this language the State would have power to delegate the power of taxation to local tax boards, as is done now in New York City.

There was further debate, in the course of which Chairman Saxe announced his willingness to accept the Wickersham amendment, but the convention adjourned for the day before any portion of the amendment had been accepted definitely.

James L. Nixon of Buffalo, who earlier in the session introduced a proposal requiring the Legislature to revoke all present tax exemptions in favor of churches, hospitals, educational and philantrropic organizations, which later was rejected by the Committee on Taxation, offered an amendment to the proposed taxation article from the floor. The amendment provides that there shall be no tax exemptions on any real estate except that owned by the State or Federal Government, or by a municipal corporation, or property on which a church has been constructed.

Mr. Nixon read a long statement in which he said that the opposition to his amendment had come from New York City solely, and that at the hearings practically all the up-State cities had sent delegations to urge its adoption.

AGREE ON HOME RULE PLAN.

Committee Will Report in Favor of Limited Freedom.

Special to The New York Times.

ALANY, Aug. 3.—The home rule article when it comes before the Constitutional Convention will not be the far-reaching measure advocated by Mayor Mitchel and the Mayor's Conference. It will have a legislative string attached so that in case municipalities should not thrive under theier new liberties mistakes can be corrected by a legislative enactment which can be put through in a fortnight, whereas it would take three years at least to abrogate home rule powers written into the Constitution.

President Elihu Root paid a visit to the Cities Committee this afternoon. After he had spent several hours in conference with the members it was announced tonight that the proposed home rule article would be ready for presentation to the convention at its session on Thursday.

"We have agreed on all the essential points," said Chairman Low this evening. "All the differences that remains have to do with details. We took a vote on the article in its tentative form before the committee adjourned this evening. Fifteen of the seventeen members of the committee attended the meeting and the vote stood thirteen to two in favor of reporting the article after it has been perfected as to language. We expect to get through tomorrow afternoon or evening."

It was learned that later four of the thirteen members who voted in favor of the home rule plan did so with reservations as to certain features. One of those voting in favor—Secretary Thomas F. Smith of Tammany Hall, said he had supported the measure in order to bring the question squarely before the convention. The two dissenters were Edward E. Franchot, Republican of Niagara, and Senator James A. Foley from Tammany Leader Murphy's district.

According to ex-Mayor Low, none of the essential points of the plan outlined in last week's dispatches to THE NEW YORK TIMES has been changed. The plan follows the system in vogue in California. Under it municipalities through their legislative bodies and administrative officials may initiate charter legislation to be submitted to the voters and if ratified to be sent to the Legislature, which would have power to annul the legislation within sixty days after Jan. 1.

The Legislature still would retain the power to enact special legislation affecting a city. Originally it was provided that a Mayor's veto could be overcome only by a two-thirds vote. This provision, it was learned tonight, has been eliminated from the present draft and a provision incorporated under which a simple majority in both houses of the Legislature may overcome a veto.

Even the limited grant of home rule proposed is likely to meet vigorous opposition on the floor of the convention from a powerful clique of up-State Republicans.

COMMITTEES IN DEADLOCK.

Clash in Plans for Protection of State's Forests.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 3.—The Constitutional Convention had its first session today under the new working plan of two sessions a day, but made only slow progress. Four of the most important committees—the Cities Committee, the Committee on State Finance, the Committee on Governor and other State officers, and the Judiciary Committee—have not as yet made their final reports, but are expected to do so before the week ends. Nearly all the other standing committees have completed their labors.

Some friction his arisen between the Committee on Governor and Other State Officers and the Committee on Conservation. The Committee on Conservation has worked out a plan providing for an unpaid board of nine members appointed by the Governor for terms of nine years to act as Guardians of the State's forest and to exercise general supervision over the work of conservation. A paid Superintendent under the plan is to be appointed by the board to do the administrative work.

The Committee on Governor in formulating its plan for the proposed new State Government also has decided on a conservation board of nine members, but with terms of five years only, and a Superintendent of conservation to be appointed by the Governor and not by the Conservation Board. The two committees are now in a deadlock, and some of the Root diplomacy may be required to break it.

The opponents of the short ballot have found allies in the labor organizations throughout the State. Ex-Senator Brackett, leader in the fight against the short ballot, today presented a sheaf of petitions from such bodies, protesting against the proposal. The Union League Club of New York has added its indorsement of the short ballot to the many that already have reached President Root.

DROWNS IN BATTLE WITH SURF

Fishing Boat Caught on Bar Overturns, Throwing Seven in Sea.

SEASIDE PARK, N. J., Aug. 3.—Battling their way against what seemed a hopeless chance for their lives this morning, six members of a fishing crew reached shore safely after their boat had pounded to pieces on the outer bar a quarter of a mile from the shore and had thrown them into the seething sea. Captain Axen Jacobsen of Belmar, the seventh man, was drowned. His body has not been recovered.

The men left shore very early this morning for the fishing banks. The wind was blowing strongly then, but the sea was not high. When they were five miles out the wind began to blow a 60-mile gale and the seas to pick up. They turned for shore and when only a short distance out their engine went dead.

Captain Jacobsen, not realizing that he was directly over the dangerous bar, cast his anchor. A few seconds later the boat had pounded on the bar, shattering her planking, and turned over, carrying all seven men into the surf.

STORM DRIVES OUT CAMPERS.

Orchard Beach Tents Submerged—Temperature Down to 59.

The temperature dropped as low as 59 degrees yesterday following the heavy rainstorms, which brought much needed relief to the city and put an end to the deaths and prostrations caused by the heat wave of the past five days. Cool weather is predicted for some days to come by the Weather Bureau. There will be more rain today, but clear weather is promised again tomorrow.

The storm of Monday night and yesterday did little damage in Manhattan and Brooklyn Boroughs, although the wind caused severe conditions on the bay and along the coasts, and storm warnings were issued.

The Orchard Beach tent colony in Pelham Bay Park suffered considerably from the wind and rainfall, and yesterday morning it was found that at least one-third of the tents had been destroyed. Hundreds of persons were driven from the colony early in the morning, drenched and shivering, and were escorted across the bridge to City Island, where they found accommodations at the hotels, dance halls, and restaurants. The police of the City Island Station aided in the work of collecting blankets for the refugees.

Most of the trees which had been planted recently in the vicinity of Orchard Beach were also torn up, because of the fact that the rainfall continued throughout the day little was accomplished clearing up the wreckage of tents.

At 8 o'clock yesterday morning the temperature was 63 degrees, and the maximum reached was 72 degrees at noon. The minimum, 59 degrees, was registered at 9 o'clock last night.

Mrs. Zora E. Johnson Held.

Mrs. Zora Emma Johnson, who claims to be the widow of Henry M. Flagler, the millionaire, was arraigned before Judge Crain, in the Court of General Sessions yesterday on the charge of grand larceny. Mrs. Johnson was arrested on the complaint of Francis Mahoney, a clerk in the Municipal Service Board, who said she got $800 from him on the representation that she was the widow of Mr. Flagler and would be able to return the money when the estate was settled. The woman pleaded not guilty and was remanded to the Tombs to await trial.

ASSERTS PERKINS MISLED ROOSEVELT

Colonel Not Personally Informed About Bull Moose Here, Says Douglas Robinson.

HE HEARD ONLY ONE SIDE

Colonel's Nephew Hints His Uncle Was Urged to Make Recent Statement.

Special to The New York Times.

UTICA, N. Y., Aug. 3.—Declaring that Colonel Roosevelt has been misled by George W. Perkins, Douglas Robinson, nephew of Roosevelt, and State Chairman of the Progressive Party, issued the following statement tonight:

"I have read with interest Colonel Roosevelt's statement on his return from the West, and think I understand the reason for it, and am of the opinion that only having heard, since his return, George W. Perkins's side of the present issue, he has followed Mr. Perkins's insistent advice, perhaps a little too closely. Mr. Perkins is, no doubt, rightfully disturbed and angry that all of us do not agree with him, and is afraid that if many of those that are still enrolled as rogressives do as some of us intend to do and enroll as Republicans, he will be left with less strength politically than he now has.

"Mr. Perkins says to us that we must not influence any one to our way of thinking, but he is willing to ask Colonel Roosevelt to make a public statement with advice attached to save to him (Mr. Perkins) the strength he might otherwise lose. I have always known that all is fair in love and war and politics, but I have not intended to make any particular fight on this issue. I merely intended to give my reasons and let it go at that, but if Mr. Perkins wishes to make it a fight, I am perfectly willing to make it one also.

"Colonel Roosevelt's statement is, I know, made in all good faith, but in this particular instance he has obtained his knowledge of what the Progressive organization is and needs from Mr. Perkins and Mr. Perkins has told Colonel Roosevelt what he wants him to know and no more. None of us who disagree with Mr. Perkins has been able to put to Colonel Roosevelt, since his return our side of the case, and if we had the opportunity, perhaps Colonel Roosevelt would not have issued just the statement he did.

"I have no criticism to make except that it does not seem quite fair to Colonel Roosevelt. I have followed Colonel Roosevelt consistently since I was able to vote, and I believe he is the only American who fully understands the great issues confronting this country, but he is so interested in the larger issues that he cannot be expected always to know the smaller details of political life, and has to rely on the information and advice from others in regard to them. Colonel Roosevelt, having been urged by Mr. Perkins to make a statement, is quite right to state what he himself intends to do, but when it comes to his giving advice to those about to enroll in a political party the voters should realize that the advice in this instance must have been largely influenced by the one-sided appeal of Mr. Perkins, and there must be a reason for the appeal, because Mr. Perkins himself says to the insiders that, though he does not consider this the time to enroll, as Republicans, next year is the time when better terms can be made.

It is rumored the Herkimer County Republicans are planing to nominate Mr. Robinson for the Assembly.

RUNS DOWN GIRL IN WILD AUTO CHASE

Policeman Shouts Warning as Lillian Carlsen Gets in Path of Taxi.

CHAUFFEUR HITS A POST

Riordan, Sober, Won't Explain Mad Flight Which Sent Policeman in Hot Pursuit in Auto.

Sergeant Brophy of the West 100th Street Station yelled after the driver of a taxicab at 10:30 o'clock last night when the vehicle passed him at Eighty-seventh Street, going north, in Ceneral Park West at forty miles an hour and with no lights showing. The chauffeur, if he heard, did not slow down, and Brophy sprang into an automobile standing at the curb and asked the chauffeur to chase the taxicab.

The pursuing car could not overtake the taxicab, though it held its own in the race, and, peering from the front seat, Brophy saw a man and a girl start across Central Park West, near 100th Street. He was several blocks behind and could not yell a warning, for the racing cab was close upon the couple, and from his car Brophy saw the girl struck and sent flying 20 feet to the west curbstone.

He saw Policeman Sullivan run out and help her escort pick her up, and, satisfied she would be cared for, Brophy ordered his driverto keep after the cab, which had never slackened its pace. The Sergeant saw it run north to 106th Street, and then turn into this thoroughfare careening on two wheels as it rounded the corner at express speed. His own car followed a moment later, in time to reveal the taxicab as it smashed into a lamppost, its driver having lost control of it as he turned the corner.

The chauffeur sprang off the seat and, apparently unhurt, started to run off as fast as he could go. Brophy, too, sprang from the car and gave chase. He caught his man aboout a block away and led him back to 100th Street and Central Park West.

There Dr. Steele of Knickerbocker Hospital was leaning over the girl. He found that four of her teeth had been knocked out. She was badly cut and bruised, and the physician said she was dangerously injured internally. He said her condition was very serious ad hurried her to the hospital.

Her escort, who said he was Marbon Lynch of 469 Lenox Avenue, said she was Miss Lillian Carlsen of 177 West 102d Street, 18 years old. He said Policeman Sullivan had shouted a warning to them when neither of them had observed the racing taxicab, and that he had tried to drag the girl to safety.

The cab came upon them so fast, however, that he could not get her out of the way and he had been thrown down himself, though he escaped being hit by the cab.

The chauffeur was taken to the 100th Street Station and locked up charged with felonious assault. He said he was John Riordan of 439 West Fifty-second Street. The police said he had not been drinking, and that he refused to explain the reason for his excessive speed. There was no one in his car except himself.

WANT THEIR $10,000 BACK.

Woman Says Crazy Husband Sent Conscience Money to Treasury.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—The Secret Service is investigating an effort made by a man and woman to get from the Treasury $10,000 recently added to the conscience fund.

The following letter, signed by an apparently fictitious name and mailed on the train between Sterling and Peoria, Ill., has been received at the Treasury Department:

My crazy husband, nearly dead, sent you $10,000 a few days ago—three $1,000 bills, eight $500 bills, and thirty $100 bills. He is now dying. Please return the money to me. No sound mind would do the thing he did.

The writer gave her address as Rochester. The Treasury Department has since learned that the writer wrote to the Postmaster at Rochester and asked him, if a valuable letter came for her, to forward it to Van Patten, Ill. At the same time her husband wrote to the Postmaster at Van Patten and asked him, if a letter came for his wife, to forward it to a railroad brakeman at Nelson, Ill.

HOLDS LINDSEY GUILTY.

Judge Declares Him in Contempt for Concealing Boy's Story.

DENVER, Aug. 3.—Judge Ben B. Lindsey of the Denver Juvenile Court was found guilty of contempt of court by Distrcit Judge John A. Perry today. Senetence was deferred pending Judge Lindsey's return from the East.

The contempt case resulted from Judge Lindsey's refusal to reveal on the witness stand, on the ground that he was privileged, a confidential conveyastion he had with Neal Wright, 12, whose testimony in Criminal Court had much to do with the acquittal of his mother, Mrs. Berta Wright, charged with the murder of her husband.

John A. Wright was shot while seeking to gain entrance to his home here on April 18. Mrs. Wright was charged with the killing. Neal Wright testified at the trial that he, not his mother, fired the fatal shot, and that it was accidental. The District Attorney contended that Neal previously told a different story to Judge Lindsey, and called Lindsey as a witness.

were brought to his attention tonight, saying that it would be improper to make any public comments on the subject until they had been brought to him officially.

It is known that Warden Osborne permitted four or five prisoners to go to New York to attend funerals of near relatives, though always in the company of prison guards, before the case of the prisoner at Great Meadow came up and Supt. Reilly put the band on such special privileges. It was said here tonight that he had not granted any such leaves since the Superintendent's order was issued. Previous to that order he had gone on the assumption that the matter was left to his judgment.

Sonnenberg was permitted to go to New York to view the body of his wife after she had died, and, as in the case of the others, returned to Sing Sing with the guard who accompanied him. The Warden telephoned to Superintendent Riley before allowing him to leave the prison. Tony Marino and Duffy, accompanied by a guard, were not permitted to go to New York but outside of the prison walls, in Ossining, to view the body of "Canada Blackie." Warden Osborne knew the notorious "Blackie" well, and wrote the introduction for a book built about him to depict prison life.

The Warden would not elaborate on the assertion he made in an address in New York Monday night to the effect that certain politicians were trying to "frame him up." The Warden said that outside encouragement had been given some of the men who had tried to escape from Sing Sing. O'Dea, a prisoner who made two efforts to escape, but was caught each time, it was said yesterday, was in conference with McDonald, Superintendent Riley's agent, before each attempt.

McDonald also conferred with a prisoner, a Sergeant appointed by the Mutual Welfare League, who put the life-term convict Murphy up to entering the death house as a singer and talking with Charles Becker in violation of the prison rules, it was said yesterday.

Westchester County politicians, seeking patronage, are among those waging war on the present Sing Sing administration, it is understood at Sing Sing, and it is said that certain prisoners with influential political friends are working with them.

Discharged Prison Foreman to Sue.

Denis J. Kelly, who was discharged on Monday as foreman of the printing shop at Sing Sing prison, returned to his home at 247 Riverdale Avenue, Yonkers, yesterday and retained attorneys to bring an action to have him reinstated on the ground that he was a Civil Service employe and Warden Osborne had no authority to discharge him. Warden Osborne said he discharged Kelly because he was inefficient, and that the fact he had passed a Civil Service examination to get the place did not give him a life job.

Women Visit Sing Sing.

Mrs. Clarence Burns, Mrs. George F. Kerr, Mrs. John D. O'Leary, and Miss Helen Varick Boswell, four ardent supporters of industrial education and vocational training, were guests of Warden Osborne at Sing Sing yesterday and discussed with him welfare work and the question of inaugurating a system of vocational training among prisoners. They attended sessions of the prisoners' court and the Warden's appeal court

Economy must take into account both what you pay and what you get in return.

The economy of the Equitable Building proposition consists in the simple fact that it offers more for your money than the same amount of money will buy elsewhere.

Volume (number ten) of The New York Times Index for the second quarter of 1915 will be off the press in a few days.

This work has become indispensable as a reference book to those who are already using it. The Index epitomizes in one convenient volume each three months all the news that has been printed in The New York Times during that period. By a most thorough system of classification, a reference to any news event requires but a moment.

SCIENTISTS STUDY ELECTRIC 'STRAYS'

British Association Begins Investigation of Interruptions to Wireless.

VAGRANT CURRENTS IN AIR

May Come from the Sun, Dr. W. Eccles Says—Marconi Operators Are Gathering Data.

In addition to completing wireless communication across the Pacific Ocean, the new and powerful wireless plant near Yokohama, Japan, will increase the opportunities for the study of the natural electrical disturbances which frequently interrupt wireless service between less powerful stations.

Scientists at the stations on the Pacific near San Francisco, in Hawaii and near Yokohama, will make a study of the wandering electrical currents as they occur on the Pacific Ocean. For some reason the vagabond electrical discharges do not cause as much trouble on the Pacific as on the Atlantic, and that is another of the subjects of investigation.

The long-distance stations, because of their high-power receiving apparatus, are better able to produce data on the electricity of the air than any other kinds, but today practically every Marconi operator, both on ships and at land stations, makes observations continually of electrical disturbances to be used as the basis of a thorough scientific study of these phenomena.

The broad study of this subject is being carried on by the Maconi Companies under Dr. W. Eccles, who is at the head of a committee of scientists appointed by the British Association to carry on the work. Every Marconi operator is furnished forms on which he records at given hours the quality, strength, and frequency of the natural electrical waves, together with information about the state of the barometer, the temperature, and the latitude and longitude.

Electric "Strays" a Mystery.

These observations may cover a period of years before the scientists of the British Association venture to reach any conclusion regarding the aerial electricity. The subject is now a mystery which has not been in the slightest degree penetrated. The layman who is occasionally puzzled when he reads that wireless communication has been interrupted by "static conditions" or "atmospheric conditions" or "aerial disturbances" is no more ignorant about the real cause of the trouble than the most eminent scientists alive.

Dr. Eccles, who is at the head of the present investigation, says:

"These natural electrical waves have coursed about the globe since the most remote ages, but their existence has been completely unsuspected until very recent times.

"They cause erratic and troublesome noises in the telephone receivers of a wireless telegraph station, or cause erratic and confusing marks on the tape of a coherer and inker set in registering the length of wireless waves which form the letters of the wireless code. They are only too familiar to every one who has worn the phones of a wireless operator for even a brief interval.

"For brevity they were christened 'strays' or 'X's' in the years 1897, 1898, and 1899 in England, and were later given the name 'atmospherics' in the United States. Another and more recent Americanism is 'static.' The best name appears to me to be 'strays,' for the word exactly describes their vagrant nature and does not commit one to an opinion in regard to their origin.

"Now, to the scientific mind the chief claim of strays to promptness of attention is that nobody knows completely what they are or whence they come. The study of strays was begun by Popoff shortly before the rise of practical wireless telegraphy. In 1895 he made use of a long vertical conductor like a lightning rod in combination with a coherer, in order to follow the motions of lightning storms across the country. In 1898 Boggio Lera improved on Popoff's apparatus as regards sensitiveness and arranged that feeble and strong disturbances should be recorded separately.

Lightning Precedes Many "Xs."

"His experiments with this apparatus showed that the approach of electrical storms was heralded by frequent operation of the apparatus several hours in advance of their arrival in the locality of the observing station and showed that every visible flash operated the apparatus infallibly.

"But even when there is no thunder weather recorded over the whole continent of Europe and the adjacent seas, strays or Xs may be received almost perpetually by the receiving antenna adjusted to a great wave length. This is a distinct matter from the Xs due to local atmospheric electricity utilizing the antenna as a lightning rod, and different again from the hum or sizzle or fizz caused by a white squall at sea or by glow discharge to high peaks.

"These perpetual strays are characterized by the fact that they are heavier and more frequent, in general, the longer the wave to which the receiving antenna is adjusted, so far as it has been tried up to the present.

"It is natural, but it is not scientific, to jump to the conclusion that these strays are all due to lightning strokes occurring probably at great distances somewhere on the earth's surface, or possibly in the free atmosphere between one bank of ionized air and another. This, however, ignores the theory that the source of the strays may be far outside the earth. There is nothing unreasonable in supposing that the sun, let us say, may send us occasional electrical waves.

"For example, in the colossal movements of matter associated with the formation of a solar prominence—movements that appear to take place with enormous velocities—electrical discharges may be brought about of magnitude far transcending anything that can happen on earth. These would give rise to electrical waves which might reach the earth in perceptible intensity and constitute a portion of our strays. On the other hand, we must not forget that we on the earth's surface may be protected by our ionized atmosphere from these extra-terrestrial waves. It is just such problems that the British Association Committee has set itself to inquire into.

Three Distinct Kinds of "Strays."

"Three kinds of strays are commonly heard during the telephonic reception of signals. One is the more or less prolonged rattling or grinding noise, called 'grinders'; another the sharp isolated knocks called 'clicks' and a third consisting of a buzzing or frying noise, which is termed 'hum' or 'sizzle.'

"Another and distinct inquiry which urgently needs pursuing has regard to the part played by the earth's atmosphere in causing variations in signal strength. The laws of their variations, especially in their respect to connection with weather conditions, with the time of day and with the position on the earth's surface require investigation. The time of day has effects that include the well known variations at sunrise and sunset.

"In order to learn more we must have observations made simultaneously at various parts of the world and collated at a central office, as the organization of Marconi operators to assist in this study will make possible."

BIG CROPS AND PROSPERITY.

Merchants in Chicago from Many Points Tell Same Story.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—With the arrival in Chicago of a multitude of merchants from the South, the Southwest, the West, and the Middle West for the celebration of "Chicago Week," an annual event designed for the purpose of bringing buyers to the marts of this city, a spirit of optimism pervaded the wholesale merchandising districts, for practically all the visitors brought tidings of bounteous crops and increasing prosperity. Individually and collectively the buyers declare that prosperity is galloping back to the agricultural Central West, which has never been as much affected by the war as other parts of the country.

Merchants arelaying in big stocks in preparation for a remarkable trade in the Fall after the harvest. The demand on wholesalers for that class of goods known as luxuries has been unusually heavy.

"The South is booming," said Charles McNeal of the McNeal & Edwards Company, Clarkesville, Tenn., today. 'It is in for one of its greatest eras of prosperity. I am so sure of it that I am buying more heavily than for years past. The cotton situation has done more good than harm in the long run. While the territory which we serve immediately is not cotton country, still I know from wholesale establishments in my city that the South as a whole is buying more than it has bought for some years."

"Crops are simply magnificent in the Far Northwest," said H. Clayburgh of Spokane, Wash., who distributes shoes over the States of Montana, Washington, and Idaho. "Montana has the greatest grain crops in its history, and the crops in the orchard sections of the three States could not be better. Grain, of course, will bring high prices, but the shutting off of the export demand may lower the profits of the fruit growers. There is continued dullness in the lumber industry, due mostly to lack of ships to carry the products of the forest, but the merchants are buying more freely than for some time, replenishing their depleted stocks, and apparently are more confident than I have ever before seen them."

"North Dakota is just getting ready to harvest the biggest wheat crop in its history," said J. B. Mills of Bismarck. "There isn't a blemish on the crop anywhere in the State, and nothing but hail can harm it now. Prices are high, and the whole State will be more prosperous than ever before."

GREENHUT SALE ON AUG. 17.

Property Will Be Offered in Separate Parcels and in Bulk.

The decree of sale of the assets of the bankrupt J. B. Greenhut Company, as prepared by the trustees in bankruptcy, was issued yesterday, signed by Peter B. Olney, the referee. According to the decree, the assets will be offered at public sale at the place of business of the bankrupt, in the building on the west side of Sixth Avenue at Eighteenth Street, on Aug. 17 at noon. The property of the bankrupt will be offered in separate parcels and in bulk, so that the business may be bought as a going concern. Because of this latter provision, the creditors of the bankrupt who wish to become partners in a reorganization of the store may do so.

The decree was prepared by James N. Rosenberg of counsel for the Trustees, in collaboration with the Trustees and representatives of the creditors. There was opposition to it in its original form by some creditors opposed to the reorganization plan, but changes were made to satisfy the more important of these objections and at the sanic time permit the creditors desiring reorganization to buy the property in bulk by paying a proper price.

According to a provision in the decree, at least ten days' notice of sale shall be given to all creditors by mailing to their respective addresses and by advertisement in THE NEW YORK TIMES and The Daily Trade Record.

The trustees, who will conduct the sale, are Walter C. Noyes, William A. Marble, and Alfred A. Cook.

GROOM GERRY FOR SENATE.

Rhode Island Friends Enter Him in Next Year's Race.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Aug. 3.—A boom for ex-Representative Peter G. Gerry for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator next year was launched this afternoon at a luncheon held by Democratic leaders at the Narragansett Hotel.

Ex-Representative Thomas P. Haven, in a speech to the leaders, said that he hoped the time was not far distant when Rhode Island would be represented in the Senate by the former Congressman from the Second District. His remarks were received with great enthusiasm. Representative George F. O'Shaunessy also paid a warm tribute to Mr. Gerry.

Before the luncheon Mr. Gerry entertained the leaders on his yacht.

GERMANS ARE MERRY ABOARD SUBMARINES

Official Eyewitness Describes Life in the Kaiser's Undersea Fighters.

DEPRECATES HUMANITY

Naval Writer Says Consideration Shown Toward Merchant Craft Is Not Appreciated.

An eyewitness account of life aboard German submarines preying on British and other allied merchant shipping, is given by Otto von Gottberg, the naval writer commissioned by the German Admiralty to write a series of articles descriptive of Germany's naval operations for the newspapers of Germany. In an article, published in the German papers of June 19, the writer also tells of changes in the method of operation by the German U-boats, which have in some recent cases convoyed their prizes into port. The article follows in narrative form:

When the next day's sun rose U— was again at work outside, although the heavy wind promised little good. In stormy weather and a heavy sea, the English steamer Vosges, sighted about noon, tried to escape. Overtaken, she tried to ram the submarine. She had a right to feel safe enough, for the little gray craft pitched and rolled so heavily in its pursuit that a shot with hope of striking seemed impossible.

Lashed to the deck, as always in stormy weather, the men stood at the gun, and the two officers, with the helmsman, on the bridge. But the ropes must be long and loose if the arms of the gunners are to have free movement. The Britons saw how the high waves frequently swept our men off the deck. The hands of their comrades or their own strength and agility landed them back on board.

For three hours the giant chased the wave-swept U-boat around in a circle, seeking to ram the rolling and pitching little gray fellow. Then a shell struck the enemy, giving him his quietus. Limping and sinking, the ship made for another steamer some distance off.

Passengers Acted as Enemies.

English newspapers contained reports of the wounding of the crew by our fire and narrated that the passengers of the Vosges during the pursuit had assisted in shoveling coal to keep the fires going. As they acted as our enemies, the lives of passengers on English vessels may not further demand any consideration.

Toward evening U— exchanged greetings with a little sister boat. Through flag signals the commanders told each other about their experiences and the observations they had made at sea. The bad weather continued for eight days. But each one of them brought our boat a steamer as a prize, until in the course of its voyage it had taken ships with a total tonnage of 45,000 or had sent them to the fishes. After five vessels bound for Liverpool had been sunk as victims of U—, the helmsman on the bridge remarked, dryly:

"Apparently our commander doesn't care to be made an honorary citizen of Liverpool!"

Thus, in spite of strictest discipline, there is comfortable and merry life aboard our submarines. In close intimacy and common danger, the leaders and men learn to value true comradeship. The men soon learn which song their commander best loves to hear, and no other is thereafter played so frequently on the graphophone that serves as constant companion to the crews of our little gray crafts on the water as well as beneath it, bringing them lively spirits and entertainment. The desires, ambitions, and experiences of all on board are alike. But the noonday meal appears to rouse varied emotions. The faces of the officers clear up when the plate, handed to them on the bridge and often seasoned with salt water, contains a mess of mutton and cabbage. On the other hand, the men look cheerful and lick their lips when the cook tells that there will be "potatoes, sauce and roast."

Thus came the memorable day on which the French were paid for destroying the U—. Eight fishing vessels, perhaps advance scouts, came tossing out of the mouth of the Seine.

French Fishing Craft Accept Battle.

Our Captain thought they could well be spared there, and fired several warning shots from the gun. The Frenchmen were armed and accepted battle. But it was not long before they fled and disappeared again in the Seine, and sent announcement of a naval victory to Calais.

A Briton, with a large number of passengers—including forty Chinese—and a cargo of oats for the French Army, ran in front of our bow. Again the Englishman pretended not to see the flag signal to stop and attempted to flee. Pursued, and held up with the cannon, he was told by the Captain:

"Only through consideration for your passengers have I refrained from torpedoing you before."

The British skipper confessed, with a sigh of relief, that he thought life nicer than death, and volunteered, in return for the consideration shown to him, to point out at which point his ship could be most speedily dispatched by a bomb. He kept his word, and helped in sinking the ship.

Unfortunately, U— met with an accident far out from Calcutta. The compass went to smash. Without this instrument seafarers are often lost. But our cold-blooded and inventive commander had a good idea. By means of a wireless message to Belgium he begged—again it sounds very simple—for an aviator. After hours of tense expectation he saw the great bird under the clouds and allowed the latter to pilot him into a German harbor on the Belgian coast. On shore the joy of our people was great at the success of the venture. But on the U— a greater joy was expressed by three harralis. The crew had learned the news of the falling back of the Russians in the Carpathians and the victorious advance toward Ypres. The commander had not had experiences enough. Under a shell fire he celebrated a reunion with his brother in a trench on the Yser Canal. It was a joyous and yet a serious reunion, for a third brave brother lay under alien soil since a hotly fought battle some time before.

And again we may say with happy confidence and proud satisfaction that every bold enterprise of our officers soon finds a parallel. Since the two prizes of the U— have been lying in Zeebrugge another U— boat has even let a steamer off the east coast of England into Cuxhaven!

The fury aroused by these successes of our U-boats in the camp of our opponents rages most loud and childishly in France and its press. One of our gray boats overhauled the steamer Frederic Franc. The good-hearted commander asked the disembarked Frenchmen if they were provided with water and provisions, and sent a sailing boat to take them home. He read the thanks for his kindness in a French newspaper in the assertion that he had stolen the ship's cashbox and trodden the tricolor under foot. Therefore our people can advise the commanders of the submarines to be guided by less kindness and consideration than heretofore. An English proverb, which is therefore fully understandable to the enemy, says practically and truly:

"If you have the name you may play the game."

Whoever accuses us of being cruel when we offer kindness and mild treatment must expect that we shall grow ever harder and harder..

COASTER MEN EXONERATED.

Jury Finds Fatal Accident at Coney Island Was Unavoidable.

The inquest into the accident on the Rough Rider Roller Coaster at the Bowery and Jones's Walk, Coney Island, on July 28, in which three persons lost their lives, was concluded last night when the jurors summoned by Coroner Senior in Brooklyn found the tragedy was unavoidable and not due to negligence. They recommended that it would be safer if single cars were sent over the coaster, instead of two together, as is now done.

Thomas Ward, manager of the Rough Rider Roller Coaster Company, was present at the inquest. He is out in $5,000 on a charge of homicide. He refused to testify, on the advice of his lawyer. William J. Ward, his brother and an officer in the company, said he would rather see the coaster torn down than to have it operated if unsafe.

Inspectors from the Building Department testified that an examination had shown the structure was in good condition and there were no defects in the cars. Testimony was given tending to show that the accident was due to the high rate of speed attained by the cars and not to physical defects of coaster or cars.

MISS COBB WEDS SUDDENLY.

Daughter of Remington Typewriter Official a Bride in Baltimore.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., Aug. 3.—Miss Lillian E. Cobb, 21 years old, of New York City, and Bruce Baird, 22 years old, member of the law firm of Bruce & Bastian of Washington, D. C., came to this city today and were married by Rev. Jesse Bicknell, godfather of the bridegroom.

Miss Cobb left the home of her grandmother, Mrs. E. M. Hulse, whom she had been visiting in Washington, saying that she was going to spend the day with a friend. She met C. C. Schuermann of Washington, a friend of Mr. Baird, who accompanied her to Baltimore by automobile. Mr. Baird left the Capital several days ago, and was with relatives in Howard County. He was advised of Miss Cobb's arrival and met her and Mr. Schuermann, who obtained the license.

The bride is the daughter of Archibald Cobb, an official of the Remington Typewriter Company in New York. After the ceremony the couple sent telegrams to their friends and relatives. Their parents have forgiven them. They leave tomorrow for New York.

JERSEY WATER WAR HALTED

State Officials Force Pitman Company to Restore Fire Plug Service.

Special to The New York Times.

PITMAN, N. J., Aug. 3.—A water rate war which resulted in the Pitman Water Company dismantling all of the fire plugs yesterday and leaving the town without fire protection in an effort to force the payment of a disputed borough water bill was brought to a sudden halt today by the State Board of Public Ptilities Commissioners, who ordered the water service restored at once. The water was turned on again tonight, and property owners breathed easier.

A house occupied by William Dole was struck by lightning last night, but rain extinguished the flames and saved the Fire Department from the task of trying to fight fire without water.

British Service at Trinity.

There will be special services of Intercession and Supplication today throughout the British Empire on the anniversary of the declaration of war. There is to be a service at Trinity Church at noon, which the various British societies in the city will attend. It is hoped that is many members of the Imperial Order, Daughters of the British Empire will be present as possible.

SEALS ARE HERDED LIKE RANGE CATTLE

Government Inspectors Find It Easy to Drive Them Up for Branding.

MORE DOMESTIC THAN WILD

Bulls and Their Mates Return in Summer to Pribilof Islands After Winter in South.

"'Wild' animals that are as subject to observation, counting, and breeding regulations as any farmer's herd of cattle are not usual in nature, so that the fur seals that have their habitat on the Pribilof Islands, 300 miles off the coast of Alaska, are a striking example of the exception to the rule. The extraordinary characteristics of these animals have recently been described in a lengthy report prepared by a commission of three scientists engaged as assistants to the Federal Bureau of Fisheries to study seal life on the islands. The members of the commission are Wilfred H. Osgood, Edward A. Preble, and George H. Parker.

"Discussing the points of contact between the seals and domestic animals, the report says:

"'The fur seal is a highly polygamous animal, almost wholly controlled by man during the breeding season. It has been subjected to man's disposition for more than a century and shows no tendency to change its habits as a result of his interference. Seals may be driven up, counted, caught and examined, branded, or killed even more easily than range cattle or horses. After being driven they return to their accustomed resorts as if nothing had happened.

"'Except that they have not yet been improved by man, they are scarcely more to be regarded as wild animals than the majority of our domestic species. Their numbers, their breeding, and to some extent their ailments are subject to the control of man. The sexes are born in equal numbers, and a large proportion of the males are superfluous for breeding purposes. It is obvious, therefore, that these superfluous males may be utilized by man just as in the case of domestic animals, and that the principles involved are those successfully employed by breeders of live stock.'

Migrate to California.

Permitted thus to observe the seals closely and in the breeding season continuously, the Federal scientists have been able to write of the character and habits of the animals with accurate completeness. In a summary of this subject their report says:

"'Practically all of the individuals of the herd during some part of the season from May until December make the Pribilof Islands their home. The Winter and early Spring months are spent entirely at sea. The migration route in general is southward to the passes of the Aleutian Islands, then eastward and southeastward along the coast of Alaska, British Columbia, and the United States to the latitude of Southern California. The adult males remain furthest north, wintering south of the Aleutian chain and in the Gulf of Alaska. The younger males go somewhat further and the females furthest of all..

"'Returning from their Winter resort, the seals reach the islands in general according to their age, the older animals first and the youngest last. The adult males begin to reach the Pribilof Islands about May 1, the adult females and the older bachelors arrive chiefly mainly in June, the two-year-olds mainly in July, and the yearlings in the latter part of August and early September.

Fight for Breeding Places.

"'On reaching the islands the old bulls at once take their places on the rookery ground, in many cases, perhaps in most, choosing the same spot occupied in former years. They remain on the place selected throughout the entire breeding season without eating. Once the place is chosen, they can scarcely be forced by any means to forsake it, and display the most extraordinary courage and persistence in maintaining their position against the assaults of their rivals and the efforts of man.

"'During May and June the numbers on the rookery increase, each bull on arriving taking such place as he can obtain, sometimes by dispossessing another, but as a rule by selecting an unoccupied spot. Thus the late comers settle about the ends or the rear of the breeding ground. Shortly after the first of June the females of 3 years and over begin to arrive. On arrival, each at once lands and seeks a bull. Each day other cows arrive, and the harems grow rapidly. The arriving cows show a tendency to join the larger groups, and consequently there is an uneven growth, some bulls securing large harems early in the season, while others near by may still have no cows.

Rivalry Among the Bulls.

"'Early in the season, before the arrival of the cows, there is some display of rivalry among the bulls, and late arrivals attempting to gain a place near the centre of the rookery are frequently subjected to the joint attack of several bulls already in place. In general, however, the stationed bulls spend much of this time in sleeping, and incoming ones gradually fill in the unoccupied territory. Later in the season those bulls that have not obtained cows attempt to abduct some from the larger harems, and fighting ensues. The number of cows to a harem varies greatly, frequently being more than fifty and occasionally exceeding 100, while in many cases it is very small—from two or three to a dozen. The large harems are clearly due more to advantage of position than to fighting prowess of the bulls in charge of them.

"'Near the end of the breeding season the old bulls leave the rookeries and go to sea to feed. Even before the bulls leave, during the last week in July, they relax the strict discipline which they have maintained earlier in the season and the cows come and go at will, and idle bulls and young bachelors throng the grounds they dared not enter previously. After this 'break-up' there is more or less mingling of all classes of seals.

"'The bachelors, or younger males, remain during the Summer mainly by themselves, hauling out in large bands in the vicinity of the breeding rookeries on separate areas known as hauling grounds. Unlike the breeding males, they make frequent excursions to sea to feed and remain fat the entire Summer. While on land they pass much of their time sleeping and playing, and until late in the season are kept from the breeding grounds by the old bulls. It is from these hauling grounds that the drives for killing are made. Some of the bachelors remain until December, and an occasional few are observed during the Winter.'

In some cases, the report says, seals have been branded and observed from year to year until death from old age.

TO STOP PACIFIC SERVICE.

Pacific Mail Liners to be Withdrawn Owing to La Follette Act.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 3.—The first definite announcement of the discontinuance of its Pacific service was made by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company today.

This big corporation will withdraw its five liners from the Pacific on Nov. 2. Its last vessel to leave San Francisco for the Orient will be the Mongolia, sailing on that date.

The reason given for this step is that the La Follette Seamen's law goes into effect on Nov. 4, making it impossible from a financial standpoint for the ships to operate.

This gives the Japanese lines a monopoly of trans-Pacific business out of this port.

22,000,000 IN SCHOOLS.

Report of U. S. Commissioner Shows Only 216,000 Are College Students.

The enrollment in colleges and universities in the United States is only 216,000, or less than 1 per cent. of a total of 22,000,000 in all the educational institutions of the country, according to the annual report issued by the United States Commissioner of Education. More than 18,000,000 were enrolled in the elementary schools, while 1,374,000 were in secondary schools, both public and private. Nearly 100,000 were in normal schools preparing to be teachers, 67,000 were in professional schools, while the rest were divided among other types of institutions.

These students got instruction from 703,000 teachers, of whom 586,000 were in the public schools. In point of rapid growth the public high school still presents the most impressive figures because the enrollment for the last year was more than 84,000 in excess of the preceding one.

The cost of education in 1914, according to the estimate of the Commissioner of Education, was $750,000,000. He adds in his report:

"This three-quarters of a billion dollars is a relatively small amount compared with other items in the public expense. It is less by $300,000 than the cost of running the Federal Government. It is less than one-third the nation's expenditure for alcoholic liquors. It is only a little more than three times the estimated cost of admissions to motion picture theatres in the United States for the same year. Measured in terms of products of the soil, the United States spent somewhat more for education in 1914 than the value of its cotton crop, and less than the value of its wheat crop, and less than half the value of the annual harvest of corn, while the nation's bill for education was less by nearly $100,000,000 than the value of the exports from the Harbor of New York in the calendar year just past."

PEACHES IN NEW JERSEY.

State College Warns Against Growing Them for Profit.

The New Jersey State College of Agriculture is warning fruit growers in that State that, despite the success of the college's experiment station in growing peaches in Southern New Jersey, that crop is not profitable unless operations are conducted on a large scale.

"The commercial production of fruit in New Jersey," says the college, "must be conducted upon a better basis in the future to be profitable. The small orchard of a few trees of several varieties can no longer be considered commercially advisable. In all seasons except those of a short crop local markets are quickly oversupplied. The large wholesale markets must be the outlet for the bulk of the fruit crop. The man with a few trees is obliged to spray, fertilize, and cultivate to secure perfect fruit, and his cost of production is higher than in the case of a fruit grower whose business is planned upon a scale to be commercially economical.

"The man with a few trees also has too small a quantity to make any impression in the wholesale market; and, further, the lack of quantity means a lack of uniformity in the product. The small grower often has trouble to get his fruit sprayed and cultivated at all in some localities.

"The New Jersey Station does not mean to discourage any one from planting a home orchard, neither does it state that a small orchard may not be profitable, but it does wish to warn people not to engage in commercial peach growing upon a small scale without knowing all the facts from disinterested parties.

"Do not locate a peach orchard for profit unless you know the land is of sufficient elevation. At least 1,000 trees of a variety are necessary for regular shipments in carload lots. Do not plant too many varieties. Do not plant any except known varieties of merit. Do not plant a commercial orchard where good shipping conditions are not available."

The system of co-operative orchard planting is discouraged, as it is pointed out that if the company fails the individual member is left with a few trees which he cannot manage economically.

ADMITS KILLING HIS CHILD.

Liebman Tells Insanity Commission He Threw Two from Window.

After declaring his innocence from the moment of his arrest, Hyman Liebman, a tailor, of 76 East Ninety-eighth Street, yesterday confessed to having murdered his seven-year-old daughter by hurling her from a window on the fifth floor of his home on March 17 last. At the time he also threw his five-year-old son, Jacob, down the airshaft. The girl died in the Mount Sinai Hospital and the boy was crippled for life.

While in the Tombs awaiting trial, Liebman tried to take his own life on June 14 by jumping 40 feet from the top iter of cells to the corridor. His fall was broken by Warden Hanley, who caught him.

Liebman was convicted of murder in the first degree last Thursday. After the verdict the court appointed Dr. William Mabon, Superintendent of the Manhattan State Hospital, to head a commission to investigate his sanity. The commission met in the Criminal Court Building yesterday and received a confession from Liebman.

"I couldn't earn enough to feed my children," said Liebman, "so I decided they had better be head."

The commission will continue its hearing today.

ALL ENJOY WONDER SPHERE.

Silver Ball in Garden Turns Nature Into a Kaleidoscope.

Have you a "Wonder Sphere" at your country home? If you have not you are missing some of the comforts of home and one of the pleasures of life. In these wonder spheres you become your own crystal gazer. The professional crystal gazer by looking into a crystal sphere tells the fortune of the individual and foretells future events. In the wonder sphere the owner sees only present events, but they are in a brilliant and ever changing panorama that is a delight.

The wonder sphere is a great silver ball enclosed in crystal, and at country homes on the grounds or near the gateway it reflects all the life around it. It mirrors the waving of the trees, the flight of the birds, all the mysteries of nature as well as the human beings who come within its range.

The spheres are usually made for outdoor use and are fourteen inches in diameter. They are mounted on pedestals, like a sun dial, and may be placed wherever desired, or they can be mounted on a low gate post. In the myriad reflections that show they seem to be alive and people who have once had them do not like to spare them—they are company.

800 AFTER BRADY MEDAL.

Electric Railways in Competition for Safety Award.

Eight hundred electric railways in the United States have entered the competition conducted by the American Museum of Safety and accepted the conditions of the award of the Anthony N. Brady memorial medals for the company doing the greatest work to insure safety. The battle for safety will be conducted along 42,000 miles of electric railway on which many fatalities and injuries occur every year.

The American Museum of Safety says in its latest bulletin:

"Statistics show that almost 50 per cent. of street railway accidents are due to carelessness of the public, so the co-operation of the public is absolutely necessary in our work."

As a stimulus for the railways to do their part the heirs of Anthony N. Brady founded the gold medal. It is awarded annually by the Museum to the electric railway which has done the most to conserve the safety and health of employes and the public. In addition to the gold medal there is a replica in silver to be awarded to a member of the operating staff and a bronze replica for an employe. The competition closes Oct. 1.

NATION'S FOOD LAWS IN 'STATE OF CHAOS'

C. T. Terry of Columbia Urges Need of Uniformity as Aid to All Concerned.

OTHER STATUTES VARY, TOO

Commission Laboring to Establish Common Standard to Meet in Salt Lake City.

"The food laws of our country are in a state of chaos," said Charles Thaddeus Terry of the Columbia University Law School yesterday in discussing the urgent need for uniformity in many important State regulations.

"Why, for instance, should there be one standard of purity for a certain food product in New York and another in California?" he asked. "Yet these differences prevail to such an alarming extent that many brands of food which are legally pure in one State are barred from public sale in another. An example occurs in the use of horse flesh for food. I have never heard of anything absolutely harmful in good horse meat, but in New York its sale is absolutely prohibited while, just across the river, in New Jersey, it is legal to sell horse meat, provided it is labelled as such. Irrespective of the merits of horse flesh, New Jersey's attitude seems to be the correct one, as everything saleable for food should be correctly labelled, and severe penalties should be imposed for all rank substitutions and adulterations.

"Of value, equal to the purity of food is the proper weight and quantity. It is an axiom of common sense that there should be a uniform weights and measures act. A pound ought to be a real pound all over the country and a bushel ought to have a definite standard in every State. But there is no equality in any of these things. Bushels of all sorts of products vary in pound weights. One State insists that a legal bushel of salt shall contain eighty pounds, while as low as fifty pounds satisfies the Legislature of another State whether it be the consumers or not.

"There should be a recognized standard in these essentials which would be right to the private individual, right to the manufacturer and as right in an eastern State as in the far West.

For Uniform Auto Laws.

"In addition to the conflicting food regulations, there are many other important matters affecting inter-State commercial relations which require greater uniformity. One of these is automobile legislation, and in conection with the many efforts toward reasonable State uniformity, it has been noted that a special commission appointed in New Jersey to study the motor law difficulties will be presented at a conference of the House of Governors in Boston this month.

"The oldest organization in this country, which was formed twenty-five years ago for the purpose of bringing the more important State laws into greater harmony, is the Commission on Uniform State Laws, and its annual conference will be convoked on Aug. 10 in Salt Lake City and immediately following it will come the annual meeting of the American Bar Association.

"The Uniform State Laws Commission is an official body, recognized by the Governors of all the States, and its members, usually three Commissioners from each State, are appointed by the Governors. All of the forty-eight States are represented by delegates, in addition to Hawaii, the Philippines, and Porto Rico. The commission has been particularly successful in harmonizing many divergent commercial laws, and among its uniform acts which have been adopted are the negotiable instruments act in forty-seven States, warehouse receipts in thirty-one States, bills of lading in twelve States, sales act in eleven States, stock transfer in nine States, and the family desertion act in eight States.

"The Commissioners also have devoted considerable attention to pure food acts and State automobile legislation.

"As showing the immense popular interest in everything pertaining to the purity of foods," explained Mr. Terry, who is President of the National Commission on Uniform State Laws, "let me cite the history of the uniform cold storage act which was adopted at the conference last year in Washington, D. C. It was accomplished in two years. Never before had a uniform act submitted to the Commissioners stood the test of debate from the official representatives of forty-eight States, undergoing frequent amendments, until reaching its perfected form, short of four years, and many of the Commissioners' acts have taken from five to seven years to meet with unanimous approval.

No Power to Enforce.

"In our cold storage act we drew upon the experience and information of every one who knew anything worth while about cold storage. After this amount of labor by the Commissioners in examining the different State regulations and getting the views of manufacturers and the heads of large cold storage plants, resulting in an act acceptable to all, it may be said that the work of uniformity had just begun, for the National Commission has no power to enforce it. It can only suggest, and the acceptance of its acts then rests with the Legislature of the various States."

The cold storage act, as adopted by the Commissioners a year ago, already has been introduced into the Legislatures of several States, and it will come before several additional States the coming year.

The work of the national commission for uniformity in State regulations in respect to purity of food products has been supplemented ably by many other large trade organizations working for the same end, notably the American Specialty Manufacturers' association and the National Food and Trades Conference.

"Through the efforts of these associations," said Charles Wesley Dunn of this city, who has acted as counsel to these and other trade bodies with similar views, "a uniform State narcotic law has been drafted and work is now progressing on a uniform drug and sanitation law. Colorado has already adopted the narcotic law and it has been presented to the Legislatures of other States.

"There is probably nothing else which directly affects so many people as this much-discussed subject of pure foods and drugs. The Western States are taking the matter up very energetically, and some of the laws recently passed in Indiana, Illinois, Kansas, California, North Dakota, Idaho, and Michigan are clear indications of the trend toward justice and uniformity in all parts of the country."

POSTWOMEN IN ENGLAND.

Men's Occupations Are Found Less Monotonous Than Others.

"If you are living in the provincial part of England, or in the suburbs of the big cities, your postman will be a woman," says an American woman just returned to this country, "and they are beginning to be found in parts of London. Many postmen have joined the army, and there is now a Post Office rule forbidding the engagement of men of enlistment age. It is difficult to get suitable men among other classes, so the women have been called in.

"They do not wear a uniform yet, but have an official badge, which is worn on the arm. They have proved efficient and other postmen who wish to enlist will do so as soon as their places can be filled with women.

"Women are not to be employed in Central London or in the residential districts, but there are twenty-one at Eltham and six at East Ham. The women at Eltham took the places of men who were drafted to Woolwich, where they were needed greatly and where the conditions were not suitable for the women.

"This is one of the many changes, and it is being seriously felt in the homes. A young woman would much rather take tickets at a big terminus or run an elevator than slave under a severe forewoman in a dressmaking or tailoring shop, or do domestic service. She finds men's work less monotonous than women's.

"Even the famous English charwoman, that humble, overworked and underpaid domestic, is beginning to assert her independence, and the laundry woman sends home the clothes when she pleases.

"The men's trade unions are seeing to it, for their own welfare, that the women entering their trades are getting the same scale of wages, and with the increased employment among the unemployed and the better wages the war in some ways has brought prosperity. Among others the small shopkeepers of England are flourishing."

TO FEED DEER IN WINTER.

State Game Protectors Will Scatter Hay on Top of the Snow.

Hundreds of deer that otherwise would starve during the critical period of Winter, when forage is scarce, will be fed by the State in accordance with instructions recently issued by Llewellyn Legge, Chief of the Division of Fisheries and Game of New York. In remote sections of the Adirondacks, where it is impossible to take in baled alfalfa, marsh hay will be cut and stacked for the wild animals, forced to congregate in "yards" when the snow plies deepest. Alfalfa will be provided for them in more accessible places.

Deer will not eat marsh hay unless it is salted, so salt will be sprinkled through the stacks, and the stacks then will be inclosed with high crib poles to keep the deer out until feeding time. In the late Winter the game protectors will go on snowshoes and scatter the hay, a little at a time, along the runways of the "yards." Some of it also will be stuffed into small evergreen trees to prevent it being covered by fresh snowfall. In other sections of the State, outside the Adirondacks, alfalfa will be fed to the deer if it becomes necessary. The generosity of farmers in many settled regions heretofore has made possible the existence in Winter of deer for which hay was provided in starvation time.

Deer hunting is noticeably poorer after every hard season, while correspondingly it is improved after every open season. The loss is due chiefly to starvation. Chief Legge believes the mortality among deer will be checked by a little food judiciously distributed. This feeding is made possible because there is a balance in the funds for the maintenance of the State game farms.

LOCAL PRIDE IN RAILROAD.

Burlington Seeks to Employ Men Who Live Along the Line.

Employes of the Burlington Railroad hereafter will be recruited from persons living along the lines of the system if the heads of the different departments of the company are able to conduct successfully a plan which has just been suggested by Hale Holden, President of the Burlington.

He believes employes obtained from farms and towns through which the railroad runs are better acquainted with the road, and would have a natural pride in the road. Mr. Holden also considers the road obligated to the people of the country through which it operates, and he reasons, furthermore, that there is more likelihood of permanence of employment when employes' homes are near the lines.

"Railroad service today has enlisted a high class of employes, and the class is continually improving," says Mr. Holden. "I see no reason why the best of our young men should not figure on transportation as a life work the same as they do on any one of the other business professions. Many of our leading universities now maintain schools of transportation, and from these must come many of the future railroad executives. The trained brain is needed in railroad work as much as it is in any other line, probably more so."

Gustav Stickley's
BIG FURNITURE SALE

On June 23d we announced a reorganization sale of CRAFTSMAN FURNITURE for July and August. At that time we had several discontinued pieces. The PUBLIC, knowing the greater value of CRAFTSMAN FURNITURE over the imitation, called Mission, handled by department stores, purchased the greater part of this stock, and it was necessary for us to have our factory make large shipments of new furniture to carry out this sale as we advertised it.

Why buy COUNTERFEIT FURNITURE when CRAFTSMAN doesn't COST more than its IMITATIONS.

CRAFTSMAN FURNITURE should not be confused with Mission, which is a CRUDE IMITATION.

See the furniture that bears the name GUSTAV STICKLEY, THE CRAFTSMAN, before you buy, and then you will wonder why you wasted your time EVEN thinking of Mission.

Remember you can buy it here during August at ONE QUARTER to ONE HALF below regular prices.

BROADWAY SUBWAY TO BE LONG DELAYED

Colonel T. S. Williams of B. R. T. Sees No Chance of Opening It Jan. 1, 1917.

WANTS PARTIAL OPERATION

Using of Downtown Section at First Independently of Queens Connection Suggested.

There is no chance of placing the new extensions of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company on an operating basis by Jan. 1, 1917, as contemplated in the contracts, according to Colonel T. S. Williams, President of the company. In the annual report of the company, which has been submitted to the stockholders, Colonel Williams states that probably not less than $20,000,000 of the city's investment in the Broadway subway line will remain idle for a long time. The cause assigned is delay in letting contracts for certain sections.

When the Broadway subway is ready for operation a peculiar problem in engineering will be met. The main line running up Seventh Avenue to Fifty-ninth Street will be ready before the connections with Brooklyn and Queens will be ready. It might be practical, therefore, to run trains under Broadway and collect as many fares as possible prior to the completion of the entire system.

The objection to such a plan, according to Colonel Williams, is that it will be impossible to get equipment into the Broadway subway unless one of the ends connecting with the new line is completed. The contract for the tunnel under the East River runs to Jan. 16, 1918, and so there is no chance of getting a connection from that end. There will also be a long delay in building the connection to Queens from Fifty-ninth Street, Manhattan, according to Colonel Williams, the Board of Estimate recently having decided to make the connection by tunnel rather than over the Queensboro Bridge. He considers this connection is also out of the question if the Broadway subway is to be placed in operation in 1917.

Colonel Williams suggests that the only hope of getting even a partial operation of the Broadway subway is by the speedy completion of the connection on Canal Street with the Manhattan Bridge. The contractor for this section has until March 16, 1917, to complete his work. Colonel Williams continues:

"If this short section could be completed in advance of the time stipulated in the contract, that portion of the Broadway line between lower Manhattan and probably Thirty-fourth Street could be placed in operation shortly after Jan. 1, 1917.

"This entire situation involves serious consequences, both to the city and to the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, other than the substantial increase of costs which delay always occasions. The expectation of both parties to the contracts was that the new system would be self-supporting in a comparatively short time and that the city, in addition to receipts of one-half of the divisible profits, would have added to its borrowing capacity upward of $100,000,000.

"That expectation was based upon the assumption that all the enlarged system would be placed in operation on or before Jan. 1, 1917, whereas it looks now as if only the less profitable, or the unprofitable, new lines would then be in operation, and that the returns from the profitable lines would be indefinitely delayed.

In the present financial condition of the city this result will mean not only that the city's credit will in the intervening period be subject to the debt limit to permit of expenditures for other municipal improvements, but that the taxpayers will be called upon for a longer period to make up more substantial deficits than were originally contemplated, and this at a time when taxes are a particularly heavy burden.

"In the case of the company, while it is assured of its preferentials if earned, it must charge against earnings its new investments as put into operations, and if this investment is represented, as it will be very largely for the first few years, by construction and equipment work on lines which are the least hopeful as money-earners, its net income will diminish."

A synopsis shows that work on the new extensions contracted for is progressing rapidly. Four tracks in the Centre Street loop are completed. The four-track Sea Beach Line is under operation. Two tracks of the Fourth Avenue Subway between Chambers Street and Sixty-fifth Street are under operation. All of the Liberty Avenue elevated extension is completed, except the stations. Work on the Broadway Subway is underway on a big scale from Trinity Place to Twenty-sixth Street. Altogether $30,010,859 has been spent on construction work in behalf of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company. The contracts with the city call for the expenditure of upward of $100,000,000.

WANTS STREETS FLUSHED.

Citizens' Traffic Committee Opposes Private Sprinkling Contracts.

At a meeting of the Citizens' Street Traffic Committee yesterday at the Automobile Club of America, the question of street sprinkling in its relation to safety and efficiency was discussed. John T. Fetherston, Street Cleaning Commissioner, was a guest, and expressed himself as against the present method of sprinkling streets by private contractors. He said that there were two contractors who sprinkled with eighteen carts about 730,000 square yards out of the city's total of 9,500,000 square yards of pavement, at the expense of property owners on certain streets.

To substitute an adequate system for this method, which was not an efficient cleansing medium, the Commissioner said, the city should give an additional appropriationof about $30,000 annually to the Street Cleaning Department to defray the cost of additional gangs of hosemen and apparatus for flushing the streets at night. He said that in the model district which the department was establishing to show what might be done with the entire city there would be no street sprinkling in the accepted sense, but "heavy" cleaning with heavy motor machines using water and brushes and operated at night, in addition to the ordinary work of removing litter in the daytime.

A resolution was passed at the meeting which was presided over by Robert Grier Cooke, advocating the refusal of the Department of Street Cleaning to reissue permits to private sprinkling concerns. The principal objection to sprinkling voiced by the committee was on the ground of slipping and skidding of vehicles, causing accidents.

SON'S MIND WEAK, SAYS COE

Agrees to Care for Young Man Who Unlocked Railroad Switches.

YONKERS, N. Y., Aug. 3.—Fordyce Coe, son of Dr. Henry C. Coe of 8 West Seventy-sixth Street, New York, who has a country home in Lawrence Park, Bronxville, was discharged this morning by Acting City Judge Madden under a suspended sentence on the charge of unlocking switches and stealing signal lights along the New York Central Railroad between Van Cortland station and Bryn Mawr Park. Coe's father and mother appeared in court and agreed to look after him.

Dr. Coe said that his son, who is 25 years of age and a brother of Henry Clark Coe, who left his wife and child and went to Alaska, where he was found after a long search, had shown signs of not being quite normal mentally.

"I was full of gin rickies and Scotch highballs," was the explanation offered by Coe when arraigned yesterday afternoon. He pleaded guilty to petit larceny for stealing the signal lights.

The father said that since Fordyce was a small boy he had manifested a fondness for studying locks.

Actually Doubles the Life of Your Tires

Every car on which it has been used has secured twice as much mileage from its tires than when equipped with the ordinary dry lining, hand or foot operated brake.

Oiled braking surfaces give positive smoothness of action, and the momentum of the car is dissipated through the resistance of a film of oil and not between a section of the tire tread and roadbed—thus saving the tires a world of wear.

HANDY CONTROLLER

Has an unlimited range of flexibility and a perfectly equalized braking action. Is practically immune from wear.

Can be attached to any car equipped with storage batteries. Sold like all Hartford Equipment with this guarantee—satisfaction or money back.

Let us send you interesting literature which enumerates the many advantages of this wonderful brake. Mention make, year and model of your car. See a demonstration at our Broadway Branch.

SKELETON A HOODOO TO BRONX PHYSICIAN

Servant, Shunning "Bones of a Poor Human," Won't Dust Operating Room.

HOLDS A MOCK INTERMENT

Doctor, with Girl, Buries an Empty Box—Now Police Investigate "Mystery."

There is one family doctor in the Bronx who is having trouble with his wife, troubles with the servant, and trouble with the police. Further, those of his patients who have heard of his vicissitudes are troubling him by poking fun at him.

"It all started when our regular maid had to go and visit her sick mother," he said yesterday. "My wife went forth and brought home a substitute. This girl was young, very religious, and the greenest person that ever escaped from the rural districts.

"My wife took pains to train her, however, and after a few days she was not so bad. Things looked as though they would be all right until I noticed one morning that my operating room had not been dusted or even cleaned. I protested and my wife spoke to Maggie and then came back to me in despair. It seems that the girl would not go into the operating room or study because there were the bones and skull of a poor dead human lying about. I spoke to her about it, and she was very positive that she would not, 'no, never,' go into the rooms where the bones were.

"Domestic affairs were at a deadlock until I thought of fooling Maggie. I told her that I would bury the bones, and I got a small packing case and made a great to do about nailing it up. I put the bones into a cabinet, but I told Maggie that they were in the box. Then on Sunday morning last week I made Maggie get me the spade and went out into the back garden and buried the box. She saw me do it and was much relieved and that night my operating room and study were as clean as a whistle.

"I thought the family troubles were over, but mine were really beginning. Seven days later a policeman called at breakfast time and wanted to know what I had buried in the yard. I asked him what business it was of his, and he told me that he had seen our maid in the very early morning, on her knees praying beside a pile of newly turned earth.

"Then I told him about the bones, and while he seemed partly incredulous, he went away. But the following morning, along came another policeman, who also demanded to know what he had seen our maid praying over. I got rid of him, but a third arrived this morning, and I had to go over it all again.

"Now, see the position I'm in. If I remove the box, our faithful Maggie will think those 'poor bones' are being abused and leave us. If I don't, I will end in the police station. My wife is peeved over it all, and I don't know where I get off."

JEWS SHUN THE HYPHEN.

Will Do Nothing That Subordinates American Citizenship.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 3.—The Executive Committee of the International Order of B'nai B'rith today declared its gratitude to President Wilson for what he has done to aid millions of Jews in Russia.

If a national congress of Jews can be created along lines that will not render its members subject to stigma as hyphenated citizens, the committee expressed itself in favor of the federation proposed by Louis Brandeis of Boston. The members are firmly opposed to any step that might make it appear that members of the race have lost sight of the fact that they are first of all American citizens.

A. B. Seelenfreund of Chicago said the Department of State has been asked to investigate charges that Russians, in the fighting around Warsaw, used Jewish women and children to shield their movements under German fire.

Members of the council attending the meeting include Adolph Kraus, A. B. Saelenfrond, and Philip Stein, Chicago; Jacob Furth, St. Louis; Charles Hartman, New York; Lee Solomon, San Francisco; Jacob Singer and Simon Wolf, Philadelphia, and E. M. Okalisch, Richmond, Va.

1,200 BOYS GET MEDALS.

Mayor Presents Them to Winners of July 4 Athletic Events.

Mayor Mitchel, at the City Hall yesterday, presented medals to 1,200 winners in the athletic games held in the city's safe and sane Fourth of July celebration this year. The Mayor told the boys and girls who won the medals that the new idea of celebrating the Fourth was an ideal one, as it developed the boys of the nation into a manhood that made them physically fit to answer a call to arms to defend the nation. S. S. McClure, editor of The Evening Mail, which donated the medals, made a short speech. George Gordon Battle, who is President of the Playgrounds Committee, also made a short address.

CARRY VOTE PLEA ACROSS CONTINENT

One Hundred Women in Autos to Make Pilgrimage from San Francisco to Washington.

PETITION FOR AMENDMENT

Hope to Influence Congress—Plans for Great Convention of Suffrage States.

An automobile pilgrimage across the country by 100 women will start from San Francisco next month for Washington, to take to Congress a petition signed by thousands asking that the Susan B. Anthony suffrage amendment be adopted this year.

Miss Alice Paul, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Woman's Congressional Union, was in New York at the uion headquarters, 13 East Forty-first Street, yesterday, stopping over for twenty-four hours to make the announcement of a great convention of the union to be held in San Francisco on Sept. 14, 15, and 16 to organize the women of the suffrage States to use their influence with Congress to accept the amendment. The work of organizing this convention is well under way, and women voters of all parties will come together and plan for a consolidated effort.

Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont is the National Chairman for the work, and Mrs. Phoebe Hearst local Chairman in San Francisco. Mrs. Hearst has given $1,000 toward the convention fund. The union has two headquarters in San Francisco and four organizers. The latter are Miss Doris Stevens of the union, Miss Iris Calderhead, daughter of the Kansas Congressman; Vivian Pierce of California, and Mrs. Jessie Hampton. At the headquarters at the Exposition grounds a reception is held daily in the interest of the convention, and three meeting a week. This headquarters proving insufficient, a second headquarters downtown was given by Rudolph Spreckels. Congressman and Mrs. William Kent opened the first headquarters for the union.

Prominent women of the Republican, Democratic, and Progressive Parties are working in the interest of the convention in the different suffrage States. Miss Margaret Roberts, Chairman of the Woman's Republican Committee of Idaho, is one of these suffrage State organizers; Mrs. Bertha Fowler of the Women's Political Union of Colorado, one of the most prominent Progressive women of the State, is another, and Mrs. William Kent of California, who supported President Wilson, is a third.

"The admission of so many women to citizenship," said Miss Paul, yesterday, "has changed the basis of representation in the country, and with the women working together regardless of party affiliations, they should have greater influence in Washington. To unite these women will be the work of the convention and from it the women will start on their great cross-country automobile tour."

The 100 women will be led by Miss Charlotte Anita Whitney, Chairman of the Woman's Congressional Union for California. The party will be three months on the way, reaching Washington on Dec. 6. They will have meetings as they go and will carry the big petition. Reaching Washington, the women will settle down to watch the progress of the suffrage movement and see what the men of their parties are doing.

Calls have been sent to 25,000 influential women of the suffrage States to attend the convention. Miss Anne Martin, President of the Nevada Woman's Civic League, has sixty of the most influential women of her State to go as delegates, and other States will be equally well represented. There will be many entertainments and receptions as a part o fthe convention. Mrs. Phoebe Hearst will give one of these, and Mrs. William Kent will open her house for another, and there is to be a pageant and a theatre meeting. The details of action to be taken will be considered by about 500 women, averaging fifty accredited delegates from each of the suffrage States.

Miss Paul is making a rapid tour of the country telling of the work of the convention, making suggestions to members of the union, and others interested, in regard to methods of raising money to pay the expenses of the convention. She was in Connecticut and Massachusetts on Monday and will be in Detroit this morning and in Kalamazoo in the afternoon. She will talk with leaders in Chicago, plans to get to St. Paul Friday morning and to Minneapolis in the afternoon. Then she goes on to California, to Portland, Ore., to a Colorado convention of the union on the 16th and 17th of this month, to Utah for another union convention, Aug. 19 and 20, and will finally get back to San Francisco in time for the convention.

BET ON ZEBRAS'S STRIPES.

Zoo Keeper Convinced Colts Are Born Without Them.

Does a baby zebra have stripes? That is the question that is worrying Bill Snyder, head keeper of the Zoo in Central Park, and his assistants. They are all looking forward to an interesting event in the zebra family, and as Bill says, a zebra has never before been born in captivity, so just how a newly born zebra looks is a matter for much speculation.

Bob Hurton, Bill's assistant, has been making inquiries of the animal experts in the Zoological Society, but all seem to agree, he said, that a hunter had never been able to approach sufficiently close to zebras of tender age to determine whether they are striped or not. Hurton read somewhere in a nature book that on young zebras stripes run around their body instead of up and down.

Bill Snyder warmly controverts this view. He believes the expected arrival will be without stripes. When Kitty came to the Zoo, Snyder said, she was two years old, and her stripes were then very faint. On that account he is willing to bet the new zebra will arrive stripeless.

"This," said Bill, "would be a great misfortune, for a stripeless zebra, even though a baby, would not be so much an attraction as one with stripes. If the newcomer gets here without stripes it also leaves us open to the charge of deception. Can you imagine any small boy or girl believing that a zebra can get away from stripes any more than a leopard can change its spots? No, sir, to satisfy the little folks I think we will have to paint stripes on the zebra if my theory is correct."

DISCONTINUE SIX CLINICS.

Health Department Says Children Will Be Treated Elsewhere.

Because of the lack of appropriation in next year's budget it was announced yesterday by the Health Department the six children's clinics in the city where diseases of the eyes, nose, teeth, and throat were treated will be discontinued in the future. Children affected with nose and throat troubles will be treated in hospitals, while eye troubles and dental work will be taken care of in the public schools, where clinics have been established.

The clinics were established by the Health Department because of the lack of proper facilities, but in so doing it was said the department went outside of its scope, its labors being confined to educational and preventive work rather than corrective. Now that adequate facilities have been placed in the hospitals and schools, with physicians and trained nurses, the appropriation was not asked for.

CITY BREVITIES.

An unidentified man was killed yesterday morning by a Third Avenue surface car at Seventy-fourth Street. He was removed in an ambulance to the Flower Hospital, where he died of a fractured skull.

Henry Danziger, the musical director, yesterday obtained a writ of mandamus from Supreme Court Justice Giegerich directing the Musical Mutual Protective Union to reinstate him or show cause why the union should not. He was dismissed for paying less than the union scale to musicians.

When a Broadway car stopped just ahead of him at Seventy-first Street and Broadway at 6:30 o'clock last evening, Motorman James Cooney of an Amsterdam Avenue car put on his brakes, but the wheels skidded and his car ran into the Broadway car. Miss Sarah Unterberg of 81 Northern Avenue was so badly frightened that Dr. Sechtle took her to Polyclinic Hospital with a case of "nerves."

CONEY AUTOBUSES RECKLESS, HE SAYS

A. A. Nelson Charges That Speeding Sightseeing Car Ran Down His Machine.

URGES BETTER REGULATION

Threatens to Sue the Operating Company, but the Latter Asserts He Was to Blame.

A complaint of reckless driving by the chauffeur of a sightseeing car was made yesterday at the Automobile Bureau of the Secretary of State, 227 West Seventy-fourth Street, by A. A. Nelson, an advertising manager who lives at 345 West Seventieth Street. He intended, he said, to enlist the co-operation of the Automobile Club of America in an effort to stop the reckless speeding of sightseeing cars, whose drivers seek to crowd on speed to make as many passenger-carrying trips each day to and from Coney Island as possible.

A preliminary investigation of the complaint showed, it was said at the Automobile Bureau, that the sightseeing car against which the complaint was brought belonged to the Greeley Sightseeing System, 511 West Thirty-fifth Street. Further inquiry by Investigator Ryan disclosed the fact that while the name of the chauffeur of the car was given as Joseph Sieri he was operating under a license in the name of Joseph Bounelli. It was explained by his employers that the latter was the driver's right name and Sieri a nickname, an explanation which the officials thought made the driver no less subject to a misdemeanor charge for an offense against the automobile laws of the State.

Mr. Nelson, his wife, and his two young daughters were driving in Fourth Avenue, Brooklyn, on Sunday afternoon. Mr. Nelson said that at Fourth and Atlantic Avenues they had a narrow escape from injury when the sightseeing car ran into his car. Just north of Atlantic Avenue there is an obstruction formed by sewer work. Mr. Nelson said he stopped his car north of the corner and close to the left side of the obstruction and stood still, waiting for the traffic to open up before he continued.

"I intended to turn west into Atlantic Avenue," he said, "when the big sightseeing car shot around the corner. Instead of making the wide out turn as prescribed by law, the chauffeur brought his car around short and it crashed into my car and badly damaged it. The chauffeur stopped, got down from his seat and after seeing that none of us was injured climbed back again and continued on his way.

"The driver did not volunteer his name or the name of the concern operating the car. He made off, but so fast that I did not have time to make a note of his number. I believe the sightseeing car was going twenty-five miles an hour when it came around the corner."

The escape of his family, Mr. Nelson thinks, was little less than miraculous. He intends, he says, to begin a civil suit against the company and to take action against the chauffeur. Many automobilists, he asserts, have found reason to complain about the reckless way in which some sightseeing cars are operated. He believes they are a menace to public safety and it is time that some one or some organization took action to correct the evil.

President James Allegra of the Greeley Sightseeing System had another story to tell of the happenings on Sunday night. The truth of the matter was, he said, that Mr. Nelson had attempted to cut in ahead of the sightseeing car and had collided with it. The nature of the damage to Mr. Nelson's car would, he thought, prove that fact to one who knew automobiles.

"Reckless drivers are not employed by this company," he said. "The recklessness is sometimes with the other fellow. There ought to be some sort of a law to prevent the owner of every flivver from running his car until he knows how. Inexperienced car owners are the cause of more accidents in this city than the experienced chauffeur. The part of Mr. Nelson's story that there was a collision is true, but it is not true that our car was going in excess of the speed limit or that it collided with his car."

Ban Auto Horns Near Churches.

RED BANK, N. J., Aug. 3.—Hereafter any autoist who toots his horn within 500 feet of any of the local churches during Sunday morning services will be arrested. The clergymen of the local churches have repeatedly complained to the members of Council that the continued and loud tooting of automobile horns have greatly disturbed worshippers. Today the Borough Council voted to instruct the police to make arrests.

COURT SEES LIMITS OF EX-WIFE'S RIGHTS

Doubts if Father Should Support Daughter After Making Divorce Settlement.

WON'T SEND UKERS TO JAIL

Girl of 16 Tells of Godfather's Kindness and Her Fear of Hunger.

Justice Giegerich in the Supreme Court yesterday said he was in doubt whether it was not going too far for the courts to hold that a father was legally bound to support his 16-year-old daughter, even though the father had made provision for the child by agreement with her mother who had obtained a divorce.

The question was presented in an application for a certificate of reasonable doubt by William H. Ukers, editor and owner of The Coffee and Tea Trade Journal, 70 Wall Street. Ukers was directed some time ago by Magistrate Harris in the Domestic Relations Court to pay $12 a week for the support of Helen Winsome Ukers, the 16-year-old daughter, or go to jail for six months.

Ukers then appealed to the Court of General Sessions, which affirmed the ruling of the Magistrate, except to reduce the allowance to $10 a week. Further appeal by Ukers brought the case before Justice Giegerich, who yesterday sustained the application for the certificate which will keep Ukers out of jail pending the review of the case in a higher court.

The record showed that Ukers claimed to have settled $2,500 upon his first wife when she divorced him in 1910 and that she then gave him a general release. Then, in March this year, the mother, having spent the $2,500, started proceedings for the support of the daughter.

The record shows Ukers is willing to support the daughter at his home, but he refuses to pay anything more to his former wife.

The mother testified that she lives at 140 Claremont Avenue, with her cousin, who furnished her with a free room. Mrs. Ukers says she has earned $35 in sixty days writing scenarios. Her daughter, she says, has been attending Public School 64, and has never worked, although she has tried to get employment posing for the movies.

The record shows, too, that the daughter has been cared for by Robert S. Winsmore of 126 West Eighty-sixth Street, her wealthy godfather, who sent her to private schools until the mother through habeas corpus proceedings regained custody of the girl.

Mr. Winsmore testified that his interest in the girl was "entirely brotherly," and that she begged him not to tell her mother where she was at school. He testified further that he "induced" the girl to return to her mother.

Miss Ukers testified that she needed clothing and food, and that there was ever present the possibility "of no place to sleep or to eat."

The girl says her father did furnish her clothing, but that he kept all her personal effects which had been given to her by "Uncle Bobbie," who is Mr. Winsmore. She said further: "Uncle Bobbie's always been more to me than my father."

Ukers says he owns 498 of the 500 shares of the stock of his paper, and that one share is owned by his present wife, Mrs. H. de Graff Ukers, whom he married in 1912, and who is the Treasurer of the paper. He says that he owes $2,000, and that his salary has dropped from $100 a week before the war to $50.

MRS. BECKER TO BE SILENT.

Probably Will Go Away to a Quiet Place to Take a Rest.

At her home at 2,291 University Avenue, the Bronx, yesterday, Mrs. Helen Becker, the widow of Charles Becker, former Police Lieutenant, said:

"I don't know where the newspapers got the idea that I was to make a statement after the funeral of my husband. I have not now or at any future time any statement for the press. I never told any one that I intended making such a statement."

Mrs. Becker said sheh ad no plans for the future but would in all probability go away to some quiet place for a rest.

The Board of Education announced, through President Churchill yesterday that no action wiuld be taken against Mrs. Becker in view of her distracted condition when she lost her fight to save her husband's life.

THE BRITISH POSITION.

The interest and the importance of the questions now pending between ourselves and Great Britain over the interruption of our trade with neutral countries within the British blockade line, and for ourselves, as the complaining nation, the difficulty of establishing beyond challenge the right, the justice, and the legality of our position, arise from the fact that prize court law in the two countries is substantially identical. The decisions of the high courts in each country have repeatedly been quoted in the other as of controlling authority. It is not surprising, therefore, that Sir EDWARD GREY in replying to our note of March 30 repeatedly invites us to consider the decisions of our own courts, particularly the decisions rendered in cases growing out of our blockade of the Confederate States. Sir EDWARD sets up no new principles of law, he is perfectly content to accept the standard prescribed in our note that the British practices shall be tested by their "conformity to the spirit and principles "of the essence of the rules of war." He does cite the "shocking violation of the rules of civilized warfare" of which Germany has been guilty as a reason why there should be some adaptation of the old principles of blockade to the peculiar circumstances with which we are confronted. It is manifest that this argument cannot be pushed very far, even if it be resorted to at all, for it cannot be forgotten that Germany has put forward the invention of the submarine as invalidating old and hitherto universally recognized principles of law.

The British position as set forth in the notes is a defense of the belligerent's right to inclose his enemy in a blockade which shall cut off all his sea-borne imports and exports; and Sir EDWARD is unable to admit that a belligerent violates any fundamental principle of international law by applying a blockade in such a way as to cut off the enemy's commerce with foreign countries through neutral ports if the circumstances make such an application of the principles of blockade the only means of rendering it effective. Our own position as stated in the note of March 30 is that "innocent "shipments may be freely transported "to and from the United States "through belligerent territory without "being subject to the penalties of con"traband traffic or breach of block"ade." To this Sir EDWARD replies that acceptance of such a doctrine would render the present blockade nugatory, because by reason of Germany's vast inland system of transportation by rail and canal she is able to receive and distribute commodities reaching her through neutral countries in such volume that if these avenues are not closed the blockade might as well be abandoned. He points to the very large shipments from this country to neutral ports within the blockade as evidence that something more than a supply of the local market is intended. He cites, as was to be expected, the Springbok case.

It can hardly be denied that we in effect established a distant blockade about the British port of Nassau, for the Springbok was seized 150 miles east of that destination. It being discovered that she had a great quantity of concealed contraband on board, the Supreme Court held that the cargo "contraband or not could not be con"demned if really destined for Nassau "and not beyond, and contraband or "not must be condemned if destined "to any rebel port, for all rebel ports "were under blockade." The condemnation of that cargo was unanimously sustained by the Claims Commission. In the Matamoros cases, also cited by Sir EDWARD, our court held that, although Matamoros was a neutral Mexican port, even with unrestricted inland commerce between that port and enemy territory commerce with it was not unlawful, yet the court sustained the condemnation of contraband goods destined to Matamoros since it was evident that the goods were not really intended for the Matamoros market, their real destination being territory within the rebel lines.

There is possibly a misunderstanding in the British Foreign Office of the true extent and express limit of our assertion of right. In our note we said that "innocent shipments may be freely transported to and from our ports through neutral countries to belligerent territory." There is here no assertion of the right of trade in contraband through neutral countries adjacent to Germany. Sir EDWARD's note of July 23 seems not to make that distinction; it reads as though he were replying to an argument that we have the right to unrestricted trade in all commodities, contraband or not.

To our note of July 14 instructing our Ambassador PAGE to notify the British Government that we should not "recognize the validity of prize court proceedings taken under restraints imposed by British municipal law in derogation of the rights of American citizens under international law." Sir EDWARD sends a reply that is at once interesting, skillful, and amicable. He informs us that while British prize courts are guided in their decisions not only by international but by municipal law as laid down in Orders in Council it is a theory so well established that exceptions to it are practically inconceivable that Orders in Council must and do conform to international law; and here again he is able to refer to adjudications in our courts sustaining the view that the principles governing prize courts in both countries are identical. Furthermore, he holds that it is conceivable that prize tribunals of Great Britain, holding the law of nations in reverence, might feel called upon to disregard and refuse obedience to Orders in conflict therewith. But should we feel our rights to be infringed by British prize court decisions he offers the suggestion that it would be open to us to appeal.

As to the detention of the cargo of the American steamship Neches, sailing from Rotterdam with a cargo originating chiefly in Belgium, now in German control, Sir EDWARD holds that the principles of right and of law laid down in his note of July 23 are fully applicable. Inasmuch as Germany has assumed the right to sink neutral as well as British merchant ships of whatever destination, carrying cargo of whatever origin through the waters traversed by the Neches, his Majesty's Government holds that it is not reasonable that it should be called upon to allow goods from Germany to pass freely through those waters, now effectively patrolled by British men-of-war; but it will "examine the facts in "a spirit of consideration for the in"terest of neutrals," to the end that justice may be done.

The least attentive reader of the British notes made public this morning will observe the marked difference between their tone and spirit and the tone and spirit of the German replies to our protest against the war zone declaration, and in particular to our notes delivered in Berlin since the destruction of the Lusitania. The British Government declares its intention to enforce its blockade as a war measure against Germany with the fullest possible consideration of the interest of neutrals, and there are no attempts to dictate to us impossible and unacceptable methods of avoiding present inconveniences. Our differences with Great Britain are, as we have pointed out, of a justiciable nature. A failure to adjust them by diplomatic correspondence would involve no more serious consequences than those arising from any disagreement which it might be found necessary to refer to an arbitral tribunal.

Our trade has suffered from the British blockade as our trade and our citizens have suffered from German operations within the so-called war zone. While the protests we have made against British blockade practices have been grounded in right and justice, as we understand the principles involved, unfortunately the private vociferation which supports them has been somewhat augmented by outcries proceeding not so much from the sense of injury to our trade as from a visible desire to stir up trouble with Great Britain as an adjunct to pro-German operations in this country. This is notably the case with regard to interference with cotton exports, a fact of which influential newspapers in the South have not failed to take due notice. The Government at Washington will be alert to safeguard our interests whether interfered with by Germany or by England, but neither the American Government nor the American people will ignore the fundamental differences between the two classes of questions. One class concerns our rights of trade under the established principles of law, the other the right of our citizens to travel upon seas without exposing themselves to peril of their lives through murderous practices which can have no defense in law.

THE NEW PROGRESSIVE MENACE.

From so much of Colonel ROOSEVELT's intentions as have been divulged it is apparent that the Republican standpatters are not to have the political joy-ride in 1916 that they expected. He wants to support a Republican if he can, but he sees a prospect that the Old Guard leaders, counting on an easy victory at the polls, are likely to name a leader or follower of the Old Guard on a standpat platform, and he does not intend to support such a candidate. If a nomination is made that he cannot support, he will again arouse the Progressives and strive to defeat it at the polls. In order that he may have a following with which to force the Republicans into making a nomination he can support, the Progressive Party must be kept alive as the nucleus of a revolting army in 1916. It will not be needed if the Republicans are good, but its existence is necessary to make them good and to punish them if they refuse to be good.

So he declares his intention to enroll as a Progressive and to advise others to do so, while at the same time he has nothing harsh to say of those who do not take that advice. If the Republican Party is not drunk with a victory yet unwon, it will see that it is in a dangerous situation. Even if it makes a nomination ROOSEVELT can support, he cannot swing all the Progressives with him; if it makes one he cannot support, he will throw his arousing personality into the contest and make thousands of recalcitrants where there were only hundreds. President WILSON is stronger than his party, to begin with, and the Republicans are in no such position that they can afford to face a new revolt.

The assumptions they have based on the disappearance of the Progressive vote have all been to the effect that the Progressives would come back to the Republican Party when they left their own. It is not true—not with President WILSON in the field. There are many parts of the country, such as California and several of the Middle Western States, where the majority of the Progressives would certainly vote for WILSON as against a reactionary Republican, where a great number of them would vote for him as against any Republican at all. The Republicans a few months ago saw themselves marching triumphantly on an unvexed road to Washington, treading on roses. It is time for them to wake up.

Mr. ROOSEVELT's way of sandbagging the Republicans into being good is to begin with the primaries and solidify the anti-standpat strength behind some one candidate so that in the convention they can wield their strength effectively. The candidate he has picked for the purpose is Governor JOHNSON. From one point of view, it is the best choice that could be made, for the Californians are the most uncompromising of the Progressives, and the Republicans have learned that when they threaten a bolt they mean it. Undoubtedly neither Mr. ROOSEVELT nor Mr. JOHNSON has any expectation that the latter can be nominated, but the fighting qualities of JOHNSON and his Pacific Coast followers make it certain that if the Republicans insist on forcing a nomination of the kind MARK HANNA would have made they will know they are in a fight and will know that November holds no joy for them.

The confused political situation has begun to clear, and this new battle-line of the Progressives is the first definite thing about it. The era of happy prattle and the sprouting of Tom-Dick-and-Harry candidates in every State of the Union had better come to an end as soon as possible, and the Republicans must begin now to reckon seriously with the question how they are to defeat President WILSON and whether it can be done at all. They have been living in a fool's paradise and mining fairy gold long enough.

PAN-AMERICAN CO-OPERATION.

Co-operation of our Government with those of South and Central American States in a plan to restore order in Mexico, which we have been urging for many months, seems at last to be assured. The conference of Latin-American Ambassadors and Ministers with Secretary LANSING tomorrow will initiate a movement which should be prosecuted with vigor and not be permitted to decline into inactivity like the somewhat similar movement of 1914, when the obstinacy of CARRANZA proved a stumbling block. Since the deadlock in the negotiations at Niagara Falls neither one of the opposing revolutionary parties in Mexico has gained perceptible ascendency. There is not much to choose between them in the personal character of their leaders or the merit of their plans. Indeed, it is unlikely that either has in view any well-formed plan beyond complete domination of the distressed and impoverished republic, and that, obviously, is not within their reach. There are rumors that all the revolutionists except CARRANZA are now willing to listen to reason and co-operate with the United States in the effort to restore order, but we must not place too much confidence in those rumors. Promises of Mexican revolutionaries are generally writ in water. They should all be deprived of the means of making war, and, as they now depend exclusively on the United States for munitions, an embargo by the Washington Government on the shipment of arms will serve that purpose. There is reason to believe that the sale of arms has been conducted surreptitiously, to a great extent, by merchants in various Texas cities who are not supposed to deal in that kind of merchandise. If an embargo is placed on the sales this sort of underhand business may be persisted in unless our Government is watchful. It is likely that, while the work of restoring order is going on within the republic, our military guard on the border will be strengthened and warships will keep watch at the Mexican ports.

Armed intervention, however, will probably be avoided, though it may be necessary to employ American troops to convoy provisions to the destitute inhabitants of Mexico City. To use our troops in that way would not be an act of war, and would not be so regarded by intelligent Mexicans. That no warlike measures are contemplated is sufficiently proved by the invitation to the Latin-Americans to join with us. We could scarcely invite them to help us in making war on their neighbor. The invitation denotes a peaceful intention. But the co-operation can be made very effective if it is undertaken with mutual understanding. The aims of the revolutionists, so far as they are honest, can be realized by this means. There need be no fear that any attempt of the Mexican reactionaries to derive benefit from this plan of peaceful intervention will succeed. The Provisional Government installed by the help of all the American nations can begin immediately to carry out the ideas which were the basis of the Madero movement in 1910, ideas which the murdered President was never able to put in practical form. Now is the time to settle the Mexican question once and for all, and it cannot be settled by the re-establishment of such a Government as the genius of PORFIRIO DIAZ made effective for thirty years. The new Government may be as strong as necessary, but it must be firmly founded on justice and liberty.

By asking the aid of the Latin-American countries in this good work the Administration gives the best possible assurance that the United States is not seeking to extend its territory and that its feeling toward Mexico is entirely friendly. The new development of Pan-Americanism will receive a great impulse from this movement. The people of South and Central America will understand that we regard them not only as friends and neighbors, but as sharing with us the responsibility of maintaining a free America. It is an important step toward the formation of that union predicted by President WILSON in his speech on the Argentine battleship Moreno last Spring, "a union not of political ties but of "understanding and of mutual help"fulness."

ANOTHER SONG OF HATE.

The "Destruction of the Lusitania," the German music-hall song, a part of which, in translation, was printed in our news columns yesterday, gives another peep into German psychology. Immediately after the destruction of the Lusitania the German press talked of the "rich" Americans among her passengers, the seekers of sensation who had sought excitement and found it to their cost. To drown American citizens was not enough. To insult the dead was a pleasure of the standardized German mind. The day before yesterday the Cologne Gazette called these Americans, traveling for their business or pleasure and slaughtered by an unprecedented crime, "flippant." Apparently this is part of the official, and consequently of the German, way of looking at the noble victory over helpless men, women, and babies.

In their music halls the Germans now sing of the great steamer "sail"ing merrily along her criminal "course." The crime has been transferred. The ship, the voyage, the passengers were criminal. Along comes the submarine, the avenger, the punisher. The Lusitania "carried," the maker of the song tells us, "Americans, Englishmen, French"men, Greeks, and Dutchmen to the "dance of death." Evidently he is proud of so cosmopolitan a murder. "The torpedo hit true. Those who "were not suffocated were drowned. "VANDERBILT was among them. It is "a pity that Minister GREY was not "there."

What a chivalrous delicacy of feeling! We get some notion of the iniquity of the Lusitania's passengers when the poet deems the man most bitterly hated by Germany worthy to have gone down with the caitiff ship. Unfortunately we have only a summary of a passage in which the last refinements of Bildung go hand in hand with the latest conquests of Kultur. We hear the mermaids "complaining at being disturbed by "so many explosions and by vile "gases emitted by the American am"munition." After this fairyland of fancy we come to another enchanting picture: "So there the dead lay, most "of them with their paws burnt, "England's sons and their com"panions, Oh, how quiet they have "become!"

With such a strain the primeval hairy ancestors of ARMINIUS and WILLIAM II. may have made the Hercynian Forest howl, punctuating the savage chant with drinks of mead from the skulls of their enemies.

It may be said that it is unjust to dwell upon a mere music-hall song. But in the land of "Forbidden" nothing is permitted without authorization, and a music-hall "patriotic" song often expresses more accurately than more pretentious compositions the general sentiment of a people. Germany has had such an inheritance and possession of "culture" in the old sense, has produced so many lectures on aesthetics, that her temporarily coarsened taste, her diminished humanity, her Schrecklichkeit spread among her professors and pastors, servants of the State, as well as among her less cultivated classes, her ungenerous spirit toward enemies, toward even the dead of the Lusitania, puzzle many and shock most of us.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Policemen Honor a Murderer.

After the scandal of the Becker coffin plate comes the scandal of the Becker funeral—one far wider in its bearings and far more difficult to handle and end. The charge that the man twice convicted in the courts was murdered by the Governor who did not save him from the penalty imposed by law can easily enough be forgotten as the hysterical raving of a grief-distracted woman, and it was wisely held that no action except the removal and sequestration of the offensive legend was required. That several members of the police force should have paid to BECKER the public honor of acting as his pallbearers is quite another matter, however, and a much more serious one.

These policemen, by acting in this capacity, deliberately proclaimed sympathy with a former associate whose proved conduct had brought disgrace upon the organization to which they belong. By almost inevitable implication they protested against the punishment he received and denied the justice of the courts.

There is, of course, the alternative theory, that the policemen who figured so prominently at BECKER's funeral sincerely believed in his innocence, at least of the crime for which he was put to death. If they did so believe there might be a certain noble courage in manifesting their confidence, regardless of consequences to themselves, but men so inaccessible to argument and evidence, of judgment so obviously unsound, so obviously out of harmony with the institutions of which they were the specially sworn upholders and defenders, should not be deprived of the martyrdom they invite.

The Commissioner of Police could hardly have issued, before the murderer's funeral, an order forbidding members of the force to carry out the rumored intention of attending it, not as mourners for one who had been a friend—that could have been done in a way open to little if any criticism—but in bold defiance of the powers that brought him low. Such an order would have amounted to a conviction before the act—to an admission that some members of the police force could not be trusted to preserve its dignity or their own. That all of them cannot be so trusted has now been demonstrated, and plainly it is necessary to guard against a repetition of the scandalous spectacle presented at this funeral.

Friendship for Peace Illustrated.

To treat at all seriously anything done by the little group of men who call themselves "the Friends of Peace" is perhaps to play into their hands, since it seems to ascribe to them the importance and the representative capacity they claim with no known warrant. To risk it just for once, however, one may note that their very name is an absurdity, for they are the enthusiastic admirers and vociferous upholders of the most ruthless militarism the world has ever known, and what they mean by peace—the only peace for which they work—is the abstention by the United States from doing anything to interfere with or make more difficult the destruction by Germany of the nations now in arms against her.

Were there any thought or possibility of our joining or assisting the so-called Central Powers, every one of these "Friends of Peace" would become a vehement friend of war, here, as they all are of war in Europe. As even they realize that there is no chance of that, their energies are devoted to the establishment of such neutrality in the United States as would do by indirection for Germany a part of what alliance with her would do directly.

The latest, and a truly curious, manifestation of their naïve ingenuity is the attack they are making on Secretary LANSING. Of course they know as well as anybody else exactly to what degree he was responsible for the form and substance of the "note" that has so offended and alarmed them. A recent experience, however, has opened their eyes to the unpleasant and potentially perilous consequences of directing opprobrious epithet and offensive accusation against President WILSON, and they have resorted to the cautious expedient of striking at the principal over the subordinate's shoulders. They cannot really believe that Secretary LANSING is a usurper of power, a dark plotter issuing ultimatums on his own initiative, a reckless friend of the Allies, eager to bring upon his country the miseries of war. Yet it is for such crimes that, in pretense at least, they are preparing to ask his removal from office by Congress! That "Lansing" at the foot of a public document means "Wilson" they find it for the moment convenient to ignore.

Sorrowful Because Untempted.

Down in Mississippi there is an editor who is either a humorist or a cynic, for he says right out in his paper that while he has heard and read a lot about the use of British gold for the suborning of the American press, and making and keeping it anti-German, not a pound or even a penny of that gold has come within his reach, and he could use considerable quantities of it in his business.

However it may be as to his susceptibility to temptation, his freedom from it is shared all over the country and is everywhere a cause of joy or sorrow, as the case may be in each individual instance. Rumors about the use of British gold to influence newspaper opinion here seem to be confined exclusively to the one propagandist circle that has obviously been well supplied with money from another source. Perhaps the Mississippi man could tap that seemingly still unexhausted fount if he tried real hard, and so mitigate the confessed aridity of his business.

Before he does so, however, it would be well for him to reflect on the readiness shown by folk of a certain mentality to charge that anybody who disagrees with them does so because he has been bought. Apparently they cannot realize the possibility of disagreement for any other reason. Yet there may be a different explanation of their habit—the explanation that they ascribe to their neighbors a venality of which they are themselves the more or less clearly conscious exponents. Whoever knows that he wouldn't support any cause unless there was "something in it" for him gets a sort of justification for his own peculiarity by assuming it to be the common characteristic of humanity.

This is not to say, of course, that all or even much of German support in this country is a purchased commodity. It is probably far more often financed than bought, and no doubt most of it is quite sincere.

Ireland's Many Flags.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

When England succeeded in conquering Ireland history relates that the English found 168 Kings governing that unhappy island. I think my figures are correct, but if not, a few Kings more or less is of no importance. Probably each King had a flag of his own. How, then, can there be any national flag of Ireland? Discussion of the subject seems unprofitable. M. T. R.

BOHEMIA'S ASPIRATIONS.

The Czechs Will Demand Nationality When Europe Is Made Over.

New York, July 29, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Racial warfare between Slav and Teutons has been accepted as an obvious fact since the war between Russia and the two Teutonic Kaisers began, but few Americans realize how deep this racial hatred goes, and how Austria may, at any moment, be confronted by a revolt of her Slavic subjects. Geographically the most important of the Slav States belonging to the Austrian Empire is the Kingdom of Bohemia, and its Czech inhabitants are continually at loggerheads with their German neighbors.

To explain this antagonism it is necessary to go back to the period of the Reformation, which led to the Hussite wars. It was Jan Hus, the Rector of the University of Prague, (1392-1415,) who adopted the doctrine of John Wyclif. For two centuries the Czech peasants repelled successfully many invasions of the German and Hungarian papal armies, which ravaged Bohemia in the same way as their descendants have done in Belgium and Serbia. But the odds were too great. Half of Europe was in arms against Bohemia, and the martyrdom of its population began with the defeat of the Bohemians in the battle of the Bila Hora (White Mountains) in 1620.

Two-thirds of the population were either exterminated or driven abroad, and many emigrants settled in England, where they founded the Moravian Church. A part of these emigrants came to America and also founded a branch of the Moravian Church. Those who remained at home elected the ancestors of the present Austrian Emperor to the throne of Bohemia—a mistake for which they still have to pay dearly, because the Hapsburgs broke the contracts made with the Czech nation. The Hapsburgs had only one thought —to destroy the glory of Bohemia, to stifle the culture of the Czechs, and to kill their language, in which Chelcicky and other Bohemians preached to the world universal peace, equal rights for all men, and religious liberty.

Centuries of Germanization have not deprived the Czech of his individuality. This individuality is a characteristic of the peasantry of Bohemia, who, following old traditions, devised a distinctive style of arranging their homes and their costumes. They have their own poetry, music, dances, customs, and ceremonies, all of which may be considered as the artistic side of Bohemian peasant culture. The Czechs look now with pride upon this traditional art of their peasants, seeing in it many links with the various branches of the Slavonic race.

The great progress of Bohemia during the last century in art, education, and industry has gradually drawn the attention of Europe to the historic rights of the Czechs. The virility of this race has served to make more apparent the inefficiency of the Austrians and to emphasize the fact that the Hapsburg monarchy is not a modern institution, but a mediaeval survival. Austrian misrule cannot continue in the face of the present high intellectual and economical development of the Czechs, as opposed to the backward condition of the Teuton rulers. The hour of national enfranchisement has arrived, and Bohemians, Moravians, Silesians, and Slovaks are looking forward to a new life. Bohemia will retake her place among the free, independent nations; the old lands of the Bohemian Crown, namely, Bohemia, Moravia, and Silesia, and the Slovaks occupying the greatest part of Northwestern Hungary, will be united again.

In the new Europe which is about to be born, with the freedom for all nations, the Czechs also desire their "place in the sun." They desire to restore and to maintain their national individuality, and to remain Slavs, as they always have been.

Dr. ANTHONY JAROSLAV MORAVEK.

Aphrodite's Unique Girdle.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is one appendage to the Linton Aphrodite recently purchased by John D. Rockefeller which, through analogous research, may go far toward establishing the lady's age, if not, indeed, the identity of her creator. This is the "cestus," or girdle, two fragments of which still cling to her right wrist and hand. The "cestus," which was supposed to inspire the beholder with love, is a common appendage to statues and paintings of Venus dating from the Roman, neo-Grecian, or even Grecian period, but of all statues of the del Medici type this is the only one which now displays the "cestus." Even the "Venus del Medici," in the Uffizi at Florence, supposed to be the work of Kleomenes, son of the Athenian Appolodorus, does not have it, nor does any of the neo-Grecian copies of this statue. If the Linton Aphrodite were intended to be a copy of the del Medici prototype it is hardly likely that the sculptor would have had the temerity to add something which the original did not possess. A reference to a Venus with the "cestus" thus held is worth searching for in literature, particularly if such a reference should also include a description of a statue of the del Medici type.

Franz Abt or Miss White?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your Sunday Magazine of July 18 appears a review of the memoirs of a certain lady pianist and composer, Maude Valerie White, who, it is said, "tells vivaciously of celebrities she has met. We learn that instead of calling Miss White's song, "When the Swallows Homeward Fly," by its rightful title, he (Frank Millet) persistently alluded to it as "When I Swallowed Home-Made Pie." The vivacious assertion that she, Miss Maude White, was the author and composer of "When the Swallows Homeward Fly" will be a staggering surprise to music lovers in general and to German musical professors in particular, who have been led to the belief that the author and composer of this—one of the most classical songs that has ever been written—was Franz Abt.

Children's Street Play.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A few days ago I saw a letter in your paper from some one who inquired if there was no law to protect from the loud cries of the street peddlers. Another day a letter from some one complained of the incessant chatter of a neighborhood parrot.

Now I have a grievance, and I am sure I am not the only one who feels it. I live on a street between Eighth Avenue and Morningside Park, and it might be a very pleasant street to live on, for it is swept about five times a day and washed repeatedly. But although we have parks and playgrounds all around us, the children are playing every evening, yelling and screeching louder than any peddler or parrot. We are obliged either to shut our windows or go to the rear of the house to be able to hear each other talk.

A SUFFERING TENANT.

New York, July 22, 1915.

A MESSAGE.

I'd like to catch a tiny cloud
And whisper to it, not too loud,
A little song
To waft along,
O'er rock and rill,
And dale and hill—
The little song I fain would sing,
To Love, who's gone vacationing.

I'd like to snare a pretty bird
And teach it just one single word,
Then set it free
To bear for me,
In speedy flight,
Through all the night,
And thus at dawn the message bring,
To Love, where she's vacationing.

I'd like to coax a gentle breeze
To breathe a message through the trees,
From tree to tree
A word from me—
A tiny song—
Four letters long.
'Tis love I'd send by cloud, breeze, wing,
To Love, who's gone vacationing.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE BLAMES HUMAN NATURE.

So Long as That Is as It Is Speculative Excesses Cannot Easily Be Checked by Rules and Regulations.

By H. G. S. NOBLE,
President New York Stock Exchange.

New York Stock Exchange,
Aug. 3, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

THE TIMES has recently given expression, editorially, to its disapproval of the excited speculation now taking place in the so-called "war stocks." Your example has been followed by several other influential newspapers, and in each case condemnation of this speculation has been accompanied by the assertion that it could, in some undefined manner, be suppressed by the authorities of the Stock Exchange. It has also been urged that if the Stock Exchange does not promptly accomplish this desired suppression it should be brought to terms by a punitive act of the Legislature.

In the interest of arriving at a clear understanding of this question the following facts must be borne in mind: Any event tending to disturb the equilibrium of security values brings about a period of speculation which lasts until the equilibrium has been readjusted. The greater and the more far-reaching this disturbing event happens to be, the longer and the more excited will be the resultant speculation. A historic example of this can be found in the experiences of our civil war. That great national convulsion, accompanied by a suspension of specie payments and the issue of paper money, created a speculation of unprecedented magnitude. The Stock Exchange of those days was a small organization doing business in a primitive way, and when the great war speculation came it refused to enlarge its facilities to meet the new conditions, and thus virtually did what was in its power to impede the rising speculative tide. The result was that speculation, finding itself choked off from the regular organized channels, proceeded to form new and unorganized channels for itself, and a great, continuous, and unregulated market was established in the open street to carry on the business that the daily "calls" of the Stock Exchange were incompetent to handle. The mania for trading on the war news of the day was such that the market did not close in the afternoon hours, but was transferred uptown to the lobby of the old Fifth Avenue Hotel, where it continued during the evening. Out of this unorganized market there grew the "Open Board of Brokers," which the old Stock Exchange was finally obliged to unite with in 1869.

At the present time we are witnessing events similar in principle to these happenings of fifty years ago. The great world war has shaken the accepted adjustment of values like an earthquake. As a consequence of this there is likely to be speculative excitement in many fields. One of the first signs of it has been the rise in the stocks of all companies obtaining war contracts. This rise has not been confined to securities listed on the Exchange, for its most violent manifestations have shown themselves in unlisted properties. The stock of the Du Pont Powder Company, which was selling at about 170, has risen to 700 and fallen back again to about 600. Had this fluctuation taken place upon the floor of the Exchange and been advertised by the ticker the attacks upon that institution would have been intensified, but being consummated unobstrusively it has caused no comment. We are told by one conservative publication that the great volume of the transactions recorded is in itself a scandal and that the profits upon which these violent changes in price are based have not yet been secured. The magnitude of the transactions is due to the fact that New York is a great world market and that the number of individuals who are buying and selling there is enormous. Speculation is always an act of anticipation, and if profits had been secured and big dividends established investors would take these properties out of the market and speculation would disappear.

While the right of free contract remains there is no power in the Stock Exchange, or even in the Legislature, to prevent individuals from using their own money or credit to buy securities in which they anticipate an advance. There is one restraining influence upon the excess of speculation which is undoubtedly being exercised today and that is the refusal of money lenders to make advances upon over-inflated properties. There is also a duty incumbent upon the Stock Exchange to see that the law of the State and its own regulations against fictitious transactions, or "wash sales," be rigidly enforced. This duty is being carefully performed by the "Business Conduct Committee" which was organized for that specific purpose.

Speculative excesses, like all other excesses, are deprecated by every thoughtful man, but while human nature remains as it is there is no clear and easy way for any one to stop them by promulgating rules and regulations.

H. G. S. NOBLE,
President.

NORWAY'S GRIEVANCE.

Germany's Submarine Warfare Alienates Scandinavian Opinion.

A letter from Johan Anker, Norwegian shipbuilder, to the Tidens Tegn of Christiana, Bergen, Norway, June 8, 1915.

Since the outbreak of the war my feelings have many times urged me to give a warning with regard to the torpedoing of Norwegian vessels—not as a personal appeal but because there are moments in a man's life when he feels his honor too keenly to be a silent spectator. Lack of knowledge of the details, lack of personal observation, the possibility of a wrong interpretation of the facts have deterred me. Now, after having myself experienced the way in which Germany conducts her submarine warfare, I need be silent no longer.

On board the Iris of Bergen on Saturday, May 22, I witnessed the firing of a torpedo at her and the torpedoing of the Minerva of Haugesund.

Yesterday, (June 7,) I was again on board the Iris, returning from England—100 miles from the coast—when she was attacked by a submarine, which, like the last time, without warning fired a torpedo at the Norwegian passenger boat. A mistaking of the nationality was out of the question. The two boats had their signs in full order—even a shortsighted person could have distinguished the letters at a distance. A fortnight ago the weather was clear and unusually bright when the submarine appeared. If the commander was a responsible and sane man—which we must presume—no other explanation is possible than that he acted under orders. It was not the same submarine which fired at us the first time; the periscopes were different.

Sometimes Germany, as in the case of the Belridge affair, officially makes an apology and declares that it was not her purpose to torpedo our ships. What value can we give to such declarations, which are immediately contradicted by actions? If private people can feel satisfaction in taking the chance and leaving the question unanswered, the nation cannot. For the nation it is important to get a clear understanding as to whether Germany in reality regards herself as in a state of war with Norway, or whether these occurrences, many times repeated, will be accepted as mistakes with compensation in view. In any case our conduct ought to be such that Germany is without doubt as to where we stand if she threatens our right to the open sea. This right must be maintained, especially by us, because no country in comparison to its size has a greater interest in the sea than Norway. Since the submarine war on merchant vessels started we have lost so many ships and so many valuable cargoes that, comparatively, we have suffered and suffer almost as much as England, who is at war with Germany.

What can our seamen rely upon if the nation does not stand behind the flag and demand that it be respected? We ought to be proud of our seamen. They do their work under more difficult and more dangerous conditions than any of us, and they do it with a faith and courage which ought to arouse the admiration of all. The only protection they have is the Norwegian flag; the only help we can give them is to see that the flag is honored. It is high time for us to make up our minds that if we wish to exist as an independent nation we must be willing to make sacrifices. We must see clearly that the nation which does not protect its emblems with all its might and will is sooner or later doomed to lose its independence.

If it is really the case that we will not risk our skins for our liberty and our colors, what ideals are we to try to live up to in the future? If we dare not take our turn this time but must weigh our honor against what we gain materially let us then join another nation of courageous men who will not compromise.

JOHAN ANKER.

An Appeal from Mrs. Balfour.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May I beg the hospitality of your widely read journal for an appeal on behalf of our aviators in active service? In view of the likelihood of the campaign being continued through the Autumn and Winter, I am anxious to collect the following articles, which will be urgently needed by the men of the Royal Naval Air Service and of the Royal Flying Corps in the western war area and elsewhere: Cardigans, sweaters, (both urgently needed,) flannel shirts and vests, leathern and knitted waistcoats, helmets, socks, gloves, and mufflers. I shall be most grateful for any contributions which may be sent to me, now or later, of articles such as the above, or of money, which will enable me to purchase those things which seem most urgently needed. The high appreciation with which consignments of such articles as the above were received last Winter by our aviators, emboldens me to make this appeal to the well-known generosity of American sympathizers.

HINDU UPRISINGS A MYTH.

At Least, It Can Be Denied That They Are Spontaneous.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of July 21 appears a letter from Mr. Ram Chandra, editor of a Hindu newspaper in San Francisco, in which he asserts that "the revolt in India is as wide spread as it is indigenous" and that the "powerful and numerous uprisings which have thrown India into turmoil" are falsely reported to have been instigated by the staff of his paper or by the enemies of England. He denies that German agitators have been instrumental in causing such disturbances as may have occurred.

As far as the "powerful and numerous uprisings" are concerned, it is of interest to quote from a letter I have recently received from J. C. Moulton, Curator of the Museum in Sarawak, Borneo, now serving as a Lieutenant in the Fourth Wiltshire Territorial Regiment. The letter, which is dated May 4, 1915, at Kailana, Chakrata, India, states: "I am starting a Natural History Society here among the men and have 200 names of those interested. We are stationed 7,000 feet up in the Himalayas from now till October as it is too hot in the plains now. Nothing to do except something of this sort, and Colonel is delighted at the idea. Thinks it will keep the men out of mischief. Perfect godsend to me as you may imagine." Political unrest can't be very marked when British soldiers are sent up to the mountains to enjoy the cool weather and spend their time catching butterflies, especially in view of the fact that there are now comparatively few white soldiers in India.

I am sure Mr. Chandra is in error in stating that disturbances in India are spontaneous on the part of the mass of the population. I know that, in other parts of the East, German agents have endeavored to make trouble; for in Sarawak, Borneo, in January last I saw the solitary German resident of Rajah Brooke's splendidly governed State vainly seeking to cause disaffection among the Malays. He was allowed entire freedom until after the Singapore mutiny; then he was deported with the Singapore Germans to Australia. There is good reason to believe that the Singapore mutiny was, at least in part, "made in Germany." There resulted from the Singapore mutiny a dramatic incident that clearly indicates that the mutiny was far from spontaneous. About three weeks after the mutiny a large meeting of Mohammedans was held in Singapore for the purpose of sending a message of loyalty to King George. Many could not gain admission to the meeting place,

POUNDS DEFENDS ERASMUS FIRETRAP

Borough President Suggests Pupils Can Leap from Second Story to Escape Fire.

MUST TAKE RISKS, HE SAYS

Asserts He Is Not Alarmed for His Daughter, Who Goes to School in the Frame Building.

A defender of the old frame buildings of Erasmus Hall High School, repeatedly condemned as unsafe by the Fire Department, came forward yesterday in the person of Borough President Lewis H. Pounds of Brooklyn. The Bureau of Fire Prevention, Chief John Kenlon, and Deputy Chief Thomas Lally of the Fire Department have found the buildings "unsafe," "not fit for school purposes," and "a serious fire hazard."

"I think the buildings are reasonably safe," said President Pounds last night. "They can be emptied in about two minutes, and I think they are practically as safe to get out of as the new fireproof buildings of the school. They were all overhauled last Spring, and new exits were installed. The buildings are only two stories high and are surrounded by earth, not by a hard pavement. In case of need the children could probably drop or jump from the second-story windows without being injured.

"This Fall 800 new pupils will come to the school. If the old buildings are not used, 1,400 pupils now accommodated by them will have to be put in the new buildings and the whole great school put on half time. This is not desirable, if there is any possible way to avoid it.

"I have a daughter who goes to school in the wooden buildings, and I am not alarmed about her safety. These are the chief considerations: That the old buildings are reasonably safe and that the school would suffer if the pupils were put on half time. Aside from that, there is the question of economy. Why destroy a building that is reasonably safe?

"What do you think of the Fire Commissioner's opinion that the buildings are not safe for school purposes?" he was asked.

"It isn't the Fire Commissioner's judgment," said Mr. Pounds. "It is that of the men in the Fire Prevention Bureau, who would tear down the whole blessed town if they could. Last year they proposed a scheme that, if carried out, would have cost $20,000,000 or $30,000,000 in Manhattan alone.

"Then you think that Chief Kenlon and Deputy Chief Lally, in saying that the buildings were unfit for school use, looked at only one side of the case?"

"Certainly. They always do. They regarded it solely from the point of view of extreme safety, and in fact something that we're not going to have in this city for many years to come. In our homes, our offices, our schools we've got to take some chances. Fire Commissioner Adamson has put the Board of Education in an embarrassing position. In effect, his letter to President Churchill last Friday, in which he disapproves of the buildings but gives no order, says: 'The buildings are unsafe, but do as you have a mind to. I wash my hands of the matter.' That means that the Fire Prevention Bureau is shirking its duty."

President Churchill, however, has repeated his declaration that he will obey any order of the Fire Department, which makes only suggestions, not orders, to other city departments.

"In ordering that the wooden buildings must go," said Mr. Churchill, "I am acting on the Commissioner's latest letter, containing no finding that the buildings are unsafe and his suggestion is an order sufficient for me."

SCHOOL TRAINS BOYS IN TRADE OF WAITING

Hotels Pay Instructor Who Aims to Give Them Acceptable Help.

FAIR PAY AT THE START

Graduates Get $22 a Month, Board, and a Share in the Dining Room Tips.

Educators have agitated long and hard for trade training to fit boys for this or that calling, but it has remained for the heads of New York's leading hotels to start a training station for those who aspire to become waiters. Feeling a distinct need for trained beginners, some of the largest hotels organized and support a free training school for hotel employes. On Aug. 1 the Free Training School for Hotel Employes celebrated its third anniversary. Here Julius Stein, an ex-head-waiter, has put 1,200 boys through the paces to qualify them to become omnibuses, for even the obscure bus boy must have a liberal education in the gentle art of plate rustling.

There are cheerful prospects before the pupil of the school. Intensive study for about three weeks qualifies the boy for a place in one of the fifteen maintaining hotels. There he will receive $22 a month and meals besides tips, for though the public may not be aware of it, the waiter in turn tips the boy who assists him, from 25 to 70 cents a day. Sometimes the exceptionally bright omnibus is rewarded with a dollar. From omnibus he may advance to chef-omnibus, foreman of the omnibuses, to waiter, and in due time to captain and head waiter. In this profession as in all others there is the usual tradition of lowly beginnings, for hearsay has it that the great Oscar, of fabulous salary, began his career as far down the hotel scale as ordinary omnibus.

To enter the school all that need be done is to go to Mr. Stein at his office in Forty-first Street, near Fifth Avenue, and make application.

Then, if satisfactory in appearance and age, a student's card is issued to the prospective omnibus, and from then on he must appear at school each day from 9 to 5 o'clock, with a one-hour recess, time which the head master exhorts his pupils to spend in practicing dish-carrying in all its niceties. Not infrequently head waiter and captains from the supporting hotels visit the school and talk to its pupils about the duties and opportunities that lie before them.

There is no set time to finish the course of training, but when a pupil has become proficient enough the headmaster sends him armed with a card of introduction to whatever hotel needs an omnibus. Should misfortune overtake the graduate and cause him to lose his place he returns to the school, where his case will be fully investigated. If the cause of the discharge was trifling, such as incompatibility between a German waiter and a French omnibus, he may re-enter the school to await employment elsewhere. If he somehows repeated three or four times before a pupil is firmly placed.

The school itself occupies the second flor of what was not so long ago a fine residence. In front is the reading room office. There pupils and former pupils are encouraged to spend their free time reading, writing, or otherwise as suits them best. A liberal supply of current magazines is always on the centre table, but only those printed in English are allowed, for "Learn to talk United States" is Mr. Stein's motto.

At the rear is the class-room, where every known implement pertaining to food and eating may be seen, besides all kinds of tables and table linen. The laboratory method of instruction is employed here to its fullest extent. Foodless meals and drinkless drinks are served here from early morn to dewy eve, each boy in turn doing some part of the work entailed under the eagle eye of Headmaster Stein, who illustrates his discourses and his demonstrations with lectures and catchizing—in English, French, German, and Italian, for his is a truly polygot school. Greek alone floors the instructor.

"Now, it is dinner," begins Mr. Stein. "You, Frank, set the table. What is the service for dinner? Good; now do it! No, no the water-bottle is always in the middle of the table, not so. Now you three sit down. I am the waiter, and you, Jaques, are my omnibus. We will have oysters, cream of meat salad, two coffees, and one cold coffee." The near omnibus fills the glasses, goes to a service table, and gathers up the proper knives, forks, spoons, and the like. Then he proceeds to place them about the table, all eyes upon him the while his teacher stands by. Into the glasses imaginary water is poured, the proper silver is gravely put in place, as are the special plates; for oysters a collection of shells do duty, and ancient rolls make their appearance. At last all is set in place and the omnibus retires behind the waiter. Then the class is questioned about the correctness of the procedure. No one can find a flaw. Neither can Mr. Stein, and with the same vehemence that he has previously found fault he acknowledges perfection. "That is absolutely correct. I could not do better myself. You are a bright boy, and if I send you to the Waldorf you'll do me proud. Next week you shall be chef-omnibus here and help me break in the greenhorns."

The meal is over. Now comes the class in removing dishes. "Remember," continues Mr. Stein, "hold your plates level or else, they fall off on the floor. Everybody stops eating to see what has happened and you get the bounce many times. The guests must be disturbed never."

Everybody takes a turn at carrying away the dishes and then a lecture on omnibuses in general closes the day's session. In this lecture, repeated by sections in four languages, Headmaster Stein sets forth as the cardinal virtues of the omnibus cleanness, especially as to finger nails, hair and uniform, promptness, accuracy, and the ability to speak English. To that he adds this parting warning: "Boys, make yourself warm in the house I send you to, before you look for more money. If you are a good omnibus you may become chef-omnibus and then waiter, but if you are a bad omnibus nobody wants you."

'MEDEA' PLAYED AT N. Y. U.

With Mme. Barsescu Making Her First Appearance in English.

An organization doing business under the hazardously pretentious name of the Art Drama Players presented "Medea" yesterday afternoon and evening at New York University, with Mme. Agathe Barsescu in the title rôle. It had been planned to give the play on Battery Hill under the open sky, but the rain drove the players and the few hardy spectators to the shelter of the circular chapel in the basement of the library.

The play given was not the great Euripidean tragedy, as readers of the announcements might reasonably have supposed, but a translation from the French of Legouvé, a halt, corrupted, and somewhat travel-worn version of the story of the wise woman of ancient Colchis.

The occasion was the first appearance of Mme. Barsescu on the English-speaking stage, the rôle affording her an opportunity for a variety of thunderous emotionalism that quite obliterated the rest of the company. Born in Bucharest, Mme. Barsescu has been a player of the German and Austrian stage for many years, and has hitherto been seen here with the Irving Place stock company. She made a favorable impression last year as Jocasta in "König Oedipus" at the Metropolitan. Though her voice is naturally marked with the German accent, she has an admirable command of the English tongue.

"Medea" will be repeated on Friday and Saturday of this week at the People's Theatre, in the Bowery, for the benefit, it is said, of the large Rumanian population dwelling in that neighborhood.

SOLEMN HIKER WINS WAGER.

"Man Who Never Smiles" Completes 4,000-Mile Walk.

Styling himself the "man who never smiles," Charles J. Bingay, 35 years old, of Vancouver, B. C., walked into the Municipal Lodging House last night and told Assistant Superintendent Whiting that he just completed a 4,000-mile jaunt from his home to this city to win a wager of $5,000.

According to Bingay, he left Pacific Coast on March 10 from the office of F. G. Mayfield, a real estate broker of Vancouver, who put up the wager. To win the money he agreed to make the trip in five months. Bingay carried a letter from the Mayor's secretary of Dighie, B. C., to Mayor Mitchel, which he presented at the City Hall yesterday afternoon, and received a letter from the Mayor to take back to the Coast with him.

Owing to a five weeks' stay in a South Bend Hospital, where he was ill with appendicitis, Bingay came near losing his bet, according to his story. He carried a sign on his coat front, which read: "I am not married, nor am I as grouchy as I look. I could consider a wife is she could make me smile." Bnigay says he never smiles, and to prove it sat in the lobby of the lodging house for several hours while the humorists of the neighborhood tried him out with jokes, ancient and modern. He never smiled nor relaxed his serious expression.

ADMIRAL FORSYTH DIES.

Veteran of Two Wars Is a Victim of Paralysis.

SHAMOKIN, Penn., Aug. 3.—Rear Admiral James McQueen Forsyth, United States Navy, retired, died here today of paralysis. He was stricken six months ago and failed steadily to the end.

Admiral Forsyth was born in the Bahama Islands in 1842, and removed to Philadelphia, where he joined the merchant marine. During the civil war he became an officer of the navy, in which he served until after the Spanish-American war, when he was placed on the retired list. After his marriage with Miss Caroline P. Helfenstein of this place Admiral Forsyth made his home here. The body will be taken to the National Cemetery at Arlington on Friday for burial.

Admiral Forsyth went to sea on a merchantman at the age of 15, and in August, 1861, entered the navy as a volunteer under Commander H. S. Stillwagen, who appointed him a second-class pilot on the Hatteras expedition. After that he was with Farragut in the engagements from Fort Jackson to Vicksburg, the fight at Grand Gulf, and the battles with the Confederate ram Arkansas. In September, 1862, he became an ensign, and during the remainder of the war served on the Nyack, Water Witch, Pawnee, and Nantucket.

In 1868 he entered the regular navy as Master, and served on a number of vessels. He was executive officer on the Constellation during her Irish relief service in 1880. He was in command of the naval station at Key West when the Maine was destroyed, and took care of the survivors and buried the dead. At the end of the Spanish war he contracted yellow fever, and was sent to the Naval Hospital at Philadelphia. In March, 1899, he was made a Captain, and commanded the cruiser Baltimore in the Asiatic Squadron, shortly after becoming Chief of Staff at the station. He was transferred to the Brooklyn, his last sea duty being the command of the Indiana in 1901. Admiral Forsyth was retired a month later, having served thirteen years and seven months at sea and sixteen years and four months ashore.

BASEBALL CLUB OWNERS BUY BIG ESTATE IN GEORGIA FOR TRAINING CAMP FOR PLAYERS

BASEBALL MEN BUY TRAINING CAMP

Dover Hall Estate, in Georgia, Will Become Centre for Spring Practice.

Dover Hall, one of the largest and most picturesque of the Southern estates, located fourteen miles from Brunswick, Ga., has just been purchased by a syndicate of men prominently identified with baseball, and the indications are that the old plantation, which comprises 2,436 acres, will eventually be turned into a great training camp for the major league teams. The identification of George Stallings with the project lends further credence to this view, for it has been one of his pet theories that it would be a great advantage for a National League and American League team to train together, each practicing in the morning independently and playing a game in the afternoon. The scope of the property would allow for the training of every one of the big league teams, and this would undoubtedly lessen the cost of Southern training, where each of the clubs is forced to maintain its own camp.

The estate will hereafter be known as the Dover Hall Club. The officers are: President, Captain T. L. Huston; Vice President, George T. Stallings; Treasurer, Frank M. Stevens; Secretary, A. Allison. The Directors are, in addition to the Officers, B. B. Johnson, President of the American League; Charles A. Comiskey, Irvin S. Cobb, and Damon Runyon. Other members are Jacob Ruppert, James E. Gaffney, Bud Fisher, John K. Tener, President of the National League; Archie Hurlbert, Robert Lee Hedges, Tyrus Cobb, John J. McGraw, Harry Stevens, J. C. Toole, Robert Davis, Howard Trumbo, Norman H. Davis, Edward Barrow, President of the International League, and Harry N. Hemsley, President of the Giants. The active membership is to be limited to fifty, but there will also be an associate membership. The club will be incorporated under the laws of Delaware, and the shares will sell for $1,000 each. Already a large amount of money has been subscribed, Ban Johnson having taken five shares in the club.

At present it is the plan to improve the property so that it may be a Winter resort and game preserve. To this end work will soon be started on a club house costing about $50,000 will be erected, and it is believed it will be ready for occupancy this Fall. Many of the members are preparing to build cottages and one of the first constructed will be owned by Captain Huston.

Dover Hall is within a few miles of Jekyl Island and adjoining is the du Pont estate. The tract is situated on a tidewater peninsula ten miles by water from Brunswick and fourteen miles by land. The question of purchasing it has been under consideration for nearly a year. It started as a result of a hunting trip to George Stallings's plantation last Fall. Several baseball club owners and newspaper men went over the ground, which was the estate of the late George W. Wright. As a game preserve it offered the finest inducements, and plans were at once launched to arrange for the purchase.

For the present it will be used as a Winter resort for baseball men, where they can have the finest hunting afforded in any section of the East. There are, in plentiful quantities, deer, wild turkey, quail, snipe, duck, rail and plover. 'coon, possum, and those who like a bit more of excitement, bear and wild cat. The estate has four miles of oyster beds, a safe harbor for yachts and small boats, and fine fishing grounds for drum, trout, bass, whiting, and sheepshead.

The land is heavily wooded in places and the timber rights in themselves hold a large value. Several years ago theese rights were sold, and there was considerable cutting, but there are still hundreds of acres of virgin pine. The new owners have repurchased the timber rights, and there will be no more cutting of lumber except when it is necessary for the building of the proposed bungalows. They will be of uniform construction of boulder and log, though members will be permitted to build according to their own plans and upon sites which they may select.

WHY GIANTS DIDN'T PLAY.

Federal Clubs Were Playing in St. Louis, So Conflict Was Avoided.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Aug. 3.—It rained a few drops this morning, and John J. McGraw of the Giants and Miller Huggins of the Cardinals promptly put their heads together, conferred for thirty minutes and hung out the sign "Wet grounds; no game. Double header tomorrow."

To tell the truth about the matter the grounds were about as wet at game time as they are every morning at 5 o'clock when the dew glistened on the green sward. McGraw and Huggins did not want to play. The Federals were playing, and they got the impression they could draw a better crowd if they waited until tomorrow when they would have no opposition. Maybe they were right, but the Federal game would not have made much of an impression in today's crowd. The "outlaw" game drew five hundred, mostly women, for it was ladies' day. Mathewson and Tesreau will pitch for the Giants and Robinson and Griner for the Cardinals.

FEDERAL RAID IN FALL.

"Outlaws" to Sign Major League Stars, Says Gilmore.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 3.—James Gilmore, President of the Federal League, announced here today that his league was planning another raid on organized baseball, and that negotiations with fifteen stars of the National and American leagues were under way. He said the Federals would endeavor to sign several well-known players in the Fall, and that others would be found in the Federal League training camps next Spring.

Gilmore said that no amount of money within reason would stand in the way of the Federals if they could induce such men as Grover Cleveland Alexander, J. Franklin Baker, Eddie Collins, and "Stuffy" McInnis to sign contracts.

Mr. Gilmore announced that the Federal League undoubtedly would have a team in New York City next year, and that the pennant winner in his league would again challenge the winner of the world's series this Fall.

Mickey Welsh and Larry Corcoran.

Many baseball fans who have kept records of the old performers will remember two noted pitchers who broke into the game together. They were Smiling Mickey Welsh and Larry Corcoran, who were teammates and pals on the famous Lurelines of Brooklyn, an amateur organization of considerable note way back in 1877. A few years later they graduated from the amateur ranks into the "Big Show," Larry going to the famous Chicago team, then under Cap Anson. A few seasons afterward Mickey was hired by the New York Giants and was soon considered their star pitcher. For several seasons these two great hurlers were rivals, and met many times in brilliant pitching duels. The records show where Welsh had it on the other Hibernian, for Mickey was a regular Jonah to the warriors of Anson for many years.

Mickey always took great delight in telling this story about his former pal: "The first game in which Daddy Corcoran saw his boy pitch was against the Giants. After the game, which was lost by the Chicagos, the old gentleman happened to hear some one remark that if young Corcoran had been better supported he might have won that game. The old man's dander was up in a second and he was bristling with rage, and he shot back at the bunch from whom the remark emitted in this manner: 'I'll give yez all to understand that my Larry was as well supported as any bhoy in Brooklyn, from the day he was born until he jined the big league.' It took four players to hold the fiery old terrier from mixing things."

Injunction Against Indianapolis Player Who Jumped to Feds.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 3.—Sanford Burk, pitcher for the Pittsburgh Federal League Baseball Club, was today temporarily restrained from playing with the club, and the club was restrained from employing Burk through injunctions granted to representatives of the American Association Baseball Club of Indianapolis by Judge Ambrose B. Judge Reed named Aug. 6 as the time when he would hear arguments on the motion to make the injunctions permanent. Burk joined the Pittsburgh Federals recently, when that team passed through Columbus, Ohio.

EVERS AND CLARKE FIGHT IN BALL PARK

Boston Captain Throws Water at Pittsburgh Manager, Which Results in Fisticuffs.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Penn., Aug. 3.—There was one feature of today's double header between Pittsburgh and Boston that was not on the program, and came so suddenly that the 6,000 fans present hardly knew what the trouble was until there was a mixture of arms and legs on the steps leading to the basement of the grand stand. When the smoke had cleared away it was found that Johnny Evers, Captain of the Boston team, and Fred Clarke, manager of the Pirates, had had a set-to, and both had reached the face with a few well-directed blows. The trouble started when Evers began to criticise Umpire Emslie for a decision in the first inning of the second game. In the third inning he became particularly incensed at Emslie over the decision declaring Collins safe, and was ordered out of the game. He started for the water cooler at the Pittsburgh bench to get a drink before leaving for the clubhouse, when Clarke yelled at Umpire Quigley to hurry Evers along, and the latter playfully threw some water on Clarke. The latter resented this and aimed a blow at Evers, and at once they began striking at each other. By this time the players of both teams rushed to the scene, also several policemen. The two men by this time had fallen down the steps under the stand, out of sight of the spectators, where they were finally separated and went to the clubhouse.

Boston defeated Pittsburgh twice, winning the first game, 5 to 4, and the second 7 to 2. Errors by Wagner and Viox were responsible for the loss of the first game by the Pirates. The visitors hit Harmon hard in the second game during the first four innings, ten hits resulting in seven runs being scored. Conzelman, who relieved him, allowed only one hit in five innings. ABOLISH THE COACHERS.

Bresnahan Favors Doing Away with This Feature of Baseball.

Roger Bresnahan, manager of the Chicago Cubs, in an interview in The Public Ledger, takes an unusual view of the coaching at first and third base which may occasion considerable gossip among baseball men and critics. He favors the abolition of the coachers and would approve of a rule to keep the players off the side lines while the game is in progress. He gives his reasons why he believes that coachers are unnecessary and that the game can be played as interestingly if they were not on the field

There are many managers who do not agree with Bresnahan in his idea. Hugh Jennings of the Detroit Tigers does not think a contest complete unless he is allowed to place himself in the boxes at first and third, tear up the grass and give his famous "E-yah" yell. John McGraw is another who would not favor the rule eliminating the coachers, as it would stop him from signaling to his men at the plate and on the bases. It also would prevent his running up to argue with the umpires and stop him from joshing the third baseman. These are his favorite tactics.

Manager Bresnahan contends that if the coachers were abolished the players would learn to be better base runners. They would acquire the habit of doing things on their own initiative, instead of relying wholly upon the coachers to tell them to come on or stop.

"Base runners do not have to be coached," said Bresnahan. "They ought to be taught to use their own judgment. The impression seems to prevail that a runner cannot run around the bases and keep his eye on the ball. This is all nonsense. A man can travel with all his speed and at the same time know what has become of the ball. He does not have to follow the ball all the time.

"When the runner is making a turn or going from one base to another he can take one look and if his judgment is good he will know what to do. If going from first to third on a hit he does not have to turn his head completely if the ball is batted to right center or to centre field. He needs only to turn his head a little, and if the ball is going or fumbled he can determine instantly what he should do.

"Coachers have been in the game so long that most of the baserunners depend on them. When a man turns second base the first thing he does is look at the coachers. They say that a man cannot go at his full speed and turn. That may be true, but, as I said before, a runner does not have to turn completely. All he has to do is to take a little peek. There are some runners who can run at their full speed with their heads turned clear around. Heinie Zimmerman is one, and I imagine he acquired it from practice.

"Coachers are not of any account when a runner is on first or second base. It is entirely up to the runner to watch the pitcher. He allows the twirler to get the jump on him it is his own fault. The man on the sidelines cannot help him at first, for the runner has to be on his way to the bag as soon as the twirler makes a move to pitch over.

"At second base a runner might be helped a little, but if he takes his permitted lead off the bag and turns his head now and then to watch the infielders he will never get caught off the base.

"Some think that it would slow a runner starting from second when a hit got to left or centre field. I contend that it will not if a player is taught to watch the ball and use his own judgment. If a man is flatfooted at second base when a hit is made, undoubtedly a coacher could assist him some, but he should not be standing still when hits right off the bat. He should be going at full speed, and as soon as he turns third he can see where the ball is and at the moment know what to do."

Jennings on the "Pitch-Out."

When should a catcher call for a pitch-out? Is the waste ball a good defense? These two questions were recently put to Hugh Jennings, manager of the Detroit Tigers. His reply, according to the Washington Post, was:

"There is only one out and out reliable hit and run batter in the American League. That is Eddie Foster of the Washington Club. With his only one such consistent hit and runner why should catchers be so prone to call for pitch-outs?

"Two of the best catchers who ever lived were Duke Farrell and Wilbert Robinson. Seldom did either call for a pitch-out except when Willie Keeler was at bat, for he could hit to any field.

"My belief is that the waste ball should be called only but rarely, and never if the pitcher shows a tendency to be wild. There is an opposite rule to be followed as well, which is, never hit and run when the pitcher is behind. As a base on balls is much more to be desired than the chance of poking a ball through vacated territory.

"I have known instances where there was a wild pitcher in the box, and the team at bat hung out the hit and run sign so that it could be read by a blind man. Why? They wanted the catcher to see the sign and to call for pitch-outs, knowing it was a hard job for the pitcher to get it over, as it was, and that a few waste balls would have him up in the air completely, and either passing the batters or grooving the ball for them.

"Of course, I do not know much about the National League batters, so cannot speak for the old league. But I do know that the batters in our league do not practice hit and running. Ty Cobb is the greatest hitter the world has known, but he is no hit-and-run batter. Neither is he has not given it any attention to speak of. The tendency of all the would-be hit-and-run batters is to hit the ball as hard as they can, and trust to luck to it going safely. The true hit and runner like Foster, however, has the knack of just meeting the ball and making a real effort to hit it through the territory vacated by the fielder who goes to cover the base.

"But up to date, the hit-and-run play, as it is attempted in the American League, is little to be feared."

How Vardon and Ray Started.

Harry Vardon and Eddie Ray, two of England's star golfers, were born on the Island of Jersey seven years apart, Vardon in 1870 and Ray in 1877; played golf from the time they were kids, but did not encounter each other on the links until both had become professionals.

As boys they used homemade and homely sticks, but they served their purpose. Ray's first club was fashioned by his father. Vardon cut his from a stick out of the hedge, which made a natural driver.

Ray worked as a caddy for a number of years, his first position as a professional being at St. Mile. He then played at Guernsey, at Jersey, at Winchester, and finally at Sandwich, where he won his first championship in 1899. This was his first appearance in an open championship. His partner at Sandwich was Vardon, who had previously won the open championship in 1896 and 1897.

Metropolitan A. A. U. Meets Sept. 20

The annual meeting of the Metropolitan Association of the Amateur Athletic Union will be held in the Seventy-first Regiment Armory Theatre on Sept. 20. Notice of the convention was sent to the various clubs and delegates of the association yesterday. Frederick W. Rubien, who last year succeeded James E. Sullivan as President of the association, will undoubtedly continue in that position, for no other candidate has appeared yet and in all likelihood there will be no one to oppose Mr. Rubien. There will be a fight for one or two of the offices, especially for handicapper. Though the work of Herman Oberlindbeking as handicapper during the past year has been efficient, there is talk in athletic circles that he will be opposed at the election this year. It is said that Jacob W. Stumpf, at present Chairman of the Registration Committee, is seeking the position. Stumpf has nothing to say about the report. He has announced his intention of retiring from the Registration Board, and among those mentioned as his probable successor are John Walsh, a judge of amateur boxing bouts and track and field official, and Tom Cassidy, A. A. U. Commissioner for Hudson County, N. J.

Fall Dates for United Hunts Racing.

The annual Fall race meeting of the United Hnnts Racing Association will be held as usual at Belmont Park teaminal, the dates selected being Saturday, Sept. 18, and Saturday, Sept. 25. This meeting comes immediately after the close of the Fall meeting of the Westchester Racing Association at Belmont Park, and will have no opposition to contend against elsewhere. Steeplechases of considerable value will be announced for each day, the principal event being the United States Steeplechase, Hunters' steeplechases and flat races will be included in the program and the amateur will have many opportunities to perform against the professional.

French Bulldog, Assyrian Toto, Here

A noted French bulldog, Assyrian Toto, has been imported and promises to be an important contender in the bulldog shows here this Fall. Toto will be registered at Rodney Toto and is a son of the European winner, Square Face, and a brother of the English champion Loletts. The Bulldog Club of America, the parent club of the breed, has appointed a Show Committee to arrange with the other bulldog clubs for a joint championship show to be held here this Fall.

AN EDUCATION FOR CADDIES.

Player Should Tell His Boy What He Expects of Him.

You may find caddies on all golf links; but to find the right kind is the problem. Caddies need teaching, says The Washington Post.

"Most of the boys are self-taught, and few players will explain to the boys what the golfer expects. If you want good caddies you must teach them. If you will not tell the boys what to do and what not to avoid, you should not blame the caddies when they make mistakes.

"Honesty and good nature are the first requirements of a good caddie. He should know the following clubs and their uses: Driver, brassie, cleek, midiron, mashie, niblick, putter. He should prove his ability to do these things: How to locate the ball, how to carry the bag, how and where to stand while holding the bag, what to do and what not to do when a stroke is being made.

"How to carry the bag—Put the strap over the shoulder and rest the hand of the same side on the heads of the clubs. This prevents clubs knocking together. When on the teeing ground rest bag on ground.

"Where to stand—When a player is getting ready to play, or when he is practicing a stroke, stand at a position where you can see his face, and at least ten feet from him. Never stand behind him. This applies to all strokes from tee to putting green.

"How to spot the ball—Look at the ball while the player is making his swing, keeping your eye on the ball until it drops. Mark the spot by a tuft of grass, a tree, or a building. Walk straight to the spot where you last saw the ball; if you don't find it at once, lay the bag down to mark the spot where it disappeared, then hunt for it.

"How to hold the flag—Stand at the flag staff with your hand on it. When the player has approached near enough to see the hole take out the flag and step aside. After he has holed out replace the flag with great care, so as not to break the edges of the hole.

"Do not take the club out of the bag while any one is addressing the ball or holing out. Do not move, talk, or whisper when a player is getting ready to play. Never walk across a player's line of putt. Wait until the players have holed out before walking to the next tee. Never hand a player a club, unless you know exactly what he wants

N.Y.Y.C. YACHTS DISABLED IN GALE

RESOLUTE CRIPPLED IN 25-KNOT BLOW

Cup Defender Towed to Bristol for Repairs—Few Yachts Finish N. Y. Y. C. Race.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 3.—Sailing out in the teeth of a twenty-five-knot wind, east by north, which kicked up a nasty sea, twenty-two of the racing yachts of the New York Yacht Club started shortly before 10 o'clock this morning for the forty-mile run to Newport. Of the lot that undertook the race for the Navy Challenge Cups, the special prize for the run, only eight finished the course.

One of the disabled was the cup defender sloop Resolute, which tonight is at the Herreshoff yards in Bristol to undergo repairs for damages received in the buffetings she got while trying to make her way through Fisher's Island Sound. Just how serious these injuries are is a matter of mystery. Report has it that the plates on her starboard bow are badly battered, and that her jib ballards parted during her buffeting against head winds and high seas, such as all the vessels had to encounter in their journey to this haven. How serious are the injuries the Resolute received will not be known until she has had a complete inspection in the Herreshoff yards. Captain Nat Herreshoff was here to report the crippled yacht when the steam yacht Alberta towed her into port. He took charge on her arrival and gave little encouragement that she would be ready to accompany the fleet in the race for the Astor Cups tomorrow. In case this should prove to be the fact the Vanitie will probably not be a starter, as there was a special cup to be raced for by the two cup yachts.

Following the storm of the night before, there was a stiff half gale and a choppy sea to greet the yacht club committee when they went out to establish the starting line off Sarah's Ledge Reef at the entrance to New London Harbor. It was a prospect that was anything but inviting to the club members and their guests, who had assembled for the most pretentious cruise under the club auspices for several years. Nearly a hundred and fifty craft were in the anchored fleet which heard the booming of the gun summoning the craft to the starting line. And it did arouse wild enthusiasm among the masters of the smaller craft, as they knew the trip, with the fight through the adverse winds, tides, and waves on the way to and around Point Judith, would be not a little severe a test for them. For that reason, too, owners of more than half the steam craft declined to get under way for a run that promised so much more of discomfort than of sport, with the element of danger looming so prominently that even some of the cruisers refused to get under way for their purely commercial purposes.

The first yachts to appear were the two Classes H Special" sloops the big 70-footers Resolute and Vanitie. They were sent away with the Vanitie carrying a working jib topsail and reaching jib topsail, the Resolute following her two minutes and sixteen seconds later, breaking out her reaching jib topsail just after crossing the line. Both were on the port tack and headed south by east for the run past Race Rock and thence into the troubled waters of Fisher's Island and Block Island Sounds, into which they plunged with lee rail awash and the water boiling along to the hatches which at times were almost buried as the craft bent to the wind. Butler Duncan at the helm of the Vanitie and Charles Francmis Adams II. holding the tiller of the Resolute. So fast did they move that they were almost out of sight when the Kalinga, Queen Mab and Miladi, the former the only Class M sloop competing, and the latter two 70-footers were sent away, with the two Class F boats Ahmakola and Hopewell following in a bunch at 9:50. Five minutes later the "fifties" Samuri, Grayling, Spartan, Carolina, Barbara, Ventura and Iroquois II. got under way without much of the customary jockeying for advantage at the start, and the lapse of another five minutes the schooners, Irolita, Vagrant, with all her working canvas aloft set, the Katrina, Radiant, Enchantress and Windward and the little Sound schooners Alicia and Rival got under way, the two latter for the run through Fisher's Island Sound, while the rest went outside.

Most of the craft stood the run for the better part of an hour, when they found making headway too serious a matter, and half the fleet turned back to New London Harbor to wait better weather later in the day. All the craft were making stiff weather of it, and the big steamers, Viking, Kanawha, Alberta, Corsair, Oneida, and Aloha, which accompanied the racers, found they had a sea job on hand. Well off shore in Block Island Sound the two twenty-footers made a number of hitches to get the better of the wind and tide, Vanitie apparently holding all of her two-minute lead, acting well in the stiff going, and gaining on her rival.

Shortly before 11 o'clock the Resolute was in trouble off the eastern point of Fisher's Island. The Viking, the committee tug Moran, the Resolute's tender, Queen, and the Alberta all responded to signals of distress and made for her with full steam. The Viking was first to reach her and took her in tow, to surrender her tow in order to the Moran, which turned her over to the Alberta, which finished the task of towing her to port. The Vanitie continued her run over the forty-mile course, reaching the finishing line at 3:17:27, having made the run in 5 hours 36 minutes and 27 seconds.

In the race between the fifties Samuri was the winner by 2 minutes and 42 seconds over the Grayling, the Spartan finishing fifteen minutes later. Both the Carolina and Barbara were disabled and towed to port, while the Iroquois presumably turned back, as it did not finish before the committee boat came up the harbor.

The Samuri won the race for the sloops in the Navy Challenge Cup, therefore Enchantress was the winner of the cup in the schooner class in 5:33:45, corrected time, with Queen Mab second in 6:20:24, Irolita's time was 6:21:50 and Vagrant's 6:39:52. Ahmakola was disabled and the time of the others was not taken, they having withdrawn from the race. Windward, too, was among the cripples, while the rest of the craft were withdrawn or refused to try to finish the trip around the treacherous Point Judith, several taking refuge in the breakwater where a number of coasting vessels were also forced to seek shelter during the afternoon. Ventura is reported tonight to have sprung her mast while off Fisher's Island. Altogether it was a disastrous day for the men who had counted on so much from such a large assembling of big craft on Monday.

Tonight, in spite of the disastrous beginning of the cruise the harbor here is crowded with vessels which have been creeping in all evening as the weather became less boisterous in the late afternoon, which permitted many of those which had held to the shelter of New London Harbor to make the run.

All the craft are brilliantly illuminated and there is a cordial welcome to the late comers who will accompany the entries in the race from the Astor Cups tomorrow, weather permitting. The Enchantress was the only schooner entered for the race up to a late hour last evening, and the sloops Grayling, Barbara, and Alerion the only three named for that class.

STONINGTON, Conn., Aug. 3.—About twenty-five of the smaller craft of the New York Yacht Club cruising fleet, which were driven to shelter by the heavy blow on Long Island Sound today, were anchored in the local harbor tonight. Some of the larger boats, which it was thought were headed for this port, are understood to have gone on to Watch Hill, R. I.

Resolute Only Slightly Damaged.

BRISTOL, R. I., Aug. 3.—The America's Cup class sloop Resolute was hauled out on the marine railway at the yard of her builders tonight for an examination to determine if damage had been done in the heavy wind that prevailed during today's racing off the New York Yacht Club, in which she participated. Some of the running gear showed signs of the strain and the work of replacing it was rushed during the night in the expectation of having the yacht in trim tomorrow.

MORGAN SELLS COLUMBIA.

Famous America's Cup Defender Now the Property of P. A. Gage.

The famous America's Cup defender, Columbia, which twice successfully defended the trophy, has been sold by J. P. Morgan to P. A. Gage. The terms of the sale are not known except to the parties interested in the purchase. The Columbia, when built, cost approximately $125,000 and is the only yacht built for the purpose of defending the cup to win twice in international competition for the famous yachting trophy.

The Columbia was built in 1898 for a syndicate headed by the late J. P. Morgan. It was constructed of tobin bronze and is 132 feet over all, 90 feet on the load water line, 24 feet beam, and 20 feet draught. It was probably the most popular of the America's Cup defenders and shared the particular affection of the general yachting public with the Puritan and Vigilant. Columbia's popularity was due largely to its double victory for the cup. The Vigilant was the best of four trial boats and defeated Valkyrie II., while the Puritan, which has always been regarded with favor, won from Genesta in 1885.

The racing career of the Columbia was not to be one. Charlie Barr, an English sailing Captain, commanded her in every race in which she sailed. He later made his home on Long Island. The first steel mast ever used on a sailing yacht was tried on the Columbia, which, however, crumpled during a trial race with the Defender. In 1899 the Columbia was selected to defend the cup against Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock I. In the trial races Columbia defeated the Defender, which was built of aluminium, which corroded with salt water.

Two years later the Defender was again named to defend the trophy when Sir Thomas Lipton challenged again. A syndicate headed by W. Butler Duncan built the Constitution. The series brought out a number of remarkable races. The committee intrusted with the selection of the cup defender gave the Columbia the preference owing to its consistent performances under all weather conditions. When the selection was announced Nat Herreshoff said: "The committee did not select the fastest boat, but probably the best." At the end of the trial series the Constitution had shown herself speedy at times, but at other times generally inferior to the Columbia.

After the first series of trial races the Columbia and Shamrock I. sailed the first of a series of three races on Oct. 16, 1899, off Sandy Hook, when the defending boat won by 10 minutes 8 seconds. On the following day Shamrock I. was disabled and Columbia sailed over the course. The challenging boat was repaired and on Oct. 20 the yachts engaged in the third contest, Columbia making it three straight by a margin of 6 minutes 34 seconds.

When the Irish baronet sent Shamrock II. over to lift the cup in 1901 Columbia was again on the starting line to test sailing speed with Shamrock II. and Shamrock III., before being finally tried out, making six in all. On Sept. 28 the cup defender won from the challenger by 1 minute and 20 seconds. The second race was sailed Oct. 3, when Columbia finished 3 minutes and 35 seconds ahead of Shamrock II. In the third contest the British boat was finally finished ahead of Columbia, but lost on time allowance, the defender's margin being 41 seconds.

Although the Columbia has taken part in many of the New York Yacht Club cruises, she has not been in commission since 1906. It was then that Mr. J. P. Morgan announced his intention of putting the yacht in commission and testing her speed against the big European boats in foreign waters, but the plan was never carried out.

N. Y. Y. C.'s Newport Station.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 3.—A working model of the proposed improvements for the new station of the New York Yacht Club was placed on exhibition today at the station by direction of Commodore George F. Baker, Jr., and viewed by many members and their guests. It was designed by Walker & Gillette, New York, while Horace E. Boucher built the model. The building will be two stories, constructed of wood. The lower section, with a waiting room, covers 25 by 35 feet, besides the veranda, check and other rooms, office, and toilets. The improvements begin this Fall, and are in charge of Commodore Baker, while former Commodore Arthur Curtiss James is in charge of the station.

Genevieve Wins 804-Mile Race.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Aug. 3.—The sloop Genevieve, owned by Commodore John Barneson of the San Francisco Yacht Club, circled the United States battleship Oregon in the harbor here today and was declared winner of the Seattle to San Francisco race from the yawl Ortona, owned and sailed by Capt. John Graham of the Seattle Yacht Club. A cup valued at $200 was offered as a prize by the Panama-Pacific Exposition. The Genevieve and the Ortona sailed from Seattle July 28, and reached here this afternoon. The Genevieve arrived at 10:38 o'clock this morning, making the 804 miles in 140 hours 58 minutes. The Ortona had not arrived early tonight.

Yawl Flamingo Floated.

SAYBROOK, Conn., Aug. 3.—The auxiliary yawl Flamingo, owned by R. L. Bigelow of the New York Yacht Club, which ran upon Seal Rock off the mouth of the Connecticut River last night, floated clear today and went into Saybrook Point to be examined. It was not believed that the yacht had been damaged to any extent.

CONNECTICUT STATE TENNIS

Seventeen Matches Decided Before Rain Falls—C. M. Bull, Jr., Defeated.

NORFOLK, Conn., Aug. 3.—Under lowering skies, which dropped down a sheet of rain during the latter part of the day, the annual tennis tournament for the Connecticut State championship began today on the courts of the Norfolk Country Club. When play ended for the day seventeen matches had been disposed of—twelve in the first round and five in the second. Five of these—three in the first round and two in the second—went by default. One match in the first round and five in the second remain to be decided, and it was expected that perhaps during tomorrow morning play in the third round would begin.

Heretofore the State tournament has been held at Litchfield, but this year it has been merged with the Bridgman Cup contest, held annually at Norfolk, and the two tournaments running concurrently, the winner of the one will take the honors in the other. There were forty-one entrants. The summaries:

WILLIAMS REACHES LONGWOOD FINALS

Defeats Wallace Johnson and Will Play Niles to Decide Challenger in Tennis.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Aug. 3.—In a four-set tennis battle between R. Norris Williams, 2d, national champion, and Wallace F. Johnson of Philadelphia today on the Longwood Cricket Club courts, the titleholder won a place in the final round of the Longwood Challenge tournament, and tomorrow will oppose Nat M. Niles of Boston. The winner will play Maurice E. McLoughlin of San Francisco, present holder of the trophy, on Thursday. Williams lost the first set, winning only two games, but rallied and captured three sets, allowing his opponent only two games. The scores were 2—6, 6—1, 6—0, 6—1.

The result of the final round is generally conceded to be a foregone conclusion, Williams is the logical favorite, and in the event of a victory for the titleholder, McLoughlin will have an opportunity for revenge on the player who robbed him of his tennis crown at Newport last year.

The contest between Williams and Johnson was a peculiar affair. Perhaps the weather, which was so chilly that the gallery shivered throughout the match, with a steady sprinkle for the last two and a half sets, had something to do with it. The first set was a walkover for Johnson, and the last three five contest at all, so supreme was Williams.

During the first nine games Johnson gave the gallery a fine exhibition of chopping at its best, which reminded the spectators of the finals in the national championships four years ago, when Johnson forced McLoughlin to five long sets and all but beat him. His low cut under shots had plenty of sting, sailing just over the net, and were beautifully controlled and directed. They not only earned him six games in the first set, but furnished a problem that Williams could not solve until well into the second set.

Williams was first disturbed, then worried, and finally lost his temper over the failure of his efforts. He failed to get under the ball and drive it with his usual freedom and speed, and almost made three errors, mostly at nets, to every place. Moreover this first set produced the astonishing spectacle of the champion, whose service is by many regarded as the best in the world, not excepting McLaughlin's, droping every one of his four service games. Johnson treated his delivery with scant respect and played it confidently. Throughout this set the champion wore a black sweater, but when the second set opened he shed it, and almost at once the tide turned.

The only explanation for the complete reversal in form of the two men is that Williams suddenly found himself and got down to handling deceptive shots from his rival's racquet. Williams made too many net errors, which gave his opponent a chance to carry the score to deuce in several games, but was always able to produce the winning point and games went along until Williams had won the set with the loss of only one in seven.

It was now Johnson's turn to err, and the third set was almost farcical so everlastingly did the Philadelphian chop the ball into the net. His stroke seemed to have lost all its vicious sting, and as a purely defensive weapon it was valueless against William's confident and speedy drives. Nineteen weak errors against six tells the story of the set.

Johnson was now hopelessly beaten, and although he rallied enough to make most of the games interesting it was final set, one game was all he could win, Williams being supreme and turning in the splendid record of twenty-one earned points against fourteen errors.

An exhibition mixed doubles contest between the present national champions, Mrs. George W. Wightman and Harry C. Johnson of Boston and Miss Molla Bjurstedt of Norway, the American singles title holder, and her partner in the finals of the national doubles, Irving C. Wright, will be staged after the final round in singles tomorrow afternoon. The summary:

Longwood Singles.—Sime-final Round—R. Norris Williams, 2d., Harvard, defeated Wallace F. Johnson, Philadelphia, 2—6, 6—1, 6—0, 6—1.

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I., Aug. 3.—The annual lawn tennis tournament of the Point Judith Country Club began today on the club courts, when several interesting matches were played. THE WEATHER

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—The Southern disturbance has reached Virginia. It is still of very limited area, and in connection with the high area to the northeastward has caused strong northeast winds along the north coast and fresh winds to the southward during the last twenty-four hours.

The disturbance that was over Illinois Monday night has moved to Lower Michigan, with increased intensity, and strong north winds have occurred over the northern upper lake region.

The two storms together have caused general, and in many places heavy, rains over northern districts east of the Mississippi River, and also thunder showers in the South Atlantic and East Gulf States.

There is a strong disturbance over Alberta that has caused local thundershowers in Western Montana, but elsewhere west of the Mississippi River the weather was fair.

It is decidedly cooler in New England, the Middle Atlantic States, and the Upper Mississippi Valley, and temperatures are generally below the seasonal average east of the Rocky Mountains.

There will be showers Wednesday in the Lake region, the Upper Ohio Valley, the Middle Atlantic States, and New England, followed by generally fair weather Thursday, except in New England.

In the Lower Ohio Valley and the South the weather will be fair Wed. and Thurs., except in Florida, where local thunder showers are probable Wednesday. It will be cooler Wednesday in the Ohio Valley and the lower lake region.

Storm warnings are displayed on the Atlantic Coast from Delaware Breakwater to Boston.

Winds for Wednesday and Thursday along the North Atlantic Coast will be fresh to strong northeast; Middle Atlantic Coast, strong northeast; South Atlantic Coast, moderate, mostly south and southwest.

FORECASTS: TODAY AND THURSDAY.

New York, New Jersey, and Eastern Pennsylvania—Showers and cooler Wednesday. Thursday, fair.

New England—Rain Wednesday. Thursday, unsettled.

Further Rise in War Stocks Comes Under Check—The Immigration Movement.

For a time yesterday the rapid upbidding of some of the war stocks was resumed, but it soon became evident that the market was a much soberer market than that which last week ran into such excess of speculation. Several times the market halted to measure its gait, and traders were not so impressed with the stories of unlimited profits from war orders that they despised altogether the opportunity for actual profits which fairly rapid advances afforded them. The effect of the changed attitude was to hold the movements in these stocks in check and to bring reaction in the later trading, which reduced the net gains and in some instances brought net losses. Bethlehem Steel was the only issue in which the day's dealings covered a very wide range, and the meagerness of the dealings which accompanied the seventeen-point rise and subsequent seventeen-point reaction in that stock bore fresh testimony to the smallness of the available supply of that stock, whose price therefore is abnormally influenced by even a moderate amount of buying or selling. The dealings closely paralleled in volume the transactions of the previous day—they were much below the larger totals of last week.

The railroad stocks shared the opening advance with the industrials, and, though they by no means escaped the subsequent reaction, many of them showed some net gain for the day. The Union Pacific's showing for the fiscal year was sufficiently good, despite the fact that it fell much below last year's results, to give encouragement to the traders in that stock. At the moment, however, the most potent factor in shaping market sentiment in respect to the railroad list, and more particularly in respect to the Western roads, is the expectation that, following the precedent set in the Eastern freight rate case, the Interstate Commerce Commission will grant higher rates to the Western roads as well. The commission now has its decision in the Western freight rate case under advisement and according to report will announce it before adjourning for the Summer.

The immigration bulletin giving the record of immigration and emigration for the fiscal year ended June 30 throws much light on one phase of the labor situation in this country. The net accession to the supply of labor through the arrival of aliens seeking work in the United States was naturally enough much below normal. The net inflow of aliens in the year ended June 30, 1915, was 122,626. The year before it was 915,142. This slackening in the alien movement into this country bore importantly upon the solution of the unemployment problem with which the country had to deal last winter, for under the conditions which then prevailed immigration in ordinary numbers would have added largely to the dimensions of that problem. Looking to the future, the question arises how far the labor market will be influenced by the small number of foreign workers being currently added to those seeking work. For the present what shortage of labor there is exists in certain lines of skilled work, and that is not a demand which could to any large extent be filled from the ranks of newly arrived immigrants. In view of the slackness in business following the disturbances caused by the war, the effects of the falling off in immigration have been favorable. The effect which this will produce upon the labor situation here when full employment again exists will in turn depend upon the extent to which the re-establishment of peace in Europe will affect the movement of laborers to the United States.

Can Company Wins $300,000 Suit.

After a trial lasting a month a jury in the United States District Court returned a verdict yesterday in favor of the Sanitary Can Company, a subsidiary of the American Can Company, in the suit for $300,000 damages brought by Charles P. Curtis and other trustees of the Boston Dairy Company. It was alleged that a consignment of cans sent to the plaintiff company's factory contained soldering fluid and thereby made the milk unfit for use.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Agriculture that Pays.

The extent to which Cuba and other cane growing countries have been benefited by the high level of sugar prices was indicated yesterday in news of the sale of two important sugar plantations received by the Federal Sugar Refining Company through its Havana agent. The plantations purchased were the Central "Conchita" of Matanzas and the Central "Asumcion" of Pinar del Rio, both of which were owned by Juan Pedro Bero, a wealthy Cuban planter. The two plantations sold for $3,500,000 to a capitalist of Havana, who agreed to pay $1,800,000 in cash and the balance within a year. The "Conchita" is one of the show places of the island, well equipped with machinery and producing about 300,000 bags a year. The "Asuncion" produces about 50,000 bags, so that the price paid figures at $10 a bag for a normal crop.

Union Pacific in 1914-15.

Considering the many adverse conditions against which American railroads struggled last year, the preliminary report issued yesterday by the Union Pacific was regarded as very favorable. In the year ended June 30 it earned a surplus for the common stock of 10.98 per cent.,

THOMPSON REPEATS PACIFIC INTENTIONS

Assures Public Service Commissioners Legislators Don't Want to "Get" Anybody.

ENTITLED TO VACATION

Committee Adjourns to Sept. 7 After Again Advising That Fulton Street Work Be Stopped.

The Thompson Legislative Committee resumed its sessions in the offices of the Public Service Commission yesterday. Chairman McCall was not present. When Commissioner George V. S. Williams of Brooklyn was on the stand Senator Thompson said:

"We have not come down here to try controversies. We cannot try the questions that have arisen in relation to the rights of the people regarding third-tracking. We have no authority to do so, because it is a question between the property owners of Brooklyn and the railroad, or between the railroad and the Public Service Commission. We are not intent upon delving into the personal acts of the commission, but we endeavor to offer remedies, if we can, by calling public attention to these things which seem an injustice to the majority of the parties involved.

"In this case, when it appeared to us that the contracts did not contemplate the present type of construction or its increased costs and the question of whether the consents had not been validly obtained from the Fulton Street property owners, it seemed to us there was room for investigation."

Charles L. Woody, counsel for the B. R. T., said:

"Every consent was validly and legally procured. Only one man repudiated a consent and I wish to say that I am willing to lay all the consents held by the transit company before you and any other evidence you may deem necessary or desirable."

Commissioner Cram said that, while he had voted against the Fulton Street work when the contracts were drawn up, he thought the work ought to go on without interruption. Senator Thompson said that, under the circumstances, it was deemed the duty of the committee to call upon the Commissioners to explain their attitude and perhaps to show that even the property owners might be wrong.

"Yesterday we had a very illuminating explanation of the attitude of the commission when Judge McCall was on the stand, and we believe we have done our duty in calling the attention of the public to these matters," said Senator Thompson. "The commission understands the facts. It is up to the commission to act. We have now performed our whole duty in the matter. Chairman McCall says the city has outgrown the time when elevated railroads should be erected, and that it would seem that they should be erected only in dire necessity. But the public should be taken into account. It is entirely within the power of this commission to stop the work on the Fulton Street elevated or to suspend it while the courts pass upon it. I think personally that the commission should stop this work for a month or six weeks so as to give the courts time to settle the dispute. I give this advice as an individual. You know you have had a great deal more delay on other matters."

"Let me repeat," continued Senator Thompson, "that we are not here to get anybody. We have talked it over, and we feel that we are entitled to a vacation, and we therefore adjourn this hearing until Sept. 7, when we will reassemble in the rooms of the Bar Association. If any one has any criticism of the committee, let us hear it. We would be very glad to hear suggestions."

An engineer of the Public Service Commission made an informal statement following the adjournment. He said the installation of heavy girders on the Fulton Street structure was absolutely necessary, as the old structure was built to carry wooden cars, and would crumble under the weight of a train of all-steel cars of the type to be installed. He said the reinforced steel which the Fulton Street property owners desired would not stand the strain.

TREASURY FUNDS BY MAIL.

Department Will Save Much by Changing from Express.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Thousands of dollars annually spent on the transportation of money and securities between banks and the Treasury, will be deflected from the express companies to the Post Office after Aug. 16, according to an order just issued by Secretary McAdoo of the Treasury.

During the last twenty-five years money and securities have been sent by express and hundreds of thousands of dollars have been paid by the Government for this service. Mr. McAdoo and Postmaster General Burleson, who have been working on the problem for several months, believe that a great economy will be effected by the change.

The money and securities will be sent by registered mail and will be insured by private concerns, after bids. The department estimates that the banks, paying for registration, insurance, and postage will save, as compared with existing express charges, while the Government will save still more, as the postage will be covered by franw and registration will cost nothing.

The Government entered into an arrangement with the United States Express Company for this service in 1889. The contract has been modified twice, the final rate being 20 cents per $1,000 to points on the lines, and from 35 cents to $1.50 to other points. The company went out of existence on June 30, 1914. Bids from other express companies were then invited, but they showed only a nominal reduction in rates.

New Fall Shoe Styles.

While women's black kid button and lace shoes, on high cut patterns stitched and piped with white, are selling fast and every factory is busy making them, many dealers are scouting for newer ideas for Fall. The result is that there is now a fair sprinkling of fancy colors being shown, such as all-bronze kid, all-ivory kid, plum blue and battleship gray. Many of these models are made on the gypsy pattern, while others are made with patent leather vamp and heel facing. There is some talk of bringing the wing tip back again for men's popular-priced shoes.

Burlap Prices a Little Firmer.

Cables received in this market from Calcutta yesterday told of a firmer tone to prices on burlap there, and there was a little stiffening of values here as a result, though no advances took place. Excepting on some of the narrow light-weight goods there has not been a great deal of business reported for the last few days, and prices quoted yesterday were largely nominal. Better business is looked for, however, if the hardening of prices at Calcutta is productive of actual advances here. These prices, which were more or less nominal, were quoted here yesterday on spot burlaps and merchandise to arrive in the near future, all o fthem being on forty-inch goods: 7⅛-ounce, 5.85@5.90c; 8-ounce, 5.95@6c; 10-ounce, 7.65, and 10½-ounce, 7.75c.

England Is Stocking Gibraltar.

Manifests of vessels leaving this port for Gibraltar show that the British War Office is drawing heavily on this country for supplies of all kinds for the troops composing the garrison of the world's greatest fortress. One vessel recently reported by the Custom House carried tobacco, in different forms, valued at $26,636. In detail this consignment was manifested as follows: 129 hogsheads, valued at $15,439; 93,864 pounds manufactured tobacco, worth $7,807, and 162 cases, valued at $3,399. Bacon was manifested at $17,724, and flour at $12,000. The same steamer carried Canadian flour worth $7,296. In addition, the manifest showed 26,600 pounds of lard and compound lard, besides typewriters, engines, lamp goods, sausage, and lubricating oil.

Raw Cocoa Prices Steady.

While the seasonal dullness is not adding anything to the strength of prices in the local market for raw cocoa, the export business that is being done from day to day is keeping the market more or less steady. The difficulty in securing tonnage is one of the chief problems which has to be faced by the exporters, but this is said to be a bit less difficult now than was the case some time ago. Higher freight rates are also hampering business some, but for the most part the European consumers of cocoa appear to want it badly enough to pay any reasonable price for it. Stocks in this market are fairly liberal now, but prices are not being depressed because of the lack of selling pressure by holders. Quotations ranged yesterday from 13¼@13⅜c for cocoa from Hayti to 19@19¼c for the Maracaibo product.

Hard Coal Still Inactive.

The Coal Trade Journal will say today that the anthracite situation can be summed up with the statement that shippers have many expectations, but few orders. Delayed buying on the part of the consuming public, which has been responsible for the extreme dullness of the last two or three months, is sure to be followed by a compensating rush for tonnage later on, but even the first faint signs of such a development have not appeared as yet. The closing days of July brought in a scattering of small replenishing orders from retailers, but that was all. Today the demand is just as light as it was a month ago. The bituminous trade runs along from week to week without making much headway and without losing any ground. Whatever change there may be is in the volume of tonnage moving under contract, and not in the spot demand.

American Toys in the Far East.

American toy manufacturers, according to Consul General George E. Anderson, stationed at Hongkong, China, seem to have an increasing trade in Far Eastern ports. German and Austrian toys, which have long dominated the Eastern markets, are being shut out at present, with the result that Japan and the United States have the field very largely to themselves. Japanese imitations of the cheap German and Austrian toys are sold in considerable quantities, though they are usually too cheap and flimsy to hold the market long, even in such cheap goods. American toys are expensive, and their sale is comparatively limited for that reason, but they reach the fine trade, and for the present, at least, are increasing in popularity and in volume.

Chance for Durable Fabrics.

With representative retail clothiers asking that better wearing quality be given in the clothing they buy, a manufacturer in the trade said yesterday that the time is opportune for the mills to bend their efforts toward making more durable cloths. "The selling agents may argue," this man said, "that if we want better fabrics we can get them by paying enough, but I don't think it should be necessary to pay an exorbitant price for a good piece of cloth. The trouble is that too much attention has been devoted lately to styling a fabric, to the detriment of its quality. Even in the lightweight suitings that we have practically the year around, it would be possible, through the use of better worsted stock, to make a long-wearing cloth. With the finer grades of wool not proportionately as high priced as the medium and low grades, I think the mills should make more of a feature of the wearing quality of their product."

Surprised at the Imports.

Customs officials said yesterday that it was surprising how imports keep up at this port, notwithstanding the difficulties experienced by merchants in getting goods from abroad, particularly Europe. Another puzzling feature of the situation is the comparatively small volume of goods being taken by importers from bonded warehouses. That the withdrawals are so small after a year of war is interpreted in Customs circles as an indication that stocks here in certain lines cannot be as short as some in the trade claim. This belief, of course, makes due allowance for merchandise that is not seasonable at this time. Yesterday's receipts from duties on imports, as reported by Special Deputy Stuart, amounted to $735,616, of which only $31,439 represented duties paid on withdrawals. Mr. Stuart said the day's receipts would be regarded as "good," even under normal conditions of trade.

Disapprove Controller's Ruling.

Representatives of leading manufacturing and exporting interests in this city, as well as of associations concerned with foreign trade problems, yesterday deprecated the action of Controler Downey, of the Treasury Department, in holding that the law creating the Federal Trade Commission prohibits the expenditure of any part of the commission's appropriation for publications unless specially authorized by Congress. Chairman Davies of the commission has been desirous of purchasing various books dealing with the subject of foreign export combinations, in order to supplement the evidence taken during the last two months in commercial centres of this country, as the commission has found sentiment generally in favor of domestic export combinations being authorized here. Local trade representatives feel that nothing should be done to block the commission in arriving at a definite conclusion as to whether domestic export combinations are to be authorized in this country, as, in their opinion, there is no time to lose.

Gray Goods Showed Little Life.

There was pretty much the same story to tell in the local gray goods market yesterday. Business was confined almost entirely to orders for goods wanted right away, and there was not much of it. Prices, however, seemed a bit stronger on the surface, and several of the commission houses were firmer in their views concerning contracts. For instance, certain houses are refusing 8¾ cents for spot 38½-inch 64-60s and will not consider selling them past Oct. 1 at less than 4 cents. On the other hand, spot 39-inch 80 squares, which are more or less nominally quoted at 5¾ cents, can be had in limited quantities at an eighth off that figure. Sheetings and drills did not show much feature during the day, nor did fancies. Nominal spot prices on staple printcloths were:

TELL VALUE OF ADVERTISING

Display Men Find It a Valuable Asset in Their Efforts.

Increased attendance marked the second day's sessions of the convention of the International Association of Display Men at the Waldorf-Astoria yesterday.

C. J. Potter, President of the association, introduced J. A. McNabb of Richard Hall & Son, Peterboro, Canada, President of the Canadian Association of Display Men, who spoke on "The Show Window as a Sales Promoter." Mr. McNabb told of the kind of show windows and advertising he uses, and explained why some displays pay more than others. He also described the kind of publicity used in Canada and what it produces in cash advertising value. Fred Pratt of Dinet, Nachbour & Co., Joliet, Ill., President of the local association in that city, followed with a talk on "Efficiency, Organization and Co-operation." Mr. Pratt told in detail how the display men can benefit themselves and their calling by forming local organizations. He also said advertising was a most valuable asset to display men.

The afternoon session was devoted to practical talks and demonstrations on various phases of the display art by well known men connected with leading retail establishments. The display experts emphasized the latest ideas in the showing of goods by fixtures and charts arranged on the stage of the room. Among the demonstrators were Walter F. Weiner, Display Manager for Brill Bros.; J. M. W. Yost of the Penn Traffic Store, Johnstown, Penn.; John W. Witsil of Brentano's; E. Dudley Pierce, Display Manager for the Sibley, Lindsay & Curr Company, Rochester, and William Krall, Display Manager for Lit Brothers, Philadelphia.

The two tickets put in the field for today's election include the following names: For President, A. J. Edgell and E. J. Berg; for First Vice President, E. D. Pierce and Art Lindbloom; for Second Vice President, L. A. Rogers and Edward Pierce; for Third Vice President, C. Friedman and L. A. Rogers; for Secretary, E. J. Berg and F. W. Hunsicker, and for Treasurer, F. S. Pratt and B. Cultus. As some of the persons named on the opposing tickets are up for election to different positions in the association, the situation is regarded as rather complex.

CITY GETS OFFER TO RUN BRIDGE CARS

Three-Cent Line Would Like to Operate on the Williamsburg Span.

ASKS TEN-YEAR CONTRACT

At End of That Period the City Would Own Cars, Tracks, Depot, and Elevators, Proposal Says.

Officers of the Manhattan Bridge Three-Cent Line announced yesterday their willingness to operate cars across the Williamsburg Bridge. In a letter to Bridge Commissioner Kracke, Frederick W. Rowe, President of the Three-Cent Line, submitted a proposal which may end the controversy which the Bridge Commissioner is having with the B. R. T. regarding the question of rates.

New cars and a depot under the Brooklyn end of the bridge, and the installation of elevator service at the Brooklyn anchorage to hoist passengers, are some of the main points in the proposal the company makes to establish a local bridge service. The line purposes to divide with the city all profits over 6 per cent. after an appropriate sum has been laid aside each year for ten years to amortize the investment; then all the properties are to pass to the city free and clear.

This is the second proposal received by Commissioner Kracke since it became known that the present contract with the B. R. T. and the New York City Railways Company is about to be terminated. The first proposal made by the Third Avenue Railway Company has been sent to the Board of Estimate, before which Commissioner Kracke has laid all the negotiations for drawing up a new contract.

President Rowe said in his letter to Commissioner Kracke:

"The city owns the bridge, the city owns the tracks on the bridge, and it ought to own the cars and the car barn, so that the entire equipment could be leased upon terms giving the city appropriate compensation, or, in the alternative, operated by the Commissioner of Bridges himself."

"With these thoughts in mind the Board of Directors have authorized me to open negotiations for a contract covering the local operation of cars on the Williamsburg Bridge. We would undertake to provide modern new cars, much larger than those now in use, capable of seating forty-eight persons each, and sufficient in number to carry the passenger traffic comfortably; we would undertake further to erect a car barn in the immediate vicinity of the bridge with a modern equipment sufficiently commodious to house all the cars necessary for the proposed operation; we would undertake further to install elevator service at the Brooklyn end of the bridge at or near the anchorage, between Kent and Wythe Avenues, so that the vast army of factory employes, male and female, employed near the water front who are compelled to utilize this bridge in going to and coming from their work may be be saved the long walk which they now have to take.

"With a ten-year contract for the local bridge operation we would provide this investment in its entirety and ask only 6 per cent. income upon the same, dividing equally with the city all surplus profits after an appropriate sum has been laid aside to amortize the investment. At the termination of this contract these properties, cars, car barn, and elevator, having thus been amortized, would pass to the city as its property free and clear, leaving the city in a position to enter into a new contract at that time having in its possession a road fully equipped and ready for service."

Commissioner Kracke will lay the proposal before the Board of Estimate at its next meeting.

NEW MATTHEWS STORE HEAD

Leo A. Price Reported to be Negotiating for Brooklyn Concern.

The dry goods house of A. D. Matthews' Sons, Inc., one of the oldest in Brooklyn, will soon pass to the management of Leo A. Price, President of the Price & Rosenbaum store in Broadway, Williamsburg, it was reported yesterday, when it became known that the Matthews firm had filed an offer to settle with its creditors at 30 per cent. The report said that Mr. Price had offered to advance the funds which will make possible the reorganization of the company.

With the offer was filed a schedule showing nominal assets of $1,642,290, and liabilities of $1,477,159.

The creditors will meet within two weeks to vote on the offer.

MORE SHIPS VISIT NEW YORK

Tonnage, However, Falls Off Because of the War.

During the year ending July 31, 1915, the net increase in the number of vessels entering the Port of New York from foreign ports, as compared with the year ending July 31, 1914, was 465, the total number being 5,243 and 1,778, respectively.

The following nationalities increased in the number of vessels arriving here: American, 480; Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish, 317; Dutch, 171; Italian, 71; all others, 16. The nations which decreased were German, 564; British, 14, and French, 12.

Although there is an increase in the number of vessels there is a large decrease in the tonnage of the port on account of teh loss of the German trade and the withdrawal of the larger British and French vessels.

COMMODITIES MARKET.

WHEAT.

Underlying sentiment in the wheat market was bearish, notwithstanding numerous factors which might be looked upon as likely to bring about higher prices, and, after an early upturn of 1 to 1¼c, the market eased off and closed at ⅛ to ⅜c net lower. In the local cash market No. 2 red Winter wheat was quoted at $1.18 and No. 2 hard, $1.21½, cost, insurance, and freight, New York; No. 1 Northern Duluth, $1.12, cost, insurance, and freight, Buffalo.

CORN.

The lower temperatures with further rains over a large part of the corn belt were not considered favorable for the new crop, and early in the day the market was firm, with a fairly active demand. Receipts at primary points were somewhat larger than a week ago, however, and late in the day values eased off under liquidation prompted somewhat by the break in wheat, and closing prices were net unchanged to ⅛c lower. In the local cash market No. 2 yellow corn was quoted at 91½c, prompt shipment, and Argentine corn at 73¾c, cost, insurance, and freight, New York.

OATS.

The continued unfavorable weather for harvesting and moving the new oats crop caused active covering on the part of shorts, and prices during the day were firm in face of the decline in wheat and corn, closing at ½c to 1c net higher. The local cash market was easy; standard quoted at 64c; No. 2 white, 64½c; No. 3 white, 63¾c; No. 4 white, 63c; fancy clipped white, 66½@67½c; ordinary clipped white, 65@66c, all elevator.

PROVISIONS.

The market for hog products was steady at the opening owing to a firmer tone to the market for live hogs, but the monthly statement of stocks showed larger supplies than anticipated and the market gave way under renewed selling pressure. Receipts of hogs at Chicago were 12,000 head; estimated for Wednesday, 23,000. Kansas City received 7,000 and Omaha 7,500 head.

SUGAR.

The market for sugar futures was more active, total sales amounting to 4,050 tons, but the undertone was unsettled as the trade was inclined to await developments in connection with the European demand for refined sugar. At the opening of the market prices were irregular, ranging from a point advance to 7 points decline, and after showing some steadiness on moderate buying for foreign account, values gave way under liquidation, and at the close were 4 to 8 points net lower.

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts for week, 68,068 packages; last week, 78,799 packages; exports for week to tropical countries, 95 packages; imports for week, 176 packages. The market has been weakened on most grades of creamery butter, though at the lower prices more inquired there is a better inquiry and a steadier feeling on all descriptions. Receipts are liberal, and there has been some difficulty in readily placing stock in local storage warehouses, especially by outside dealers who had no space engaged. This has increased the pressure to sell. The lower grades of butter continue to sell unevenly, declining to weakness on packing stock and ladles at the close. Creamery, extras, (92 score,) 25c; higher scoring, 25½@26c; firsts, 23¾@24½c; seconds, 22@23c; thirds, 21@21½c; State dairy, finest, 24½c; good to prime, 23@24c; common to fair, 20@22½c; renovated, extras, 23¼c; firsts, 22@23c; lower grades, 20@21c; imitation creamery, extra firsts, 22@22½c; ladles, current make, firsts, 20½@21c; seconds, 19½c; lower grades, 18@19c; packing stock, June make, finest, 20c; current make, No. 2, 19c; lower grades, 17@17½c.

EGGS.—Receipts for week, 87,029 cases. Arrivals have continued on a liberal scale for the season, and the market has been in a very unsatisfactory condition. There is none scarcity of very high grade stock containing a large proportion of new-laid quality, and for such values are sustained, but the supply of average prime and lower grade has exceeded the demand, and the extreme hot weather lately prevailing has caused very strong pressure to sell, since there is no adequate storage room available to take care of the surplus. Prices rule weak and in buyers' favor for the great bulk of the supply. The great part of the Western goods arriving has been selling in a range of 16@20c, very largely at 18@18c, poor lots ranging down to 14c, and only a few of the very finest Northern selections selling at the higher quotations. Near-by white eggs are in light supply and fancy qualities are rather short of requirements, leaving some improvement and a firm tone at the close. Fresh gathered, extras, per dozen, 28@25c; extra firsts, 21@22½c; firsts, 18@20c; seconds, 16@17½c; nearby, mixed colors, 24½@25c; dirties, No. 1, 15@15½c; No. 2 and poorer, 10@14c; checks, choice, dry, 14c; fair to good, 13@13½c; culls and inferior, 8@12½c; State, Penn., and near-by, henery whites, fine to fancy, 29@30c; ordinary to good, 26@28c; gathered whites, as to size and quality, 22@28c; Western, gathered whites, 22@ 25c; State, Penn., and near-by, henery browns, 24@26c; gathered brown and mixed colors, 18@22½c; duck eggs, State and nearby, Indian Runner, 24@26c.

THE REAL ESTATE FIELD.

Cafe Boulevard on Second Avenue Sold and Will Give Way for Apartment House—$300,000 Upper Manhattan Investment —Professor Goetze of Columbia Buys Residence.

Interesting features in the realty market yesterday were the announcement of the purchase of the old Cafe Boulevard on Second Avenue and Tenth Street, by a syndicate for improvement with an apartment house, and the sale of a new apartment on Fort Washington Avenue representing about $300,000.

The old Cafe Boulevard, which has been a historic landmark in the lower Second Avenue section for many years, has been purchased by the Volkian Realty Corporation of which Jacob I. Berman is Secretary. It was bought from the Poughkeepsie Savings Bank which acquired it a short time ago at foreclosure proceedings from the Rosenfeld Realty Company which conducted the celebrated restaurant there until about two years ago.

The property includes several old buildings at the southeast corner of Second Avenue and Tenth Street, fronting 66.1 on the avenue by 125 on the street. The main building at 156 Second Avenue had a frontage of 39.6 feet. When Mr. Rosenfeld left the place to open his new restaurant under the old name in the Continental Hotel, southeast corner of Broadway and Forty-first Street, the old Second Avenue resort was continued for a while under different management, but it failed of success.

Notice has been given to the few tenants in the buildings to vacate this month and early September work will be started on the erection of a six-story elevator apartment house covering the entire site. It is expected to be ready about April 1, next year. The property is assessed at $122,500, of which $87,500 represents the land value.

$300,000 Upper Manhattan Investment.

The upper Manhattan district furnished an excellent investment deal in the sale of the new six-story apartment house known as the Chesbourne at 91 Fort Washington Avenue, northwest corner of 162nd Street. The building covers a plot 102.3 by 140 and was sold by the firm of George H. Chivvis for the Hilliard Construction Company of which Irving Judis is President. It contains suites of four to seven rooms and is fully rented. The holding price was $300,000. It is assessed at $235,000, of which $75,000 is land value. The buyer was represented by B. H. Weisker. Charles F. Miller conducted the negotiations for the office of George H. Chivvis.

The new apartment on the northwest corner of the same avenue and 161st Street was recently sold by the same building company to W. Bourke Cockran.

Prof. Goetze Buys Heights Residence.

Professor Frederick A. Goetze of Columbia University has purchased the four-story residence at 455 West 141st Street, on plot 18 by 99.11, between Convent and Amsterdam Avenues. It was purchased from Mrs. Julia Picken, who took in part payment a residence on 225th Street, near Bronxwood Avenue, in the east section of the Bronx.

Garage Company Buys Site.

The Monmouth Garage Company has purchased from the Bowery Savings Bank, a plot 50 by 100, at 226 and 228 East Fifty-fourth Street, between Second and Third Avenues. A four-story garage will be erected on the site by the buyers. Edgar A. Manning and the Douglas Robinson Charles S. Brown Company negotiated the sale.

Broadway Corner at Auction for $300,000.

Conspicuous among the auction offerings in the Vesey Street Salesrooms was the six-story commercial building at 428 to 432 Broadway, southeast corner of Howard Street, sold at foreclosure to recover judgments, with taxes, aggregating over $338,000. It was sold by Joseph P. Day and was bought in by the plaintiffs, Richard H. Swartout and others, for $300,000. The action was brought against Blaize L. Harsell and others.

Investor Buys Tenement.

John T. Wall has sold for Mrs. Rosalie Hesslein 84 Amsterdam Avenue, a five-story tenement, 25 by 100, with two stores, to William H. Gentzlinger for investment.

Bronx Sales.

The Marvin Realty Company has sold to Lazarus Levy a plot 52 by 93 on the southwest corner of 166th Street and Washington Avenue. A three-story building with stores will be erected on the site by the buyer. M. R. Lawrence represented the seller.

The E. A. Polak Brokerage Company has sold for a client to W. T. Jones the four-story flat at 1,085 Daly Avenue on plot 31 by 80 and for Willy Ehrenhaus the one-family house at 939 Courtlandt Avenue on plot 26 by 96 to James Monahan.

Manhattan Builder Buys Brooklyn Plot.

Tutino & Cerny have sold for Anthony Huber to a Manhattan builder the plot 40 by 100 on the northwest corner of Fourth Avenue and Sixty-first Street, Brooklyn. The builder will improve the site with a sixteen-family apartment house with stores.

Brooklyn.

The Royal Castle, a six-story apartment house at the southwest corner of Gates and Clinton Avenues, has been exchanged for thirty-one six-family dwellings on Graham, Thirteenth and Fourteenth Avenues. Levey & Baird and the H. V. Realty Company, respectively, were the principals in the transaction. The Royal Castle houses 186 families and rents approximately for $10 a room. It occupies a plot 77.6 by 125 and has entrances from both Clinton Avenue and Gates Avenue. The dwellings in Long Island City are 20 by 35 by 100 each and semi-detached.

Wholesale Firm Leases Old Brooks Building.

The lessee of the old Brooks Brothers building on the southeast corner of Broadway and Twenty-second Street is the firm of Campbell, Metzger & Jacobson, manufacturers and importers of linen novelties and embroidery, now at 446 to 450 Broadway and 832 Broadway. The firm has taken from Brooks Brothers, who moved this week to their new home at Madison Avenue and Forty-fourth Street, the unexpired term of their long lease made about thirty years ago from the Fane estate. The original lease aggregated about $57,000 a year, but the sub-lease represents between $33,000 and $35,000, indicating the deterioration of leasehold values in the old Twenty-third Street retail centre. L. Tanenbaum, Strauss & Co. were the brokers.

New West End Avenue Hotel Lease.

Plans have been filed for a twelve-story apartment hotel at 328 and 330 West End Avenue, between Seventy-fifth and Seventy-sixth Streets, on plot 35 by 160, owned by Mrs. Lillian M. Soresi. The cost is placed at $147,000 by the architect, R. M. Farrington. Negotiations are pending for leasing the projected building to the Hotel Willard Company, of which Arthur T. Hardy is President, and which conducts the Hotel Willard at 252 West Seventy-sixth Street, and the Hotel Lucerne at Amsterdam Avenue and Seventy-ninth Street.

Commercial Leases.

Frederick Fox & Co. have leased for the Mutual Profit Coupon Corporation, David Schulte, President, who recently leased the old Mark Cross Building, 210 Fifth Avenue to 1,182 Broadway, the fourth to the tenth floors in that building for a term of years to a client who will alter them into lofts for mercantile purposes. The Mutual Profit Coupon Corporation will occupy the lower floors.

William A. White & Sons, in conjunction with Frederick Zittel & Sons, have rented the store at 114 Nassau Street to Kaiser & Co., cravats.

The Douglas Robinson, Charles S. Brown Company, in conjunction with Harris & Vaughan, have leased the store and basement at 1 East Forty-sixth Street to Mueller-Graves, Inc.

Private Dwellings Leased.

Harris & Vaughan, Inc., have leased for William Fellows Morgan, Jr., to Linzee Blagden, a three-story and basement residence on Murray Hill at 264 Lexington Avenue.

Pease & Elliman have leased the five-story American basement dwelling, 20 by 100 feet, at 63 East Eighty-second Street, between Madison and Park Avenues, for Francis Livingston to Newell W. Tilton.

N. Brigham Hall & William D. Bloodgood, Inc., leased for Maude E. Hall, for a term of years, the four-story dwelling 160 East Thirty-seventh Street, to the German Governesses' Home Association, now located at 235 East Sixtieth Street.

Cruse & Co. have leased for Dr. George L. Megargee the four-story and basement dwelling 1 East 124th Street to Marie A. Deutsch.

Tenements Leased.

Schindler & Liebler have leased for Gustav Frank the two four-story tenements at 188 and 190 East Seventy-fifth Street to John Mohl.

$100,000 Bronx Theatre.

Plans for a $100,000 theatre, to be erected on a plot 90 by 148 on the northwest corner of Morris Avenue and Fordham Road, were filed yesterday by H. U. Singhi. J. C. Crocker is the architect.

Real Estate Notes.

The Douglas Robinson, Charles S. Brown Company has been appointed agent for the new Western Union Building, now in course of construction at the northwest corner of Broadway and Dey Street. The building will be ready for occupancy April 1, 1916.

Title to the dwelling at 60 East Seventy-ninth Street was conveyed yesterday by Caroline A. Wilson, for a nominal consideration, to Alice L. Harlan. It is a four-story and basement house, on lot 17 by 102.2, between Park and Madison Avenues.

EDUCATION NOTES.

The Committee on High and Training Schools has recommended that provision be made for scholarships in industrial art. It has been suggested that $3,000 be appropriated for this purpose.

School courtyards will be opened every week day except Saturday, from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M., as playgrounds for the children. On Saturdays the hours will be from 9 A. M. to noon. Janitors will be responsible for seeing that damage is not done to the buildings.

There are now seventy-six vacancies for teachers of shop work, forty for teachers of cooking, and ten for teachers of physical training.

In the Vocational School for Boys in West 138th Street new rooms will be opened at the beginning of the Fall term, and there will be new activities, including electric sign flash lighting and operating, sign painting, commercial photography, and show-card writing.

The Committee on Special Schools has recommended that provision be made for a class at the Brooklyn Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. The services of one teacher, at $720 a year, will be required.

$20,000 SUIT REVEALS J.S. FOSTER'S DIVORCE

Lillian Benson Complains of Bowery Bank President's Failure to Wed Her.

SAYS FATHER IS A BISHOP

His Answer Recites That He Made a Settlement with Present Plaintiff for $1,700.

Jay Stanley Foster, President of the Bowery Savings Bank, and Vice President of the Bank of Babylon, L. I., has been sued in the Supreme Court here for $20,000 by Miss Lillian Benson of Colorado Springs, Col., and this city, who fixes that sum as representative of damage she has suffered through the bank President's failure to keep his alleged promise to marry her. Miss Benson is said to be the daughter of a Bishop who makes his home at Colorado Springs.

Secrecy has been thrown around the suit, the first papers in which were filed in the County Clerk's office on March 8. Since then additional papers have been filed, some in April, and others in June.

It also came to public notice for the first time yesterday that Foster was divorced three years ago from Mrs. Jennie Rice Morgan Foster, granddaughter of the founder of the Morgan Line of steamships. Society had talked of the estrangement of the couple, but had not suspected that a divorce suit had been tried and decided and filed away among the court records.

Miss Benson's complaint recites that she first met Mr. Foster at a social gathering in January, 1913, and that almost immediately thereafter he proposed to her. She alleges, too, that he set the day for their wedding, but it was postponed from time to time. Finally she grew impatient, she says, and in July last year insisted that he marry her soon.

"I waited a reasonable time for him to fulfill his promise," Miss Benson says in her complaint, "and when in July of last year he grew indifferent and cold to me, I consulted friends, and they advised me to bring suit."

Mr. Foster, through the law firm of Hardy, Stancliffe & Whitaker of 165 Broadway, filed an answer to the suit, in which he denies the allegations, and makes a separate and distinct defense in that he paid Miss Benson $1,700 in consideration for which she signed a general release, freeing him from any obligation to her.

Miss Benson has not replied in legal form to this answer, although her lawyer, W. Bernard Vause of 15 Broad Street, said yesterday that it was his opinion the release would not stand the test of the courts.

It was when this failure of Miss Benson to reply to the defendant's answer came before Justice Weeks yesterday that the facts became public. Mr. Stancliffe appeared before the Justice in Special Term of the Supreme Court and asked that judgment in his client's favor be granted on the ground that Miss Benson was in default of a Supreme Court order directing her to reply within twenty days of the signing of the order. This order was granted in June.

Justice Weeks, however, put the motion over until Thursday in order to give Mr. Vause time to get his papers into shape and be ready for argument.

Mr. Foster was seen yesterday at his offices in the Bowery Bank, the Presidency of which he succeeded to upon the death of his father, John S. Foster. He referred the reporter to his lawyer, Mr. Stancliffe.

"The suit is not causing my client any worry," said the lawyer when asked for a statement.

Miss Benson could not be found yesterday. She was said to be out of town.

ABSENT GIRL ON HONEYMOON

Mother Gets Telegram and License Clerk and Pastor Verify It.

Special to The New York Times.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Aug. 3.—The disappearance of Helen A. McCaffery, 18 years old, was explained this afternoon when her mother, Mrs. Elizabeth McCaffery, received a telegram from Boynton, Mass., telling of her daughter's marriage to Arthur W. Healy of this city. The telegram said the ceremony was performed on Sunday night by the Rev. William B. Hamilton of Westminster Hope Memorial Church here.

City Clerk John A. Kenah said Miss McCaffery and Healy came to his home shortly after midnight Sunday morning for a license. At 11:30 Sunday night they visited Dr. Hamilton's parsonage and were told to wait till twenty-four hours had passed after the granting of the license.

After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Healy started on a honeymoon through New England and Canada.

Mrs. McCaffery said her only objection to the marriage was her daughter's youth, but there was nothing for her to do but forgive them both.

HEADACHE VICTIM A SUICIDE.

Mrs. Frank Brown of Hartford Drowns in Delaware River.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTAGUE TOWNSHIP, N. J., Aug. 3.—Mrs. Frank Brown of Hartford, Conn., was found drowned early today in the Delaware River, after she had slipped from her husband's side in their room at the Pine Cliff Inn and gone out alone in a boat. It is believed she was made insane by severe headaches, from which she was a chronic sufferer. She was 60 years old.

Mr. Brown awoke at 4 o'clock to find his wife had gone. As all the doors were locked, it is concluded she jumped out of the window of the room, which is on the second floor. One of the boats was found missing, and a search of the river was begun. Within an hour the body was found, thirty feet from shore. Several married daughters survive the drowned woman.

TRIO CAUGHT AFTER HOLDUP

They Shot an Ice Dealer Who Wouldn't Open His Safe.

Salvatore Calavita, who conducts an ice business at Park Avenue and 179th Street, the Bronx, came back from dinner at his home at 1,924 Washington Avenue yesterday afternoon and found three men waiting in his shop.

"We've come for your money," they informed him; "all you've got."

Calavito told them he didn't have any, but they pointed to a safe in the corner and told him to open it. He tried to get past them, and one of them drew a revolver and shot him in the right arm.

The three fled. Policeman Nolan of the tremont Station chased one man into the basement of an apartment house, and caught him in the dumbwaiter. The other two took refuge in a basement and pointed a revolver at Morris Halpern of 3 Attorney Street, the leader of a crowd that had chased them. Dr. Francis Patton of 2,083 Washington Avenue, who had seen the chase from his window, came up with a revolver, and took one of the fugitives to the Tremont Station. Then Nolan, who had left his prisoner in charge of bystanders, came back and arrested the third man.

The prisoners said they were Michael Turroll, 302 East 110th Street; Joseph Patrisso, 504 East 120th Street, and John Arculeo of 2,192 Second Avenue. Calavito identified Patrisso as the man who had shot him. They were charged with felonious assault, attempted robbery, and attempted extortion. Calavito was taken to Fordham Hospital by Dr. Cusik. His injury was not serious.

It is said that Calavito had received letters demanding $500, but had thought they were sent by a practical joker.

Killed by a Truck in Rain.

While crossing Bleecker Street yesterday afternoon in the rain William H. Shack, who lived at the Mills Hotel, 160 Bleecker Street, slipped on the wet cobblestones and fell under the wheels of a truck owned by Johnson Brothers, lumbermen, 46 Classon Avenue, Brooklyn. A wheel passed over Shack's body, crushing in his ribs. He died later in St. Vincent's Hospital. No arrest was made.

BERLIN OFFERS TWO WAYS TO END THE FRYE DISPUTE

Willing to Let Experts Fix Indemnity or Submit Question to Hague Tribunal.

DENIES BREAKING TREATY

But Quotes Her Own Prize Court as Finding Her Liable for Destruction of Ship.

BRITISH PROBLEM CLEARING

Hints That Washington May Submit Grievances to an International Tribunal.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—The text of the latest note from Germany dealing with the destruction of the American sailing ship William P. Frye by the auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich, was made public by the State Department late this afternoon.

The real issue between the two Governments was what reparation must be made by the German Government for a breach of treaty obligations; and since that was not regarded by the United States Government as a question falling within the jurisdiction of a prize court, the German Government on June 22 was asked to settle the claim by direct diplomatic negotiations, outside of the prize court. In the note given out today Herr von Jagow, the German Foreign Minister, after refusing to accept the American view that the destruction of the Frye constituted a violation of Article XIII. of the Prussian-American treaty of 1799, states that Germany has settled the case in the Hamburg prize court, except as to the determination of the amount of indemnity to be paid.

The note shows that the German prize court at Hamburg rendered its opinion on July 10. The prize court held:

First—That the cargo carried by the Frye, consisting of wheat consigned to order to a British port, was contraband.

Second—That the Frye could not be carried into a German port for adjudication, and that the sinking was, therefore, justified.

Third—That the stipulations of the Prussian-American treaty of 1799, which provides that Germany must pay for interference with American vessels carrying contraband, are valid, and the sinking of the Frye and its cargo, so far as American property is involved, makes the German Government liable for indemnity.

No Indemnity Fixed.

The prize court did not fix the amount of the indemnity on the ground that it had no data before it to make such a decision, the interested parties not having furnished necessary details during the trial. The German Government proposes to settle these points in a different way. It suggests that each of the two Governments designate an expert, these two experts jointly to fix the amount of indemnity to be paid. This payment is not to be made for "violation" of the treaty of 1799, but as a "duty or policy" founded on the existing treaty stipulations.

If this method of settlement is not satisfactory to the United States Government, then it is proposed by Germany that the differences between the two Governments be submitted to arbitration at The Hague. The German note leaves the points of differences between the United States and Germany over the interpretation of the treaty of 1799 unsettled, and offers the United States the alternative of accepting the German proposal or accepting arbitration.

TEXT OF THE NOTE.

Following is the text of the note:

Ambassador Gerard to the Secretary of State.

Telegram No. 2,636.
American Embassy.
Berlin, July 30, 1915.

Following note received:

Foreign Office.
Berlin, July 30, 1915.

The undersigned has the honor to inform his Excellency, Mr. James W. Gerard, Ambassador of the United States of America, in reply to the note of the 26th ultimo, Foreign Office No. 8,990, on the subject of the sinking of the American merchant vessel William P. Frye by the German auxiliary cruiser Prince Eitel Friedrich, that the points of view brought out in the note have been carefully examined by the Imperial German Government. This examination has led to the following conclusions:

The Government of the United States believes that it is incumbent upon it to take the position that the treaty rights to which America is entitled, as contained in Article 12 of the Prussian-American treaty of amity and commerce of Sept. 10, 1785, and in Article 13 of the Prussian-American treaty of amity and commerce of July 11, 1799, were violated by the sinking of the William P. Frye. It interprets these articles as meaning that a merchantman of the neutral contracting party carrying contraband cannot in any circumstances be destroyed by a ship of the belligerent contracting party, and that the sinking of the William P. Frye was, therefore, in violation of the treaty, even if her cargo should have consisted of contraband, which it leaves outside of the discussion.

The German Government cannot accept this view. It insists as heretofore that the commander of the German auxiliary cruiser acted in the legal exercise of the right of control of trade in contraband enjoyed by warships of belligerent nations, and that the treaty stipulations mentioned merely oblige the German Government to make compensation for the damage sustained by the American citizens concerned.

Cites London Declaration.

It is not disputed by th eAmerican Government that according to general principles of international law a belligerent is authorized in sinking neutral vessels under almost any conditions for carrying contraband. As is well known, these principles were laid down in Articles 49 and 50 of the Declaration of London, and were recognized at that time by the duly empowered delegates of all the nations which participated in the conference, including the American delegates, to be declarative of existing international law, (see preliminary clause of the Declaration of London;) moreover, at the beginning of the present war the American Government proposed to the belligerent nations to ratify the Declaration of London and give its provisions formal validity also.

The German Government has already

ITALIAN PRESS CALLS FOR WAR ON TURKEY

Says Patience With Provocations of Ottoman Government Has Reached the Limit.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Aug. 4.—The situation and incidents that preceded the outbreak of the Italo-Turkish war in 1911 are being duplicated daily in the form of provocation by Turkey and protests and impatience on the part of Italy.

The newspapers say openly that the limit of patience has been reached and that the time to take drastic action has arrived. Public opinion will approve any measure the military authorities decide to adopt.

For nearly a month a number of Italian Consuls in Turkey have been prevented from communicating with the Ambassador at Constantinople and their fate is unknown.

DOMINIONS TO HELP GOVERN THE EMPIRE

Bonar Law Hints at Reresentation in Parliament and Peace Councils.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—Andrew Bonar Law, Secretary for the Colonies, speaking at Folkstone tonight, said it was his belief that as a result of the war the time would come, and come soon, when the whole self-governing Dominions, in proportion to their population and resources, would take part in the duties of governing the British Empire.

It was already understood, he added, that when the time came for peace negotiations, the Dominions would have their say in those negotiations.

THREE REVOLUTIONS DISTRACT PORTUGAL

Army Is Completely Disorganized —Daily Clashes Between Royalists and Republicans.

LISBON, July 30, via Paris, Aug. 4, (delayed in transmission.)—Sensational and alarming reports are current in the capital of no fewer than three separate revolutions in Portugal. Riots and assaults are of daily occurrence.

Political feeling has completely disorganized the army, and clashes between the Royalists and the Republican supporters and other factions are frequent.

Yesterday a Quartermaster from the engineers' barracks shot and killed three Sergeants of his regiment and then committed suicide. The Sergeants were members of a secret society known as the "White Ants," and had denounced the Quartermaster as belonging to the Republican faction, which is accused of conspiring against the present Government.

ADRIATIC CARRIES BIGGEST WAR CARGO

Sails With 50 Aeroplanes, 200 Motor Trucks and 16,500 Tons of Munitions.

The decks of the White Star liner Adriatic were covered fore and aft with war material when she sailed for Liverpool yesterday. This material included fifty aeroplanes in cases and 200 motor trucks. She had 16,500 tons of war munitions in her holds and 288 passengers, of whom fifteen were American mechanics on their way to London. The Adriatic was to have sailed at noon, but rain delayed the loading of her cargo. Before the ship left her pier every motor truck was examined by detectives hired by the company and the cargo was carefully watched before being lowered in the hold. Here more detectives were on duty to see that the cargo was not tampered with before the hatches were put on. All baggage was opened on the pier and none but passengers were allowed on board the ship.

One of the officials of the pier said the Adriatic had the largest cargo of war munitions that had been taken out of this port. As the ship moved out into the river, firemen climbed on top of the aeroplane cases and shouted to their friends on the pier that there would be plenty of floats if they were torpedoed.

The Italian liner Europa sailed at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, for Naples, with a full cargo and 1,100 Italian reservists in the steerage. The men going home to fight had an enthusiastic sendoff from 800 of their compatriots, who went to the pier to see the ship leave.

Traffic by Land and Water in New York Halted — Jersey Crops Suffer.

ERIE, Penn., Aug. 4.—Erie had counted twenty-seven dead when darkness tonight drew a blanket over the mile-long wreckage-strewn path in the heart of the city followed by last night's flood. But very little impression was made on this vast amount of wreckage, piled in places 100 feet high and believed to conceal many more victims. It may take a week to turn over the debris.

The estimate of the property loss, early placed at $3,000,000, was not changed. Fire Chief McMahon estimated that 300 houses and fifty store buildings were razed by the waters of Mill Creek, sent out of its banks by a cloudburst and the bursting of the Glenwood dam.

There was again tonight a semblance of normal conditions in the city. The Lake Shore Railroad was able at noon to resume its through passenger service between New York and Chicago, thirty-five trains stalled in the outskirts of this city since early last night getting away.

One crowded train bound for New York was brought to a stand on the viaduct forty feet over Mill Creek, and those on board for hours watched houses and household goods swept down the torrent.

Light and power plants have resumed operations. Farmers throughout Northern Pennsylvania and Western New York breathed easier as the terrific rainstorm abated. It continued until daybreak, ruining crops, laying low orchards, and obliterating roads.

Thousands Besiege Morgues.

Three morgues in widely separated sections of the flood district were besieged by thousands of people throughout the day. Men, women, and children watched the searchers. As soon as a body was uncovered they would race for the morgue to which it was taken to find out if it was that of a loved one.

Among the identified dead are Anna Wiesbaur, Dad Allen, Mrs. Margaret Ruese, John Higgins, a printer; James Higgins, 17, son of John Higgins; Mrs. John Higgins and infant; Mrs. Cora Anderson Main, 28; Emma Osborne, 44; John Donovan, city fireman; Sweeney Anderson, 60; Katherine E. Carroll, and Thomas Langdon

The bodies of some of the victims were found a mile from the spot where they were caught by the rush of water, and it is considered likely that some were carried out into the lake.

This city went into mourning when it awoke to a full realization of the extent of the disaster. All the big department stores and other business houses on State Street were closed. The people opened their hearts and purses to the flood sufferers. Relief funds were started, charitable societies sent food, and the city authorities opened houses for those who had lost their own. Mayor Sterns issued a proclamation calling on the people to show their generosity in what he described as the worst disaster in the city's history.

The Mayor has announced that a thorough investigation of the disaster would be made, calling attention to the fact that warning of the danger from Mill Creek was given in 1893 when it overflowed its banks and caused loss of life.

Freaks of the Flood.

Great throngs crowded the banks of the ravine throughout the day. They saw many freaks of the flood. Automobiles were resting in treetops, apparently undamaged; houses were seen cast upon the hillside, with a wall of the dining room, perhaps, missing, but the table undisturbed. Great stone culverts were carried a whole block down the ravine by the flood.

The local company of the Sixteenth Infantry, National Guard, was brought to the scene today to help the police and firemen who were working in the debris, assisted by civilian volunteer corps. Twenty arrests were made in the flood area tonight, two for looting and the others for disorderly conduct. To guard against fires the gas supply was turned off. Inspectors of the local Health Department are co-operating with State Health Inspectors sent from Harrisburg to prevent an outbreak of disease in the devastated district.

Taking a girl from her home on the creek bank, at the height of the flood, Firemen Sherry and Bates started down the telephone pole which had enabled them to reach her, when the house fell against the pole and all three were swept into the swift current. A block further down, the three were rescued by other firemen.

Family of Four Perish.

One of the tragic features of the flood was the drowning of the family of John Higgins, 40, a printer. Higgins and his wife and two children were warned of the flood, but they refused to leave their home at Seventh and Holland Streets until too late, because of the illness of the baby, Marion, aged 13 months. Their bodies have been recovered.

Among the missing is L. D. Hopkins, who rescued many persons last night. He was pulled from the water exhausted three times, but returned each time to

PLAN FINAL APPEAL TO MEXICAN CHIEFS

Will Be Framed at Today's Conference of Seven Republics in Washington.

ALL NATIONS' VOICES EQUAL

Carranza to Have One More Chance to Join Movement to Establish Strong Government.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—On the principle of "All for one, one for all," the six Latin-American nations which have accepted the invitation of the United States to confer tomorrow on the Mexican situation will be asked to join this Government in the proposed effort to adjust conditions in Mexico.

The Governments of Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Bolivia, Uruguay, and Guatemala, whose diplomatic representatives will participate in the conference with Secretary Lansing, have already been informed that the United States views the Mexican situation as being a matter of as much concern to these Latin-American Governments as it is to the Washington Administration. In conformity with its belief in this principle, the six Governments of Central and South America are to be asked to act jointly and concurrently with the United States in an endeavor to establish an orderly central authority in Mexico.

There is a confident feeling here that the six nations will consent to cooperate with the United States, in the distinct understanding, suggested by this Government, that each of the seven nations concerned is to have an equal voice in the deliberations, and that none will seek any advantage in the settlement of Mexico's trouble.

Trying to Make Carranza Yield.

Strenuous efforts are being made by friends and agents of General Carranza to persuade him to become a party to the reiterated proposal of the United States, which is expected to be backed by the six Latin-American Governments that the factional leaders get together without delay and compose their differences. Carranza has been twice approached by American agents with a view to having him agree to this warning suggestion of the United States, but he has declined to show a favorable disposition.

Washington has heard a rumor for several days that Carranza is to be recognized as a result of the conference to be held at the State Department tomorrow, but it is believed this is based on erronous information. Carranza is to be asked to confer through representatives of the Villa and Zapata elements—a convention of these elements is likely to be suggested—with the object of selecting a Provisional President who will be installed in Mexico City and whose government will be given simultaneous recognition by the United States, Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Bolivia, Uruguay and Guatemalma.

From what is known of Carranzas attitude, he is expected to decline to accede to the plan proposed. In the event of final refusal by Carranza, the American Governments, which will be parties to tomorrow's conference, will probably proceed to deal with Villa and Zapata, and, if they agree on some man of character for Provisional President, preferably a member of the Madero Cabinet, their choice will be duly installed in power at some place most suitable for the capital at this time, if Carranza continues to offer armed resistance and remains in possession of Mexico City.

Arms Embargo Next Step.

The next step will be proclamations by the seven Governments, declaring an embargo on the shipment of arms and other munitions of war to any faction that may be opposing the recognized central authority in Mexico. In this way the Carranza movement, granted that Carranza continues to resist, will be deprived of war supplies, while the Provisional Government will be able to get all the arms and ammunition that it needs.

There is no thought of armed intervention on the part of the United States. This Government has considered that phase of the situation, and it has been agreed by the President and his Cabinet that armed intervention was the last thing to be undertaken. The possibility of armed intervention is too remote, in the opinion of those informed as to the American plan, to justify any concern on that score at this time. The six Latin-American countries understand this.

It is not certain, however, that the question of agreeing on a plan to send an armed column to Vera Cruz for the purpose of keeping open the railroad between that place and Mexico City with the object of insuring the delivery of food supplies to the starving people of the capital, will be eliminated from consideration at the conference.

Had the conference taken place a few days ago that matter would have been brought forward for serious discussion. But the railroad line is now open and the Carranza Government seems to be making an effort to utilize it for the transportation of food. Should this condition continue the United States Government would be disposed not to press for decision by the several nations concerend, the question of sending troops to Mexico to relieve the destitution prevailing in the capital.

No Force Without Conferees' Consent.

But Secretary Lansing, it is believed, may make some statement on the subject at tomorrow's meeting in order to make clear that the United States is willing, should the necessity arise to use force for the sake of humanity. In the event of the use of force, this Government would be prepared to furnish all the troops required, but it would not undertake an expedition against Mexico City without the approval of Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Bolivia, Uruguay, and Guatemala.

Paul Fuller of New York, who was one of the agents sent to Mexico by President Wilson, had a conference with Secretary Lansing today. Mr. Fuller will be present at the meeting tomorrow. It became known today that Mr. Fuller had been actively engaged lately in endeavoring to persuade the factional leaders in Mexico to heed President Wilson's warning that they must compose their differences and set up an orderly government.

Tomorrow's conference has attracted several prominent Mexicans to Washington. Among those who arrived to-

CLERK USES AUTO TO STEAL $22,000

Volunteers to Bring Booth & Flinn's Payroll from Bank and Disappears.

LEAVES CAR AT SUBWAY

Gets Rid of Companion by Sending Him for a Draft—Man of Exemplary Habits.

The cashier of the Booth & Flinn Corporation, Limited, which is a joint contratcor with the O'Rourke Engineering Construction Company in the building of the $20,000,000 subway tunnels under the East River, was preparing to go from the offices of the firms at 17 Battery Place at 10 o'clock yesterday morning to draw money from the Liberty National Bank, 139 Broadway, for the payroll, when Edward C. Kindred, timekeeper and sometimes assistant cashier, stopped him, and said:

"I'll get the money for you. I've got my own car outside, and it will take me only a few minutes to get to the bank and back. Besides, this is no kind of weather for you to risk your health."

For several days the cashier had been ill, and yesterday he reached the office, through the storm, with his clothing soaked.

"All right, Kindred, go on," he agreed. "I'll send Sddy Barry to help you care for the money."

The contractors' check for $22,119.70, with which to get cash to pay the subway diggers, was handed to Kindred. In his own automobile, which he had recently bought, the money was placed, after the bank tellers had put it in a big black valise. As Kindred and Barry got into the car Kindred took $10.80 from his pocket, which he handed to Barry, requesting him to return and buy a cashier's draft.

"I want to mail the draft for a small purchase I expect from out of town," Kindred remarked. It was then a few minutes after the bank had opened. Ten minutes later, when Barry emerged from the bank, Kindred and the car were gone. Barry went around the corner to Cedar Street, thinking Kindred might have turned the car out of the Broadway traffic to wait for him there. Not seeing anything of him after a wait of ten minutes, Barry telephoned to the office. He was told that Kindred had not returned.

Reluctant to Suspect Him.

Even after Bary had told of the draft transaction, his employers were reluctant to believe that Kindred had gone with the money. But when he failed to return in an hour Acting Captain William Deevey of the First Branch Detective Bureau at Police Headquarters was notified, and a score of detectives were sent to ferries and railway stations, and all the police were directed to watch for the fugitive.

At 3 P. M., Policeman Kennedy of the Elizabeth Street Station, found Kindred's car, stopped at the curb in Worth Street, between Baxter and Centre Streets, near the entrance to the uptown subway station. Under the forward seat was the black valise in which the money had been placed at the bank. The 200 $50 notes, 400 $20 notes, and the smaller bills, chiefly $2 and $5 notes, amounting to $8,645, were gone, but $474.70 in silver had been left in the bag, evidently too heavy to carry conveniently.

The car, bearing the license number "10,595," was a five-passenger Oakland, 1915 model. Daniel Horan, the police chauffeur, was unable to start the car, and investigation showed that its mechanism had been locked with the combination attached to the running gear. The silver coin was taken to the bureau, and the car was towed to the police garage at 1,854 Amsterdam Avenue. The car was equipped as if for a long journey, with extra wheels, tools, clothing, and a medicine chest. The police learned that Kindred also had a smaller car, a runabout. He kept the cars in different garages near his home at 560 West 163d Street, where he occupied an apartment of four rooms on the second floor and lived alone.

Reward Offered.

His employers have offered a reward of $500 for Kindred. He is 32 years old, weighs about 225 pounds, is 5 feet 9 inches tall, has dark brown, wavy hair, smooth face, and blue eyes.

George H. Flinn, Secretary and Treasurer of the corporation, Limited, is the son of William A. Flinn, Chairman of the corporation and well known as the Progressive Party leader in Pennsylvania in the last Presidential campaign said Kindred had been exemplary in his habits during the three years he had been with the firm, though very little was known of him beyond what he had volunteered.

"He had been employed as timekeeper, and on pay days acted as assistant cashier," said Treasurer Flinn. "We thought so well of him that we never asked him to give a bond. His salary was $150 a month, and he accounted satisfactorily for the ownership of his car by saying he had $300 a month income from the estate of a relative. We know he had $2,000 on deposit at one time in the Washington Heights Bank, supposed to be money he had received from his estate."

It was learned yesterday that this money, except a few dollars had been withdrawn. Mr. Flinn said Kindred did not drink or gamble, an used the car principally for trips to an from the office and for the company's work. "We were told that he was home almost every night," said Mr. Flinn. "He had been employed about two years before coming to us with the Glyndon Construction Company, which had a section of the aqueduct work. We took over that contract three years ago and gave Kindred employment at that time.

Formerly a San Franciscan.

Kindred formerly lived in San Francisco. Just before he was hired by the Glyndon Company, it was said, he had been employed in the busines department of a magazine at Oakland, Cal. Police Inspector Faurot searched Kindred's apartment and found several letters which he thought might give some clue to the missing man's antecedents, bu tso far nothing has been found to corroborate his statement concerning the estate and income of which he boasted.

In the rooms the police found a number of photographs taken by Kindred while he was engaged in aqueduct work. They also found that his chief recreation was fishing and hunting. He had a number of hunting trophies.

Entente Allies Press Greece to Act; Germans Think Balkans Are Turning to Them

ATHENS, Aug. 4.—The British, French, Russian, and Italian Ministers at Athens made a collective visit today to M. Gounaris, the Greek Premier, and made united representations regarding the political situation.

From a Staff Correspondent.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 4.—Political optimism here is mounting apace with eastern military successes. The feeling is that everything is coming Germany's way.

Bulgaria continues to be an engrossing subject of interest. At present the whole Balkans are quiet, but it is thought that things are ripening toward the harvest in early Fall.

The Balkans are believed to be waiting for a signal, which apparently will be given by Bulgaria.

The fact that the Entente Allies have brought pressure to bear at this time on the Gounaris Cabinet, instead of waiting for the reassembling of the Greek Parliament on Aug. 14, when ex-Premier Venizelos is expected to return to power and carry out his program of war on Turkey, would seem to indicate that the Allies are uneasy over the prospects of the Russian campaign.

It has been said that the plan of the German General Staff, if they drive the Russian Army beyond the Vistula, is to swing south a force sufficient to overwhelm Serbia, and drive into the sea the Anglo-French forces on the Gallipoli Peninsula.

This plan might be rendered impossible by the accession of Rumania and Greece to the cause of the Entente Allies.

Speedy co-operation of the Greek Army, in fact, would tend toward the swift defeat of Turkey and the opening of the Dardanelles and Bosporus, thus changing the whole aspect of the campaign on the eastern front.

BRITISH EMPIRE PRAYS FOR VICTORY

Mother Country and Overseas Dominions Unite in Anniversary Petitions.

KING GEORGE AT ST. PAUL'S

Attends Service with the Queen —London Meeting Pledges Endurance Till Allies Win.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—Having in the churches throughout the land this morning "commended our cause to the hands and judgment of the all-wise Ruler of the Universe," the British people at public meetings held tonight in every city, town, and hamlet in the United Kingdom, the Dominions and Colonies, declared their "belief in the justice of our cause and firm determination not to look to the right or the left until the goal of victory is achieved," and a great meeting in the metropolis pledged the nation to fight till the cause of the Allies should have triumphed.

The principal meeting in England was held in the London Opera House. This was attended by Princess Victoria and other members of the Royal Family, the Ambassadors and Ministers of the allied countries, and was addressed by Arthur J. Balfour, First Lord of the Admiralty; Sir Robert L. Borden, the Canadian Premier, and the Marquis of Crewe, Lord President of the Council.

At Folkestone, Andrew Bonar Law, Secretary for the Colonies, and Major Gen. Sam Hughes, Canadian Minister of Militia, addressed the Canadians, thousands of whom are in camp at Shorncliffe, a short distance away. Other Ministers and leaders addressed large audiences at various other important centres.

Messages From France and Russia.

Messages were read at the London meeting from France and Russia, and from every corner of the British Empire. Mr. Balfour moved, and Sir Robert Borden seconded, the following resolution:

That on the anniversary of the war this meeting of the people of London records its indefinite determination to continue to a victorious end the struggle in the maintenance of those ideals of liberty and justice which are the common and sacred cause of all the Allies.

Mr. Balfour said there was no need to impress upon the meeting the resolve of the nation to pursue the great controversy to the end. This resolve was not only unshaken; it was stronger than ever.

England, he continued, had never professed to maintain a great army, and at the start had only offered to send out 160,000 men. The casualties of the British Army were already three times that number. What England had done far exceeded what was originally expected, but it was only part of what she was going to do.

He was confident that historians would say that, as this country had played its part in maritime matters, so it had in no sense fallen short of what it could do in military matters. He was sure that, had the Germans known what the course of events would be, not a man would have been moved, a soldier mobilized, or a life lost between the Ural Mountains and the Bay of Biscay.

The Canadian Premier, after eulogizing the British Army, said he was assured of the triumph of its cause. Canada, he declared, was inspired by an inflexible determination to do her part.

The resolution was carried by acclamation.

Prayers Throughout the Empire.

The whole empire united today in prayerful observance of the anniversary of the declaration of war against Germany. In virtually every city and town in the British Isles, as well as in all parts of the dominions overseas, the day was one of French Gains Not to be Measured in Ground Only, Says a High Authority.

LAUDS WORK OF THE ARMY

Asserts It Is Wearing the Germans Down and Keeping Millions of Them Engaged.

PARIS, Aug. 4.—An explanation of why so little progress is being made in the French and Belgian war ozones, so far as actual ground gaining is concerned, is afforded in a statement from unquestionable authority, in which the almost insurmountable difficulties of the present struggle are set forth.

"During the last six months," says the authority, "from the North Sea to the Swiss mountains, there has been veritable siege warfare along the length of the broken line of trenches. In this warfare all strategic manoeuvres are absent, because manoeuvres are impossible on ground where every square meter is marked and swept by artillery fire. The only alternative is a frontal attack. Such an attack is smashed to pieces in one part or another against the formidable organizations of defense, in which all the resources of art and science have been employed by the two adversaries.

"In concrete subterranean works, armored and casemated, flanked with rapid fires and mortars, and linked to one another by marvelously concealed communicating trenches, which are protected by the fire of heavy batteries, dwell the infantry, abundantly provided with rifles and hand grenades. To take possession of one of these works, it is first necessary to dismantle these trenches and destroy the material which they shelter. This is the artillery's task.

"No one before the war could have imagined the vast amount of shells required. Several thousand shells fired during a few hours on a restricted space announce an attack for which this preparation is being made. But, no matter how numerous the heavy guns or how well directed their fire, it often happens that the preparation has been insufficient. One or more rapid firers mow down the troops who climb from the trenches ready for the charge, and after suffering heavy sacrifices the attacking party arrive at the first line of trenches of the enemy. The opposing artillery, with a literal wall of fire, effectively prevents any reinforcements from advancing to their support. They must fortify the captured trenches, being subjected the while to a much more accurate bombardment, as the enemy knows the exact range of their former positions.

"Such offensive movements could not be multiplied or prolonged indefinitely, as much on account of the moral and physical effort which they demand of the men as on account of the losses which they involve. Neither can such offensives be improvised. Before beginning an attack large quantities of material and projectiles must be gathered in one place previously appointed by the commander, advanced fortifications dug, and the ground minutely studied.

"If, despite these difficulties, the French Army renews an offensive at the price of a bloody sacrifice, it is with the conscientious mission of holding large enemy forces on the western front. By the Marne victory it stopped the invasion and ruined the first German plan, which was, first, to shatter France, and return then against Russia.

"By the victory of the Yser, with the aid of the allied armies closing the line of defense, it effectively prevented the enemy from getting a foothold in Pas de Calais.

Demoralized 2,000,000 Germans.

"By continuous offensive actions from February to July in Champagne, the Argonne and Artois, it demoralized approximately 2,000,000 men and captured an enormous amount of material. Without allowing the enemy an instant's respite it forced the German General Staff to utilize on the western front reserves in barracks and arsenals.

"It would be a serious mistake to measure our efforts by the ground conquered. The demoralization and wearing down of the German Army is the real goal. We have attained this goal, since Huge Masses Hurled by Hindenburg on Narew Front Fail to Break Through.

GERMAN LOSSES IMMENSE

Their Cavalry Drives to Further Slaughter Infantry Demoralized by Muscovite Bayonets.

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 5.—After having tried for three weeks to force the Russians to evacuate Warsaw and the Polish salient by encircling movements from the north and pressure from the west, the Austro-Germans have commenced attacks on the fortresses of the capital and those of Lomza and Ostrolenka, to the northeast, and Ivangorod to the southeast.

Berlin claims that the Russians have been driven back to the advanced defenses of Lomza; that the Narew, has been crossed near Ostrolenka; that, driven out of their Bionie positions, the Russians have fallen back into the outer lines of Warsaw, which the Bavarians are attacking, and that the Austrians have captured the western part of the fortress of Ivangorod. The Petrograd War Office late last night admitted that the Russians had retired from the Bionie-Nadazyn line on Warsaw.

Thus, what should prove a decisive battle for the Polish capital has begun in earnest.

In the meantime, Field Marshall von Mackensen is slowly advancing from the southeast, between the Vistula and the Bug, in an effort to cut off the Russian armies, which apparently are making a leisurely exit from Warsaw and the western lines, while General von Bülow, in his wider encircling movement through Courland has reached Kupischki, some fifty miles west of Dvinsk, on the Vilna-Petrograd Railway.

Chief Attention to Hindenburg.

Although the operations of von Mackensen and von Bülow appear to offer the most dangerous threats to the retiring Russian armies, the Russian General Staff is paying more attention to Field Marshal von Hindenburg, who has been trying, with more or less success, to force the line of the Narew. Here the Russians are offering the most stubborn resistance, and, according to an official dispatch from Petrograd, in two battles of three days each succeeded in checking the Germans and inflicting heavy losses on them. The Russians also admit severe casualties.

When the dispatch was sent a third battle was in progress. Berlin claims that in this battle the Germans have been successful and have forced a crossing of the Narew near Ostrolenka.

On the whole, the Russians, so far as can be gathered from the official reports, are making an extremely orderly retirement. They are losing comparatively few prisoners, and, except for the thirty-two guns abandoned to the east of Ivangorod, the Germans make no claims to the capture of heavy pieces of artillery.

A Petrograd dispatch to The Daily Telegraph says:

"West of the Narew, between Ostrolenka and Rozan, the Germans, who have thrown considerable forces across the river, are assembling on a front of ten miles a compact body of troops similar to von Mackensen's phalanx.

"At present the Germans hold a strip of land about seven miles broad on the left bank of the Narew, and every forward step is stubbornly contested by the Russians.

"The Austro-Germans are closing in on the sides of Ivangorod, and a few days probably will decide the fate of this secondary fortress, for the sake of which the Russians are not likely to make heavy sacrifice of men."

Race Against Time for New Line.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 4.—A race against time for the line of Kovno, Grodno, and Brest-Litovsk, in which the Germans are trying to forestall the Russians and secure a foothold there while the Summer still favors military operations, is the view held by local military authorities.

Direct operations against Warsaw are regarded at the moment as of less concern to the Germans than the business of advancing their wings, though a country which with the approach of Autumn will become impassable.

It is even suggested that the Germans do not desire to force an evacuation of Warsaw, but are bent instead on detaining the army there, while daily limiting the field of possibility of an orderly retirement eastward and a subsequent fortification along the mentioned line.

Observers see in the German operations to the east of the Vistula River, in the vicinity of Matzievitze, a design to cut the railroad from Ivangorod to Warsaw, and, if not to capture Ivangorod, to compel the evacuation of that fortress, and open the way for Field Marshal von Mackensen to the Warsaw-Brest-Litovsk railway. The Matzievitze-Ivangorod operation is regarded here as the most important at the present time. A relatively early evacuation of Ivangorod is foreshadowed by the Russian press.

The situation at Mitau, the capital of the Russian province of Courland, twenty-five miles southwest of Riga, is not clearly understood here. The Reich says that, judging by the disposition of the armies of both sides, it may with probability be assumed that the city has been abandoned by the Russians.

Mackensen Seeks to Distance Foe.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 4, (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.)—It is only now that the enemy is beginning to close in on the fortress of Ivangorod. He has crossed the Vistula between Warsaw and Ivangorod, but is being held near the right bank of the river at Ivangorod. The Russians have withdrawn to the outer trenches of the fortress on the west and southwest.

From Lublin the Archduke is advancing northward on Lubartof station on the Lublin-Lukow Railway in rear of Ivangorod. Mackensen is moving up from Choim to Wlodawa and seems anxious either to draw the retreating Russians into a fresh battle or to reach the neighborhood of Brest-Litovsk before the Russians succeed in deploying on the new front.

In the north the Germans have now, after very hard fighting, established themselves on the left bank of the Narew and are making further efforts to get in rear of Novo Georgievsk.

In the Baltic region fierce fighting is taking place between Poniewecz and Dvinsk.

Berlin Awaits Evacuation.

BERLIN, Aug. 4, (via London.)—No word of the Russian evacuation of Warsaw and Ivangorod has reached here, but members of the General Staff betray no impatience ove the operations, and evidently have their expectations fixed on bigger game than the two fortresses; in fact, they expect to capture a part of the Russian army.

"Our operations are proceeding favorably and give promise of a decidedly good harvest," said one of the chief officers today.

BERLIN, Aug. 4, (by Wireless to Sayville, N. Y.)—The Overseas News Agency today says the Russian Legation at The Hague, Netherlands, has officially announced the evacuation of Warsaw on account of the lack of ammunition. The bridges over the Vistula River, the same advices say, have been ordered blown up.

Reports prepared at the front and given out by the Overseas News Agency say that the investment of the Russian fortress of Ivangorod is progressing. Eight of the outer forts have been stormed, according to these advices, and the possibility of the Russian forces within the citadel escaping is constantly diminishing.

AUSTRIAN ARMY HEADQUARTERS, Aug. 4, (via London.)—News of the evacuation by the Russians of the fortresses of Warsaw and Ivangorod is expected here from hour to hour.

While general attention is concentrated on the impending Russian evacuation of Warsaw and the Vistula line, events of scarcely less importance are taking place on the southeastern front; namely, the Austro-Hungarian passage of the Bug River line and the advance against Vladimir-Volynsk and Kovel, in Volhynia.

This operation renders the position of the Russian left wing in East Galicia precarious, and will probably be the determining factor in forcing the retirement of the Russians from the Bug, Zlota Lipa and Dniester line, and in freeing Galicia entirely from the invading army.

The destination of the Austrian wedge which crossed the Bug River between Sokol and Krylow is apparently Kovel, an important railroad junction located on the southern edge of the great Rokitno swamps. The effect of this advance will be to cut communications between the Russian armies operating in Poland and Southern Russia, and accomplish what Field Marshal Baron Conrad von Hoetzendorf and Field Marshal von Hindenburg hitherto have been unable to do, namely, drive a complete breach in the long Russian battle front and leave one set of armies operating to the northwest of the impassable swamps and the other to the southwest of this region, without the possibility of transferring reinforcements from one to the other except by a long circuitous railway journey through central Russia.

The Russians may, therefore, be expected to offer the strongest resistance to these operations.

WAR OFFICES DESCRIBE LATEST OPERATIONS

Important Successes Claimed by Both Teuton and Russian General Staffs.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 4.—An official statement given out today by the Russian General Staff says:

During the last three days the enemy has made enormous efforts to dislodge us from the sector of the Narew River from Ostrolenka to Lomza.

In the district of Jedwabno the enemy is conducting trench warfare, but in the exploding of mines we have continually held the upper hand.

On the Pissa and Skwa Rivers the whole enemy army attacked us, having first launched against us reinforcements brought from France. Nevertheless we soon saw a complete German defeat in this sector, for it took the enemy a week to drive back from the village of Serwatka (on the right bank of the Pissa) our rearguard regiment, while the battle for the passage of the Narew, near Novgorod, has not even begun.

Near the mouth of the Skwa the enemy, thanks to the forests, succeeded in passing to our sidet of the river, but we successfully prevented him from bringing his artillery across the Narew, and at the point of the bayonet we annihilated some forces which were deprived of the protection of their artillery.

These failures compelled the enemy to withdraw from this sector the reinforcements which had come from France, and send them to reinforce the Rozan army, which was moving more rapidly.

This army was considerably strengthened by other reinforcements which came to it from the left bank of the Vistula. Nevertheless, all the efforts of the enemy to make progress to the east and west were broken by the River Oje.

The enemy then changed the direction of his attack, and now on the front between the Narew and the Oje, is making great efforts to advance in a northeasterly direction behind Ostrolenka.

During three days of fighting the enemy repeatedly hurled large masses of infantry against our trenches, but while suffering severe losses he advanced only two or three versts, (1.8 miles.)

On Aug. 2 our troops, during a particularly desperate German attack, which we repulsed, saw the enemy's cavalry make an onslaught on his own infantry, who had been thrown back with the intention of forcing them to attack us again. The German losses here were very great.

In the southern sector of the battle, near the village of Polshivnitza, the enemy concentrated a large mass of infantry in order to pass across the valley of the Oje, but our artillery smothered his attack at the end of the valley, forcing the Germans in this region to disperse.

Our losses were very heavy, but our troops are making a valiant resistance to the enemy's plan to deal a severe blow from the Narew line on the rear of the Russian armies, which are impeding Field Marshall von Mackensen's offensive in the Wieprz Valley.

Berlin Account of Fighting.

BERLIN, Aug. 4, (via London.)—The War Office today issued the following bulletin concerning the operations on the Russian front:

In the eastern theatre, in pursuit of the retreating enemy, our troops reached the district of Kupischki, east of Poniewicz.

North of Lomza the Russians were pushed back to the advanced defense positions of the fortress.

East Prussian and West Prussian regiments captured after heavy fighting the Narew crossing, near Ostrolenka, which was strengthened by field fortifications. Several thousand of Russians were taken prisoners and seventeen machine guns were captured. Our pursuit of the enemy is proceeding.

Before Warsaw, the Russians were thrown from the Bionie position into the outer line of the fortress. The army of Prince Leopold of Bavaria is attacking the fortress.

The attack of the German troops under General von Woyrsch, who crossed the Vistula, is proceeding.

Austro-Hungarian troops and the army of General von Woyrsch are in possession of the west part of the fortress of Ivangorod to the Vistula River.

The enemy yesterday also attempted to arrest the advance of the army of Field Marshall von Mackensen, but he again was defeated near Lenczna, northeast of Chelm and west of the Bug River.

Since early this morning the defeated enemy has been retreating between the Vistula and Bug Rivers, in a northerly direction.

Near and south of Uscilug, on the Bug River, the enemy is also retreating.

Great Fires Seen in South.

VIENNA, Aug. 4, (via London.)—The following official communication has been issued by the War Office:

Between the Vistula and the Bug the Russians, who retreat step by step, have offered at several places renewed resistance.

North of the Dubienka-Chelm line, on the Sirnika and on the line of Leczna-Novo Alexandria, heavy battles took place.

On many parts of the front the enemy undertook short counter-attacks in order to check our pursuit, but at midnight he continued to retreat northward.

The western part of Ivangorod, situated on the left bank of the Vistula, is in our hands. The German forces standing opposite the mouth of the Radomka River, on the east bank of the Vistula, have made progress. Between Vladimir-Volynsk and Sokol our troops dispersed one Cossack regiment. Southwest of Vladimir-Volynsk great fires were sighted.

There is no news from Galicia.

ALWAYS IN BATTLE ON WESTERN FRONT

It has been proved that during these six months the enemy has suffered heavy losses, and, taking everything into consideration, he can only remove our front 8 per cent. of his total effectives.

"The great battles on the Western front were fought in Champagne during the months of February and March, between the Meuse and the Moselle during the month of April, and in Artois during May and June.

"In Champagne we have taken the enemy's defenses for a depth of from one to seven kilometers, (from one and a quarter to four and one-third miles,) which repeated and heavy counter-attacks have not been able to recapture. Between four and five German army corps have suffered heavy losses, two regiments of the Guard being almost destroyed. On the captured ground nearly 25,000 German dead were counted. We took 2,000 prisoners, rapid-fire guns, and a large number of trench cannon.

"Between the Meuse and the Moselle we now occupy the Eparges crater, which was very strongly fortified. There two Bavarian divisions, having received orders to hold out at all costs, left heaps of bodies.

"To this great success must be added the success in the Bois d'Ailly and the Bois le Prêtre, which the Germans call 'Bois de la Mort.'

"In Artois more than 8,000 prisoners, cannon of all calibres, a hundred quick-firers, and bomb throwers fell into our hands.

"Along a front of ten kilometers, (more than six miles,) we have advanced from two to four kilometers, and captured the villages of Ablain-St. Nazaire, Carency, and Neuville St. Vaast, transformed into fortresses by our adversaries, who brought up to stem our victorious offensive sixteen veteran divisions, one company being reduced to four men.

"Besides these three principal actions, operations of less importance permitted us to take at Toutvent 1,200 meters of trenches, and at Quennevieres 2,500 meters.

"The capture of Vauquois, in the Argonne, and Metzeral and Hartmannsweller in the Fecht Valley in Alsace, constituted brilliant victories for our troops, judging from the desperate character of the fighting, the amount of munitions expended and the number of forces engaged. Those engagements were veritable battles. Their preparation and realization represented large sacrifices.

Strain of Trench Warfare.

"But even when no engagements take place the life of the troops in the trenches is a continual battle. The first line of infantry, only a few meters distant from the enemy, enjoys not a single minute of quietude; it is under the constant menace of grenades, bursting shrapnel, bombs from mine-throwers, and there is continual fear of subterranean mines.

"The infantryman must remain continually on the alert—occasionally in the smoke of asphyxiating bombs—hold himself ready at every moment to repulse an attack, repair fortifications, remove obstructions that have fallen into the trenches, and live in the continued presence of death. Such a life demands continual activity on the part of the officers, calmness on the part of the men, patience and bravery at all times.

DACIA'S SEIZURE CONFIRMED BY COURT

French Tribunal Rules the American Ship a Fair Prize and May Confiscate Her.

WASHINGTON TO PROTEST

Verdict Means That France Will Not Recognize the Transfer of Belligerent Vessels.

PARIS, Aug. 4.—A French prize court today confirmed the capture (seizure) of the American cotton ship Dacia.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—The announcement from Paris today that a French prize court had confirmed the seizure of the American steamer Dacia as a fair prize found the State Department preparing to protest the decision, which carries with it forfeiture of the vessel. It is planned to make this a test case of the right of a neutral country to grant registry to a belligerent-owned merchant ship.

The Dacia's cotton cargo is not involved. Before the vessel sailed from Galveston last Spring for Rotterdam Great Britain announced that the cargo, consigned for Bremen, would not be detained, the announcement being binding upon France. The French Government purchased the cotton through a special appropriation, and first payments to its owners were made today at the State Department. The issue in the Dacia case is the right of the United States Government to permit registry under its flag of a vessel formerly owned by the Hamburg-American Steamship Company, a German corporation, but declared to have been sold to an American citizen. The British Government, which has sanctioned such transfers in war time, could not consistently seize the Dacia. France has always held that the transfer of a merchant ship to a neutral power must have been effected at least thirty days before the outbreak of hostilities in order to obtain recognition by belligerents.

At the beginning of the war the United States served notice upon the belligerents that, as they had not consented to observe the unratified declarations of London as a whole, this Government would not be bound by them, but would stand on the general principles of international law in dealing with questions of neutral rights. The protest against condemnation of the Dacia will rest on those principles.

At the office of Edward N. Breitung, owner of the steamship Dacia, it was said yesterday that no official advice had been received from the French Government regarding the confirmation by the French prize court of the seizure of the Dacia. A representative of Mr. Breitung asserted, however, that up to this time advices from their attorneys in Paris indicated that the Dacia might be turned back to her owners, possibly under bond guaranteeing that she would not again take part in transatlantic trade during the continuation of the war.

intercession and prayer, with meetings of common aim and purpose to ask the aid of the Almighty for ultimate victory in a cause which the British peoples consider just and righteous.

London was the scene of the chief ceremony, with services attended by King George and Queen Mary at noon in St. Paul's Cathedral. The King and his consort drove to the cathedral in an open landau without state ceremonial, though cheering crowds lined the thoroughfares to view them in passing.

The cathedral was thrown open to all comers and before a vast throng the Most Rev. Randall T. Davidson, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Right Rev. Arthur F. Ingram, the Bishop of London, and their assistants conducted a brief and simple service, concluding with the hymn, "Through the Night of Darkest Hour," and the national anthem.

A notable feature of the gathering was the presence of a great number of wounded soldiers and sailors, who received preference in the matter of seats at the King's request. His Majesty wore the khaki uniform of a staff officer.

Patriotic meetings were held everywhere throughout the afternoon to reaffirm Great Britain's intention to prosecute the war to a successful conclusion.

BERLIN OFFER TO END FRYE DISPUTE explained in its note of April 4 last for what reason it considers that the conditions justifying the sinking under international law were present in the case of the William P. Frye. The cargo consisted of conditional contraband, the destination of which for the hostile armed forces was to be presumed under the circumstances; no proof to overcome this presumption has been furnished. More than half the cargo of the vessel was contraband, so that the vessel was liable to confiscation. The attempt to bring the American vessel into a German port would have greatly imperiled the German vessel in the given situation of the war, and at any rate practically defeated the success of her further operations. Thus the authority for sinking the vessel was given according to general principles of international law.

There only remains then to be examined the question how far the Prussian-American treaty stipulations modify these principles of international law.

Question of Contraband.

In this connection Article 12 of the Treaty of 1785 provides that in the event of a war between one of the contracting parties with another power, the free commerce and intercourse of the nationals of the party remaining neutral with the belligerent powers shall not be interrupted, but that on the contrary the vessel of the neutral party may navigate freely to and from the ports of the belligerent power even neutralizing enemy goods on board thereof. However, this article merely formulates general rules for the freedom of maritime intercourse and leaves the question of contraband untouched; the specific stipulations on this point are contained in the following article, which is materially identical with Article 13 of the Treaty of 1799 now in force.

The plain intention of Article 13 is to establish a reasonable compromise between the military interests of the belligerent contracting party and the commercial interests of the neutral party. On the one hand the belligerent party is to have the right to prevent the transportation of supplies to his adversaries even when carried on vessels of the neutral party; on the other hand, the commerce and navigation of the neutral party is to be interfered with as little as possible by the measures necessary for such prevention, and reasonable compensation is to be paid for any inconvenience or damage which may nevertheless ensue from the proceedings of the belligerent party.

Article 13 recites the following means whereby the belligerent party can prevent the vessels of the neutral party from carrying war supplies to his adversary. The detention of the ship and cargo for such length of time as the belligerent may think necessary; furthermore, the taking over of the war stores for his own use, paying the full value of the same as ascertained the place of destination. The right of sinking is not mentioned in the treaty, and is, therefore, neither expressly permitted nor expressly prohibited. That on this point the party stipulations must be supplemented by the general rules of international law. From the meaning and spirit of the treaty it really appears out o fthe question that it was intended to expect of the belligerent that he should permit a vessel loaded with contraband, for example a shipment of arms and ammunition of decisive importance for the outcome of the war, to proceed unhindered to his enemy when circumstances forbid the carrying of the * * * into port, if the general rules of international law allow sinking of the vessel.

Disposition of Cargo.

The remaining stipulations of Article 13 must likewise be considered in this light; they provide that the Captain of a vessel stopped shall be allowed to proceed on his voyage if he delivers out the contraband to the warship which stopped his vessel. For such delivering out cannot, of course, be considered when the ensuing loss of time imperials either the warship herself or the success of her other operations. In the case of the William P. Frye the German commander at first tried to have matters settled by the delivery of contraband, but convinced himself of the impracticability of this attempt in that it would expose his ship to attack by whatever superior force of enemy war vessels pursuing him, and was accordingly obliged to determine upon the sinking of the Frye. Thus he did not exceed on this point the limits to which he was bound by Article 13.

However, Article 13 asserts itself here to the extent that it founds the obligation to compensate the American citizens affected, whereas according to the general rules of international law the belligerent party does not need to grant compensation for a vessel lawfully sunk. For, if by Article 13, the mere exercise of right of highways makes the belligerent liable for compensation, this must apply a fortiori to the exercise of the right of sinking.

The question whether the German commander acted legally was primarily a subject for the consideration of the German prize courts, according to general principles of international law as laid down, also in Article 1 of The Hague Convention for the establishment of an International prize court and in Article 51 of the Declaration of London. The German Government consequently laid the case of the William P. Frye before the competent prize court at Hamburg, as was stated in its note of the 7th ult. This court found by its judgment of the 10th inst. that the cargo of the American vessel, William P. Frye, was contraband; that the vessel could not be carried into port, and that the sinking was therefore justified; at the same time the court expressly recognized the validity of the Prussian-American treaty stipulations severally* model for the relations between the German Empire and America, so that the sinking of the ship and cargo, so far as American property, makes the German Empire liable for indemnity. The Prize Court was unable to fix the indemnity itself, since it had no data before it, failing the receipt of the necessary details from the parties interested.

It will now be necessary to settle these

BRITISH NOTES FIND FAVOR AT CAPITAL

Suggestion of Review by an International Tribunal Is Agreeably Received.

SITUATION IS CLEARING

United States Will Not Recede from Its Position, but Way Is Open for Settlement.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—Instead of causing greater irritation between the two Governments, the notes of Great Britain to the United States, made public yesterday, which dealt with the American complaints over British prize court proceedings and detention of American ships and cargoes destined to and from neutral ports, have served to clear the atmosphere, and there is now a promise of a favorable outcome of the controversy.

While this Government has no intention of receding from its position, there is some reason to believe that an effort will be made to modify some of the restrictions by informal arrangements, and that in the same informal way, by agreement between the British Government and citizens of the United States claiming to have suffered by the Orders in Council, these citizens will adjust their differences with Great Britain. Beyond this, however, a strong likelihood exists that the suggestion of the British Government that the matters arising out of prize court proceedings and the application of the British Orders in Council be subjected to review by an international tribunal may be accepted by the United States.

It is expected that if a settlement by an international tribunal is arranged, Germany will complain that the United States has discriminated in favor of Great Britain in its attitude toward questions arising out of the war.

Germany has indicated her willingness to have the American complaints against Germany's submarine warfare submitted to The Hague Tribunal of Arbitration. It is pointed out here, however, that if Germany should find fault over the refusal of the United States to arbitrate matters arising from the submarine warfare, while agreeing to Great Britain's suggestion to arbitrate matters arising out of the detention of American ships and cargoes, the answer of this Government would be that the submarine warfare involved the destruction of human life, for which no adequate compensation could be made, while the case at issue with Great Britain involved merely losses of ships or cargoes, that could be compensated for in dollars and cents.

Discrimination in Blockade.

The main complaint of this Government against Great Britain is that her policy in detaining ships and cargoes destined for neutral ports of Europe in countries contiguous to German territory does not bear equally on all neutrals. The United States holds that it is being discriminated against, for the reason that Norway, Sweden, and Denmark are permitted to trade with Germany, while British Government is not in a position to intercept vessels plying between the Baltic ports of Scandinavian countries and the Baltic ports of Germany. For this and other reasons the United States holds that it has good ground for complaint against the detention of American ships and cargoes on the ground that, while consigned to neutral ports on the Continent of Europe the ultimate destination of the cargoes is German territory.

But the argument of Sir Edward Grey that Great Britain accepted the principle laid down by the United States during the civil war, that cargoes destined for neutral ports might be seized before their arrival at such ports if there was good reason to suspect that the cargoes was to be trans-shipped to the territory of an enemy, has impressed this Government. The United States lays the foundation for exchanges which may lead to acceptance of the British suggestion that the differences between the two Governments be adjusted by an international tribunal.

In his note of July 31 Sir Edward Grey said that it was open to any American citizen whose claim was before a British prize court "to contend that an Order in Council law and is, therefore, not binding on the court."

Sir Edward Grey added that if the prize court declined to accept the contentions of the American citizen and such a decision was upheld on appeal by His Majesty's Privy Council, the United States Government, if it considered that there was serious ground for holding that the decision was incorrect and infringed the rights of its citizen was entitled to claim that the matter should be subjected to review by an international tribunal.

Creates Favorable Impression.

Some impression seems to have been made here by the suggestion that the United States had adopted the principle that the decisions of a national prize court may be open to review if the prize court and the Judicial Committee of the British Privy Council in matters relating to prize are in harmony with the principles of international law. Should this Government take the contrary view, the British Government, according to Sir Edward Grey, "will be prepared to concert with the United States Government in order to decide upon the best way of applying the above principle to the situation which would then have arisen."

Sir Edward Grey expressed the hope, however, that the willingness of the British Government to make reasonable concessions to American interests would prevent the necessity for such action arising. There seems to be a strong likelihood that this expressed willingness will lead to an effort to obtain concessions through informal means which will so modify the British restrictions on American commerce as to lessen the causes of complaint of this Government and pave the way for ultimate adjustment of the differences by an international tribunal.

It is admitted that great difficulty would be encountered in an effort to organize an unprejudiced international tribunal at this time, when half the world is at war, and some of the nations, not engaged in hostilities, are in sympathy with one side or the other in the struggle.

The American response to the British notes has been prepared in part, and, while there is every indication that it will be controversial and will not recede from the position previously assumed by this Government in complaining of the British restrictions, it is expected that future exchanges between the two Governments will take into consideration the expressed willingness of Great Britain to make reasonable concessions and to leave the matter of difference to the determination of an international tribunal.

A question as to why the two American notes to Great Britain, given out yesterday, were made public only in paraphrase, while the correspondence between the United States and Germany had been published verbatim was answered officially by the explanation that the two short notes published in paraphrase merely embodied instructions to the American Ambassador in London to present a note to the Foreign Office, in the following sense. Those instructions leave it to the Ambassador to use language of his instructions or to vary it.

Notes to and from both Great Britain and Germany that have been transmitted textually have been published textually here. In the case of the two notes to Great Britain it was said that the department did not know precisely the form in which they reached the Foreign Office, and that was why only a paraphrase was made public.

Prepares Trade Figures.

By The Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—Elaborate statistics have been assembled by the State Department to refute the British assumption that increased exportations from the United States to Holland and Scandinavian countries indicate that some of these goods are finding their way into Germany and Austria. The figures will be included in a preliminary draft being prepared for President Wilson of the reply to the three British notes made public yesterday.

A study of trade conditions between the United States and neutral European countries has been made by the State Department and investigations of Scandinavian and Dutch trade by the Department of Commerce. A report from Consul General Skinner at London also has been received on the foreign trade of Great Britain for the six months ended June 30. It shows that exports to the Scandinavian countries and Holland have increased since the war began along the same lines as American exports to those countries.

The State Department will contend that there can be no more assumption that American goods going to these neutral countries are bound for Germany than that British goods exported there will reach Great Britain's enemies.

The London report showed that while Great Britain's exports decreased materially in the first six months of 1915 as compared to the same period of 1914, imports increased. Re-exports during June, the first month during which the British Order-in-Council was fully effective, showed an increase of $2,904,838. In cotton, one of the much-disputed articles in the trade, Great Britain's imports increased by 1,314,592 cents of 112 pounds each. Of the re-exports of cotton Consul General Skinner said:

"Holland and Sweden each took about five times as much cotton in June, 1915, as in June, 1914, and during the past half year Sweden received 142,543 centals and Holland 19,828 centals of cotton, as against 18,642 centals and 17,785 centals respectively in the same period of 1914."

"Large increases in all lines of cotton goods and cotton yarns from Great Britain to Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and the Netherlands during the first six months of 1915 are shown. Despite a general decrease in exports of manufactured copper Great Britain sent Norway 317 tons in 1915, as against 48 tons in 1914. Increased American copper exports to Scandinavian countries have been cited by Great Britain to sustain her contention.

Encouraged by the announcement from London that a part of the cargo of the steamer Neches had been released, officials determined today to press informal negotiations to obtain an agreement that would release all the vast quantity of American-bound commodities now lying on Rotterdam docks. The British note in the Neches case set forth that if it were alleged that "in particular cases and special circumstances, hardships may be inflicted on citizens of neutral countries, his Majesty's Government are ready in such cases to examine the facts in a spirit of consideration for neutrals."

In line with this assurance, the foreign trade advisers of the State Department are forwarding to London affidavits covering hundreds of individual cases in which they allege that hardships are being inflicted. The total involved will be millions of dollars, and undoubtedly will precipitate extended diplomatic correspondence.

The State Department is hopeful of results in many of these cases, and an arrangement has already been made to facilitate American commerce in oil.

BRITISH REPLIES DISAPPOINT IMPORTERS

They Confer on Blockade Notes and Will Favor a Vigorous Protest.

The British notes were received in local importing circles with disappointment and apprehension. Merchants who have paid for or contracted for great quantities of German and Austrian merchandise have been counting upon concessions being made by Great Britain in the matter of getting their goods across the sea. The attitude taken in the notes surprised many of them.

The Biltmore Hotel Executive Committee of Importers, of which P. J. Cunningham of Dezell & Helwig, linen importers, of 58 White Street, is Chairman, held a meeting yesterday afternoon to discuss the notes and decide upon a line of action. There was a full attendance of members, and at the close of the conference it was announced that a general meeting of importers interested in getting merchandise out of Germany and Austria-Hungary would be held next week.

The members of the Executive Committee acknowledged that the situation brought to a head the question whether American merchants were to be permitted to do any further trading in the goods of the countries affected by Great Britain's embargo. Chairman Cunningham declined to forecast the action of the general meeting to be held in the next few days, but it was reported that President Wilson, and Secretary Lansing would be called upon to enter a strong protest. Mr. Cunningham recalled that the importers already had presented a protest to President Wilson against England's embargo. That action was taken more than six weeks ago, but the pending dispatch of the last note to Germany prevented action by the Washington authorities.

Ex-Judge Sharretts, counsel for the American Importers' Association, Incorporated, said his organization would probably hold a meeting next week to declare what steps should be taken to impress the Administration. Emil L. Strobel, of the wholesale toy importing firm of Strobel & Wilken said the situation was very serious.

"We have thousands of dollar's worth of toys now ready for shipment at Rotterdam and elsewhere," said he. "Notwithstanding the fact that these goods have in many instances been paid for, we cannot get them. Besides the monetary loss to American merchants involved in the non-delivery of goods, the holiday trade is severely if shipments of toys are not forthcoming in the immediate future."

Other merchants declared that if German and Austrian merchandise now lying at neutral ports could not be shipped at once the goods not only would be unseasonable but out of style when landed, eventually.

Importers who read yesterday's dispatch to THE NEW YORK TIMES from St. Louis, telling of the plan of Arthur P. Meagher, President of Charles H. Wyman & Co., customs brokers, to purchase German merchandise now held there to transfer to American registry in order to bring over German and Austrian merchandise now tied up at foreign ports, condemned the plan.

"Mr. Meagher's plan of putting German vessels at present in American waters under American registry," said Carl W Stern, Chairman of the Customs Procedure Committee of the American Importers' Association, and Vice Chairman of the Biltmore Hotel Committee, "is as novel as it is dangerous.

"Great Britain's attitude toward the American cotton steamer Ogeechee, laden with non-contraband German wares, American owned, which sailed from Bremen, and the more recent case of the American steamship Neches, whose detention is justified by Sir Edward Grey, are striking illustrations of the risks attendant upon such an undertaking. Different members of the Importers' Committee at the Hotel Biltmore meeting looked thoroughly into this project and decided to abandon it, at least until such time as consignees of cargo shipped under this plan could secure insurance against risk of capture and unreasonable detention, or the assurance of Great Britain through our own State Department that if upon investigation by the proper officer of the Crown it developed that the cargo was American-owned though of 'enemy' origin it could be speedily released.

"To ship cargo under Mr. Meagher's plan without proper safeguards should not be seriously considered. The plan lacks the approval of either of the importers' associations prominent in the movement in this city to lift the embargo on German and Austrian goods."

REPP ASSAILS NOTE.

Importer Says We Can Never Accept England's Terms.

L. A. Repp of Hoyt, Repp & Co., 95 Chambers Street, who brought about the importers' protest of the British Order and Council, said yesterday:

"If there was criticism due to Germany's answer to our note, the reply from England in reference to the British Order in Council sinks it into insignificance. To think that we, the greatest civilized nation of the world, should submit to any such terms as the note of England wants us to do, seems preposterous. To think that all Belgian imports shipped from Rotterdam should be financially settled through England, is a slur on our Government and financial institutions. To allow that would be a mockery to the Declaration of Independence.

"England points out that the money that is being earned by manufacturers of arms and war supplies should be compensation for the losses sustained by the importers. But let me say that if I were to go to any manufacturer who has earned money on war contracts and say to him, 'Brother, I have lost through obeying the British Orded in Council my business, money, home and everything I possess in the world. Will you therefore kindly let me have $100,000 of the fortune you have made on war supplies to put me on my feet?' You can pretty nearly guess his answer.

"England's remarks on our blockade during the civil war constitute such a ridiculous comparison to what she is doing that I am surprised at her even mentioning the matter. I have the greatest faith in our President—the Lincoln of our day—and I am sure that he and Mr. Lansing, who gave the importers' committee such a true and American-spirited audience when we were at Washington, will not accept this note. I am positive that Mr. Wilson will not stand by and see the American importers suffer because a few are getting theirs. I therefore hope that the answer to the British note will be firm on the rights we are entitled to and will plainly state that these rights are accorded at once."

PRESS ON BRITISH NOTES.

A Great Difference Seen Between the English and German Cases.

These editorial expressions on the British notes appear in this mornings newspapers:

An Arbitrable Difference.

From The New York Tribune.

The contention that the United States should waive any rights because of the manner in which Germany has made war upon Britain and her allies is inadmissable. We have declined to permit Germany to plead "necessity" or "reprisal" in her dealings with us; we have refused to accept her arguments based upon British violations of international law, real or alleged. We can do no less with Great Britain.

Now, all our differences with Great Britain, like those over the Leelanaw and the Frye with Germany, concern property rights, treaty rights, or rights claimed under international law. Therefore, it is essential to recognize at the beginning that what are discussed are disagreements which can and ought to be settled by arbitration, if no agreement can be had by diplomacy.

On the other hand, it is equally necessary to perceive that there is no parallel between our differences with Germany over the Lusitania and any disagreement we have with England, eW have informed Germany further wanton murder of American citizens will be viewed as a "deliberately unfriendly act." A systematic effort wil lbe made to procure equally vigorous language in dealing with Great Britain. This effort should fail and must fail because no question of life divides Great Britain from us, and Sir Edward Grey has neither asserted the right of murder nor has he been asked by us to give assurance against murder. Our cases with Great Britain are purely civil. Such of our cases with Germany as are civil, not criminal, will follow the same course. But we shall continue to regard murder as a different thing and refrain from using toward England the language used toward Germany just as long as Great Britain continues to avoid individual or collective assassination.

The right of Holland to accumulate large stores of cotton in excess of her ordinary consumption cannot be denied; and the mere fact of an excess of importation over former years, when the world was at peace, does not justify Great Britain in acting on the assumption that all excess is designed for Germany. This amounts to the assertion of the right to regulate the industrial life of neutral nations and their exchanges with the United States, another neutral, on the mere basis of British suspicion.

Finally, in the case of German Baltic ports, there is no blockade at all. Sweden and Denmark can trade with Germany as they please. German supremacy in the Baltic is undisputed. Nevertheless Great Britain assumes the right to interrupt the flow of sea-borne freight bound for Germany, but traveling through Scandanavia and thence to the unblockaded Baltic ports.

Plainly, then, the British note does not meet and cannot satisfy American demands. Between American and English interpretations of international law and precedent there is a wide gap.

The British note is friendly in tone, but not more friendly than the last German note. It does not clear away any obstacles; it does nothing more than state a British point of view, which will not be accepted by the United States. But it does open the way to the ultimate settlement of differences, either directly by diplomacy or indirectly by reference to a court of arbitration.

Rule Should Work Both Ways.

From The New York Sun.

Germany's defense of submarine outrages was that they were necessary adaptations of naval warfare to modern conditions. We have told her, in substance, that modern conditions must be adapted to inalienable rights, not the reverse.

Great Britain's defense of her persistent invasion of our rights of noncontraband commerce with neutral ports is that her obstructive "measures" constitute nothing more than an adaptation of the old principle of blockade to the peculiar circumstances of this war.

A reply similar to that already made to Germany is due to Great Britain. The three notes published yesterday invite it. The rule of inflexible neutrality, of friendly vigilance for the protection of American rights, of an even attitude toward the contending powers, goes to pieces when it is unequally applied. We have no doubt that it will continue to be applied impartially by our Department of State. That is the way to keep America "under ashes."

It is a poor rule that works only in the case of Germany.

What is "Commercial Paper?"

TO finance their business seasonally, many concerns of the highest standing borrow money through brokers, for which they give their notes. These notes are "Commercial Paper." They are liquid assets for these reasons:

1. They are backed by commodities in daily use—food stuffs, wearing apparel, etc. Funds from the sale of these commodities pay off the notes.
2. Being of short maturity, due in 3 to 6 months, a bank can buy them so as to mature daily, thus furnishing a constant supply of funds.

Commercial paper bought by the Columbia Trust Company is taken on a 7 or 10 day option. This period gives ample opportunity to investigate the financial condition of the note-giving concern.

FRENCH FIND FAULT WITH BRITISH ARMY

War a Sporting Proposition for the Officers, They Say, and Men Are Not Hardened.

EXPECT A SUDDEN PEACE

General Confidence in a Successful Result — Answers to Questions Americans Ask.

BY CHARLES H. GRASTY,
Former Editor of The Baltimore Sun.
Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, July 20.—For the past few days I have been viewing the externals of the Paris situation with the fresh interest of one who has not seen it before since the war began. Perhaps the best form in which to convey the impressions made upon my mind is through answers to questions that first and last have been put to me in letters from friends in America.

"How does Paris compare with London in activity and general appearance?"

I arrived at the Gare St. Lazaré, having come the only route Americans are permitted to travel from England to France, viz. by Folkestone, five hours of nasty sea, and Dieppe. The supply of taxis was limited, and the porter had to do some tall skirmishing to find one for me. The way from the Gare St. Lazare to the Hotel Ritz is in ordinary times brilliantly illuminated, but on the night I arrived Paris at 10:30 was deserted and much darker than nocturnal London.

On looking round the next day, while I found some life in the big boulevards, elsewhere it was dead. The Rue de la Paix was less lively than Felix Street, St. Joseph, Mo. In most of the side streets the majority of the stores have been closed, tenants taking advantage of the moratorium to retire from business and stop losses. Many of the shops keep open for only a portion of the day. I looked about the hotels and found them deserted. Americans are "non est."

In England they publish the names of the fallen, but the women do not, as a rule, wear mourning. In France the soldier dead are nameless, every man who falls being treated as an infinitesimal fraction of the whole body of the country rather than an individual, but the bereaved women all wear black.

"Are the French showing any signs of being tired of the war?"

No Strain or Emotion.

In spite of what was said in answer to the previous question Paris is not in the least downhearted, nor is there apparently any condition of strain. Everybody is quite normal and cool. The sense of duty which everywhere prevails is nowhere inspired by or mixed with hysterical emotion. When the war came they were chattering and tangoing and effervescing in the familiar Paris way. Down came von Kluck storming from Belgium. Presto! The whole French Nation, high and low, faced about at attention, sober, practical, determined.

The hour that France had been waiting for since 1870 had struck and found every Frenchman and Frenchwoman ready to take his or her place in the line-up of action. This thorough preparation within is the vividly contrasting condition as compared with the other side of the channel.

"What do the French think of the English?"

I asked everybody that question. Summing up all opinions and putting the result in a few words, I should say that France has a just appreciation of what English sea power has meant, but regards England as falling below the mark in military preparedness and technique. A distinguished diplomat with whom I talked expressed the general thought in saying that the English soldier was brilliantly brave, but the English public mind had not become accustomed to the idea of war on land, and neither the English Government nor its armies had as yet grasped its practical details. Among the officers, he said, the view was a sporting rather than a business one. The officers would needlessly expose themselves in battle, with a resultant wastage that could not be replaced in war times. The Germans and French understood the value of officers and would not allow them unnecessarily to take the posts of danger.

The English, and especially the Scotch, were the best stayers in the trenches. German prisoners had commented on the fact that when they got to the trench expecting to find it empty there were the British quietly occupying it. One of the faults of an amateur army was the indulgent attitude of the public and Government, and the consequent expectancy of indulgence on the part of the soldier. The German soldier was there after such a cruel discipline, for example, as almost having his jaw broken by a drill sergeant to toughen him and teach him to stand hard treatment, whereas the Englishmen was being comfortably filled with plum pudding as a preparation for the trenches. My diplomatic friend entertained lively hopes that the exigencies of the Russo-Turkish frontier might cause the transfer of a large portion of the English forces now in the west to the eastern front (which will probably happen if and when Bulgaria tries to smash Turkey.) While appreciating the splendid English qualities, he was frankly fearful lest the French soldiers should by their association lose some of the patience and humility that has been trained into them. When the English delay in adopting national service was broached, every Frenchman has simply raised his hands in wordless, despairing bewilderment.

"What do the French think of themselves!"

French Self-Criticism.

The spirit is one of calm confidence and recovered self-respect. If the defeat of 1870 left them in the shadow of a shame, the fine response of 1914 has entirely re-established them internally and externally. But in unexpected places in Paris I have found criticism that made me wonder whether after all England was the only nation that had stumbled and blundered in meeting the war emergency. Remember that while in England the soiled linen is all washed in public, press criticism is not allowed in France. Under cover of suppression there may be a whole lot that is bad.

A well-informed resident of France shook his head very gravely when I asked him about the French war performance. He said that politics was rampant everywhere. He thought the French were whipping the Germans only because of overwhelming numerical superiority on the western front. A spirited woman with whom I talked and to whom I praised the French for their efficiency and courage protested: "On the contrary, I am mortified by our showing. We ought never to have permitted the Germans to go as far as they have. We have been supporting military measures for forty years that should have protected the country and the world from the German aggressions. I am not flattered by what you say of French courage. You Americans never thought that the French would fight bravely; I knew they would and I expected something more from them than mere bravery."

In the shops and among the common people one never encounters any doubt about the result, whereas in the drawing rooms the comment is much more cynical.

At remote distances we hardly appreciate what mathematical people the French are or to what an extent the critical faculty exists in them. This is especially true among the higher orders. A well-informed gentleman whom I met at a dinner table the night that Germany's reply to America was published surprised me by saying:

"I would not dare publish my opinion, but I think the Germans are altogether right about the Lusitania. They do not put their case well, but their main position is unassailable. In the present state of sea-war they must sink on sight a ship loaded with enemy munitions."

"How long will the war last?"

Expect Sudden Peace.

France is ready for everything that may come, but the real thought among the masses as I found it was that the Germans were going to be finished at an early day.

One man said to me: "These Germans will quit suddenly some day between sun-up and sun-down. They have system and organization, but no real zeal or manhood. The minute they begin to be licked they will collapse."

In the Marne district where I spent a day I heard many predictions of imminent victory. "We will be through them in Belgium inside of six weeks," said one man who had had some experience of the Germans during their brief sojourn in that part of France.

There is no terror of the "Bosches" in the Marne country. The inhabitants treat the whole war as a closed incident. They think they know what stuff German soldiers are really made of, having entertained them as guests during those fateful days of last September. They are already building monuments on the Marne battlefields with never a thought that the Germans may come back again. All the same, the French military authorities are making sure against such a contingency by covering the whole Marne country with up-to-date trenches and wire entanglement. If von Kluck or any other German General should ever swing down that way again his progress will be very slow, owing to prepared positions to which the Allies may fall back every few miles.

And this reminds me of the explanation I have heard in some well-informed quarters as to what von Kluck's purposes were in his famous swerve away from Paris to Provins, and how and why he was compelled to retreat. According to this view he had not the slightest idea of entering Paris until a later stage; he could have done that if he had wanted to, but if he took Paris with an undefeated French army outside, he would have locked up in an undefendable position 200,000 men, which force would not only have been withdrawn from the German total, but would have been so placed as to make their destruction by the French an easy matter. Von Kluck's strategy was to sweep from Belgium to the southwest and thence to the eastward to a junction with the other German armies in a circle large enough to contain the entire available French forces.

Von Kluck's Mistake.

It was his purpose originally, if necessary, to send a portion of his force from a point a few miles northeast of Paris to the westward of Paris, so as to bring that city and whatever military force it might contain within the lines that were to be drawn around the vitals of France. It was here, according to the theory that I have heard put forward so often and that I am now presenting, that the genius of Joffre saved the situation. There were 100,000 soldiers in Paris. Joffre discerned that they were useless for the purpose for which they had been held there—the defense of Paris. As von Kluck swept southward, his tired legions pursuing the even more exhausted French and English, Joffre conjured from Paris a new and fresh army, non-existent so far as von Kluck's knowledge went.

A hundred thousand French soldiers were rushed up from Paris in twenty thousand taxicabs. This army appearing on von Kluck's flank and in his rear caused the sudden change of program of which the battle of the Marne and the retreat to the Aisne were the main features.

"Will the war leave France prostrate?"

No. On the contrary, my impression is that whether the result of this war is defeat or victory, the relative position of France in the family of nations will be improved. She has gained her own respect and the respect of the world, and must have a higher rating in the future.

The French are so full of the spirit of action that even the very old and the very young and the women left at home are bursting to take hold of the situation that peace will bring. They are aching to get at their housekeeping in the altered circumstances. They want to clean and air the premises and put things to rights. In the Marne district half of the damage—and it was enormous—has already been repaired. The French love the land and have a wonderful constructive instinct. To build and to mend is almost a mania with them. It is fair to predict that their recovery when peace comes will be an inspiration to the whole war-worn world.

DEPLORES NATION'S WASTE.

Loose Methods Hurt Army and Navy, Stimson Holds.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 4.—Ex-Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, Chairman of the Finance Committee, in the report he has made to the Constitutional Convention urging reforms in the budget system, draws a lesson by citing the apparent lack of returns for the money appropriated by Congress for the army and the navy.

"The effect of looseness of method has long been apparent in the results of our expenditures," the report declares. "For many years we have been spending more than half as much upon our army as Germany has spent upon hers, and a still greater percentage of what France has spent upon hers, but where their expenditure has produced forces which are now astonishing the world by their size and efficiency, our expenditures from the lack of the proper working machinery between the Executive and Congress which a budget system would supply has largely been wasted upon the unnecessary army post in the districts of influential Congressmen.

"The same is true in respect to our navy, where money necessary for dreadnoughts is spent on useless navy yards in favored localities. Our River and Harbor Appropriation bills have obtained the name 'pork barrel bills' because their contents are looked upon more from the standpoint of the political requirements of legislators than of national routes of transportation. The same lack of responsible aim has marked our appropriations for public buildings."

CALLS POPE UNINFLUENCED.

Peace Plea Not Due to Events in Poland, Says Vatican Organ.

ROME, Aug. 4.—The Osservatore Romano in an editorial which is considered to have been inspired replies to comments and criticisms in the world's press on the Pope's appeal for peace.

"We see in some British newspapers," the Vatican organ says, "a wrong appreciation. They see a connection between the pontifical document and recent events in Russian Poland. The letter was due to the spontaneous initiative of the Pontiff. He was led to write it only by the anniversary of the war and his solicitude as the vicar of Christ at the spectacle of misery and anguish wrought to his children by the year of war.

"It was addressed to all indiscriminately and without consideration as to who are in fault. It was the father of a great Christian family who spoke.

"Allusions to peace while the conflict still is raging now are infrequent or remote. Thus we salute with joy the messages of Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Secretary, and William II., or all words which do not vibrate with hatred and revenge. They show the first rays of a bright dawn."

ADMITS LOSS OF TRANSPORT

Berlin Dispatch Confirms Petrograd Telegram of Aug. 2.

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 5.—A wireless dispatch received from Berlin, repeating the Petrograd official announcement of three days ago that a large German transport had been sunk in the Baltic Sea, adds:

"It is understood from a reliable source that the ship in question was a steamer which had temporarily been taken over by the Ministry of Marine."

A Petrograd dispatch of Aug. 2 said that a British submarine had sent a large German transport to the bottom in the Baltic.

GERMAN EXPLOSIVES OF GRASS TREE GUM

Great Quantities of the Product Imported from Australia During Several Years.

CONVERTED INTO PICRIC ACID

Teuton Buyers Asserted That It Was to be Used for Manufacturing Varnish.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SYDNEY, Australia, July 8.—It has just come to light here that with the astounding preparedness with which the Germans entered upon this war they had for several years prior to the declaration of hostilities been buying immense quantities of Australian grass tree gum, which is convertible into an explosive much more powerful than dynamite, and that this explosive is probably now being used against the Britons and their allies.

Fred Wright of this city recently made this statement:

"Over twenty-five years ago I witnessed a number of experiments with grass tree gum in which a comparison was made with a dynamite cartridge and a grass tree gum cartridge; and judging from the bulk of rock dislodged the latter was by far the more powerful. Later the Kalenite Company gave a series of demonstrations with a mixture of nitrated cellulose, grass tree gum and nitro-glycerine at Narrabeen and Pyrmont (two places on the outskirts of Sydney.) Both tests were reported in the daily press, and it appeared at the time that an excellent explosive had been found.

"Again, at South Head, (at the entrance to Sydney Harbor,) a company made an explosive called xanthorite, and used it very successfully. The chief ingredient was grass tree gum, and the manufacturers obtained excellent results, but its use was confined to one company of contractors and the original promoters later gave up the manufacture.

"German agents in Sydney have been buying up and shipping to Germany immense quantities of grass tree gum for the past quarter of a century; and the North German Lloyd agents at Adelaide (the capitol of South Australia) bought large quantities from the Kangaroo Island gum-getters. The German exporters used to say that they bought it for making varnish, but the varnish made from this gum is very inferior; and although the red grass tree gum was probably used as a cheap substitute for 'dragon's blood' gum for coloring varnishes the yellow gum is not used.

"The price paid at one time by the Germans was as low as $60 per ton, a better quality bringing $120 per ton; but shortly before the war there was a far greater demand for the best quality, and Germany was then willing to pay $325 per ton. Knowing that large quantities of this article have been used in Australia for the production of explosives, the inference is that Germany has all these years been using it for the same purpose.

"The chemical composition of this gum is chiefly a compound of xanthorosinol, which yields benzine and toluono. It is possible that the Germans subjected the gum to special treatment and vitrified the powder in order to obtain a more perfect explosive. A German chemist came to Sydney some years ago and projected the establishment of an explosives works in a gum country in New South Wales; but I believe that he failed to get the required local capital, and nothing came of it."

Mr. Wright pointed out that it was possible to produce a distinctively Australian explosive for the use of the British War Office now was certainly the time to do so.

Francis G. Gashier, another Sydneyite, urged in the press about the time that Mr. Wright made the statement that, as great danger existed that the enemies of Great Britain and her allies might be supplied with grass tree gum through the medium of neutral countries, an embargo should be placed by the Commonwealth Government upon the export of the gum. He also wrote:

"Holiday makers on the sandy slopes of Coogee and Bondi (two very popular surf-bathing and picnicking resorts on the outskirts of Sydney) are familiar with the peculiarly shaped plant, looking like bundles of huge grass, commonly called spinifex; but few suspect that in this apparently useless plant is a material for wholesale destruction of mankind. This plant, known to science as Xanthorrhea hastilies, exudes from the roots a resinous substance called grass tree gum. The color of the resin, according to the species of plant, varies from primrose to orange and granite red. The resin is converted into picric acid, the most efficient component in many up-to-date explosives. An advantage of its use is not only the cheapness and simplicity of manufacture, but the suffocating yellow fumes which are generated in explosion."

Many tons of grass tree gum have been exported to the United States yearly, for it is an important raw material in many industries, notably in varnish manufacture, but, now that its military value to the Germans has been emphasized, it is safe to say that a rigid surveillance will soon be exercised by the Australian Government over shipments of it overseas.

GETTING MECHANICS HERE.

Great Britain's Agents Active, Chicago Newspaper Charges.

CHICAGO, Aug. 4.—Parties of Chicago recruits for England's munitions army, The Daily News today says, are now at sea bound for British soil on the steamship Arabic.

"Light was thrown today," the paper says, "on the system which is sending American mechanics to English munitions factories and shipyards. A letter from the officers of the White Star Dominion Line to a Chicago applicant for a job as a 'munitions volunteer' came into possession of The Daily News, and it is said to uncover the method by which Great Britain is enlisting American skilled craftsmen for factory war duty.

"Chicago workmen have been recruited for some time past by Superintendent Bond at the Elston Avenue roundhouse of the Grand Trunk Railroad, it is reported. Men accepted have been furnished transportation to England at the offices of the White Star-Dominion Line at 14 North Dearborn Street.

"Wages as high as £6 ($30) a week plus overtime are mentioned in the steamship company's letter to would-be 'recruits,' as well as rail and ocean fare both ways, and one year's employment guaranteed at union rates."

Frankfort Gives Them First Chance to Make Market Purchases.

FRANKFORT-ON-MAIN, Aug. 4, (via London.)—The Military Commander of Frankfort has issued an order governing sales at the weekly markets. The order forbids sales being made to dealers or their intermediaries before 10 o'clock in the morning.

This regulation is intended to keep down the prices of food products by permitting housewives to buy cheaply at the markets.

SAYS BRITAIN MUST AVENGE PRISONERS

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle Calls Treatment by Germans the Greatest Outrage of War.

HAS FIXED A DEEP GULF

Instances of Terrible Suffering Are Given in a Pamphlet Now Being Circulated.

Charges of abuse of British prisoners of war by the Germans are set forth in detail in "The Story of British Prisoners," prefaced and annotated by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, which was published recently in London by the Central Committee for the National Patriotic Organization.

In the foreword Sir Arthur speaks of the national feeling in England following the Napoleonic, Crimean, and Boer wars, and says that these conflicts left no aftermath of ill-feeling and bitterness.

"But it cannot be so, and it should not be so, in the case of the Germans," he says. "Never again in our time will a German visitor be welcome in our country. Never again should our students of music flock to Dresden, of art to Leipsic and Munich, or our invalids to the overrated spas of the Fatherland. A deep fissure will divide the two races, and this fissure will be kept open by our abiding remembrance of the foul methods by which the Germans have conducted the war—methods which have come from the rulers, but which have been adopted without any audible protest from the public or press.

"These methods can only be characterized as methods of systematic murder. It was murder when a warship bombarded open ports with no means of defense, such as Whitby and Scarborough. There was a battery at West Hartlepool, so the operations at that port came within the limits of warfare. It was murder when a German Zeppelin dropped bombs upon the tiny country villages in Norfolk and Northumberland. It was murder when submarines destroyed fishing smacks and passenger or merchant steamers, drowning their helpless crews. It was murder when poison gas was used to gain an ignoble victory in Flanders. All these things are manifest murder, and a British officer who did such things would earn the execration of his fellow-countrymen. But there is this to be said for some of these various forms of murder: that the cruiser, the Zeppelin, or the submarine does run some risk before it gets back to its base. Hence, however vile these deeds may be, they are on a higher plane than the systematic illusage of our prisoners. That is the outrage that will linger longest in our memories and harden our hearts, should they ever incline to soften. It is the most cowardly method of revenge which has ever been heard of in the intercourse of civilized people.

Britain Won't Retaliate.

"What makes it so odious is that it is a method to which we can make no possible reply. It is true that we have very many Germans, officers, men, and civilians, in our power. The total number of Germans on whom we could lay our hands is far higher than the total number of British in Germany. Among them is the son of the chief murderer, at present leading a life of ease at Donnington Hall. These men might be our hostages. But how can we kick, beat, freeze, or starve innocent men who are in our power because our own men have been kicked, beaten, frozen, or starved? It is not possible. Luxuries, indeed, could and should be sternly cut down, but personal ill-usage is out of the question. There lies the cowardice of the German method. It is not only directed against helpless men, but it is directed against a helpless nation, for honor and self-respect forbid us to reply.

"What then can we do? We can circulate the facts among neutrals as one more proof of the absolute degeneration of the German character. We can also mate the truth known to soldiers, so that the torture of their comrades may warm their hearts in the day of battle, and teach them that it is better to die on the field than fall into the cruel hands of German jailers. Finally, we can let the sense of wrong sink into our own souls, that we may be steeled in our determination to have no compromise with such enemies. We need no childish rubber stamps or brooches with blasphemous inscriptions, but deep in our silent souls we vow that we shall feed about midday."

Sir Arthur adds that the correspondent said that before he had this "shocking experience," that Germans told him in the train that they simply kill English prisoners. Others said this was not done in his detachment, but one said twenty-six had been done away with by his company. This is the testimony of a neutral.

A Private's Experience.

The experiences of Private O'Sullivan, No. 7,342, of the Fifth Dragoon Guards, are given. At the time he wrote he was in bed with frost-bitten feet.

"It may interest your readers to know how the Germans treat their prisoners, I will give you my experience," he says. "I was taken prisoner at 7 o'clock on the morning of Nov. 25, together with seven others, east of Ypres. The snow was thick on the ground and the wind bitterly cold. At 9 o'clock the Germans stripped us of all our clothes, with the solitary exception of a thin shirt, and marched us into an open field in charge of two sentries. At night, I with four others, escaped. We were fifteen hours without boots or any kind of clothing except the shirts. When we have taken German prisoners, on many occasions in which I have had the honor of taking part, we have always treated them with consideration, and would never think of leaving them to perish in the cold. True courage is not found accompanied by brutality."

Desmond Callaghan, Major General, writes saying that he has a card from a British prisoner, who asked his mother to "please send me a couple of loaves of bread and a little butter if you can." The card bears the soldier's Christian name but the word "starving" follows it, and this has passed the censor by being mistaken for a surname.

Surgeon General Zviargintsef of the Russian Army also gives testimony regarding the abuse of British prisoners at Stralsund. The British Ambassador at Petrograd reports the case. "The Surgeon General confirms the specially unfavorable treatment of British officers. I think it right, to report what he said about the treatment of the rank and file. He stated, on the authority of a Belgian Sergeant, who had himself first been treated as a common soldier, but afterwards as an officer, that the men, among whom, as he understood, there were a certain number of English private soldiers, were subjected to a régime of extreme harshness. They were quartered in earthen huts which were undrained, unheated, and without light. Their food was less in quantity and worse in quality than that given to the officers and they were compelled to work at draining the marshy country around the camp. Many were already suffering from rheumatism, and their general condition was deplorable.

Sir Arthur adds other testimony to that already given, and quotes the Russian Surgeon General as saying, "The British officers are not as well treated as the Russian officers. They are classed among the less educated Russians, who speak no other language than Russian. The German Lieutenant in charge is openly insulting and hostile toward the British prisoners. One British officer complained of his conduct and expressed the opinion that the German officer was acting on his own feelings and that the German authorities were not aware of his conduct toward the British officers." The Surgeon, however, did not entirely share that view.

"With regard to the food," Sir Arthur goes on," the doctor said it was very bad, both in quality and quantity. The coffee was bad and made with dirty water. The officers were given three pieces of bread a day made with potato meal. Lunch consisted entirely of potatoes. In the evening they received bread and a small slice of sausage."

A Priest's Testimony.

Sir Edward Grey wrote United States Ambassador Page, giving him an account of mistreatment of British prisoners as seen by a French priest.

"A French priest, who has returned to Rome from Minden, where a number of British prisoners of war were confined," he says, "is reported to have given an account of the cruelties practised upon the prisoners by their guards. While 'the French prisoners were very well treated and the Russians not so badly,' the British were singled out for ill-treatment. According to the French priest 'the German soldiers kick the British prisoners in the stomach and break their guns over their backs; they force them to sleep in marshy places, so that many are now consumptive. The British are almost starved and such have been their tortures that thirty of them asked to be shot.'"

"If we could imagine these things to belong to the past they would be less poignant," Sir Arthur observes, "although they would still cry out for retribution. But this wicked cruelty still continues. Here is an authenticated message recently received from Germany. The name is withheld, lest a worse thing befall the writer.

"'We are being starved here,' it says. 'We get rice and water and horse beans only, no solid food, one loaf of bread for six days. Several men have been run through with bayonets by the guard, and a large number are being flogged and tied to a barbed wire post for six hours at a stretch, with their toes just touching the ground. They do this without any just cause. We have one blanket and all the men are suffering from itch and dysentery. The guards knock us about unmercifully with rifles and sticks. We have hardly anything to wear as our captors took our clothes away. It is worse than being in hell. They have given pants, coats, and shirts to the French, but wounded do not get proper treatment and several have died and there will be a lot more yet.'"

GERMAN SOCIALIST ON WAR.

Fighting Editor Say That Conflicts Govern the Hour.

BERLIN, Aug 4, (by Wireless to Sayville, N. Y.)—The Overseas News Agency says that the feelings of the Socialist soldiers at the wront are set forth in a letter from Herr Heilmann, editor of the Chemnitz Volksstimme, to his paper. Herr Heilmann writes:

"The International Party is dead. Mars governs the hour. Not reason and justice, but only our victorious arms and political shrewdness will bring peace. Our enemies must be crushed until the ring around us bursts and their coalition is shattered.

"Peace conditions must be mild in one place and hard in another, making impossible a repetition of the policy to encircle Germany. Against our enemies only one course is helpful; this is described in Schiller's words: 'A thumb upon their eye and a knee upon their breast.'"

DENIES AMERICAN EXODUS.

4,000 Now in Germany, Says Consul—"Fugitives" Movie Men.

BERLIN, Aug. 4, (by Wireless Telegraph to Sayville, L. I.)—The Weekly Bulletin of the American Association of Commerce and Trade of Berlin has published a statement from J. G. Lay, the American Consul General here, relative to a recent report from Paris that Americans were fleeing from Germany and that there were less than 100 in the capital and not more than 500 throughout the empire.

Mr. Lay says there are 800 Americans in Berlin and 4,000 in the empire. The Bulletin explains that "the fleeing Americans" were moving-picture men who were hastening to the United States to deliver their goods and that they were expected to return. American business men, The Bulletin says, travel back and forth in Germany.

BOYED LAYS STORY TO HEAT.

His Only Comment on Alleged German Plot to Use Huerta.

Captain Boy-Ed, the German Naval Attaché, would not discuss the story published yesterday in The Providence Journal and reprinted here, to the effect that the German Ambassador and Captain Boy-Ed had represented the German Government in an attempt to embroil the United States with Mexico, using General Huerta as a catspaw to accomplish their end, further than to say:

"I have nothing to say except that in Providence, apparently, the heat has been even worse than here."

WELLS'S AIR PLAN ATTRACTS FRENCH

Author Going to France to Lecture on What England Is Doing for the Allies.

WANTS 1,000 AEROPLANES

Says They Should Follow Bird Formation in Attack—Chief Difficulty in Supply of Pilots.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 4.—After interviewing H. G. Wells at a London club, a Temps correspondent announces that the author is on the eve of undertaking a lecture tour throughout France to explain what England is doing for the Allies.

Except Rudyard Kipling, Mr. Wells is the best-known and most translated English author in France. His idea of a thousand aeroplanes—"flying batteries" he calls them—has captivated the French imagination. He says he is only waiting to make arrangements for an interpreter, as he does not speak French, before crossin gthe Channel.

Discussing aviation, Mr. Wells says aeroplanes typify the individualist character of the French and English, quick to think and act on their own initiative, as Zeppelins are typical of the Germans, with large crews working together under orders.

Mr. Wells insists that aeroplane work must remain individual, owing to the difficulties of signalling between units of squadrons. Aeroplanes, he says, should follow bird formation in attacks, flying in triangles one after another. He praises the British aeroplane engines, which, he declares, are inferior to none. The present difficulty, he says, is chiefly the pilots, as the training is long and severe, and it is impossible to allow novices to risk valuable machines while learning. Referring to his huge air fleet idea, Mr. Wells says:

"The war has caused aviation to make enormous progress. Experience shows that my idea is possible if applied methodically with sufficient resources. Two classes of aeroplanes have been evolved—light and swift for reconnaissance, and heavy and slow for bomb throwing.

"We ought to multiply 'flying batteries,' which combine the qualities of both. When this is done, we are certain of mastery over earth batteries, which are practically firing blindfold."

BRITISH EMBASSY DENIES.

Contradicts Meagher's Statement as to Crawford Assurances.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—The British Embassy tonight issued a formal denial of a statement attributed to Arthur P. Meagher of St. Louis in explanation of his plan for the purchase of German steamers to haul American goods from Rotterdam. Mr. Meagher said that Sir Richard Crawford of the British Embassy had been quoted as giving assurances that if American importers could obtain the ships to carry their goods from Rotterdam they would not be interfered with. The denial issued by the Embassy follows:

"The papers of Aug. 4 contain a statement by Mr. Arthur P. Meagher, President of Charles H. Wyman & Co., customs brokers of St. Louis, and Vice President of the American Importers' Association, on the subject of the proposed purchase of a German steamship to carry to American dealers merchandise that has accumulated at Rotterdam, Bremen, and other foreign ports. This statement contains the following paragraph:

"'Sir Richard Crawford has been quoted as saying that if the manufacturers and jobbers could get ships to carry their goods from Rotterdam they would not be interfered with.'

"In order to prevent any misunderstanding on the part of American importers, the British Embassy considers it desirable to point out that Sir Richard Crawford has not at any time made any such statement, nor could he give any such assurance without the authorization of the department in London, in whose hands all such decisions rest."

ARTILLERY LESS ACTIVE ON THE WESTERN FRONT

But Hand-to-Hand Combats Continue in the Argonne Region.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—Artillery combats, apparently without any decisive issue, have been waged today along a considerable portion of the western battle-front, although they have slackened the unsuccessful infantry attacks made by the Germans last night upon the French positions in the Argonne, were followed today by fighting with hand grenades and petards.

The official communication issued in Paris tonight is as follows:

"The day has been calm. On the Western portion of the front the activity of the artillery has greatly slackened, except in Belgium, in the sector of Steenstraete and Het Sase, in Artois, in the region of Roclincourt, and between the Somme and the Oise.

In the Argonne there has been fighting with grenades and petards in the region of Marie-Thérèse and St. Hubert, and a violent cannonade in the Forest of Apremont, at Fontenelle, and on the heights of the Linge.

Following is the afternoon report issued by the French War Office:

From the Artois district there was reported last night nothing more than engagements with hand grenades at a point to the north of the Château of Carleul.

In the Argonne the night was full of action. The Germans delivered two attacks, one between Hill No. 213 and the ravine at La Fontaine-aux-Charmes and the other in the region of Marie Thérèse. Our assailants were everywhere thrown back in their trenches by the fire of our infantry and artillery. At Four de Paris and in the direction of Haute Chevauchée there was last night incessant rifle firing between the trenches.

In the Vosges, on the Linge and at Schratzmaennele there were engagements with hand grenades and bombs which resulted to our advantage during one portion of the night. At Barrenkopf we repulsed a German counter attack.

The German Army Headquarters Staff today gave out the following official statement:

In the western theatre there is nothing new to report.

Pihl was able, however, to produce papers showing his connection with the local trade board.

LIQUID FIRE SUFFOCATES.

Works Like a Bunsen Burner on a Huge Scale, a British Officer Says.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

NORTH OF FRANCE, Aug. 4.—An officer who was in the fighting line when the Germans attacked the British with blazing gases has given me his impressions of this novel engine of warfare.

"I don't think the use of these flames any less formidable," he said, "than that of asphyxiating gases. Their effect at short range is much worse, but it is easier to find shelter from them. The flames carry only a relatively short distance and cannot reach you a longg way off, as is often the case with poison gases.

"The flame is yellow, with a blue nucleus and is directed through a powerful air jet. It springs from the ground level and expands into a roaring wave of fire. Indeed, the flame is very like that of the common Bunsen burner of the laboratory, only it is yellower. The pressure of the air or other gas that is used to force the inflammable liquid through the jet must be enormous in view of the volume and fury of the flame.

"Many of the victims died simply from suffocation caused by the intense heat that rolled forward in front of the flames, which did not touch them. The energy and courage shown by our men in face of this terrible surprise attack was beyond praise."

REVIEWS CANADIAN TROOPS.

Bonar Law Pays Tribute to the Sacrifices of the Dominion.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—Canada's contribution to the armed forces of the empire was strikingly displayed today when the British Secretary for the Colonies, Andrew Bonar Law, himself a native of New Brunswick, and the Canadian Minister of Militia, Major Gen. SamHughes, reviewed the Canadians at the Shorncliffe camp. Probably there were more troops in this review than the United States has mustered in one place since the Spanish-American war, and this is but a part of Canada's contribution.

There was a heavy rain from noon until dusk, but, notwithstanding, the men marched with an impressive dash through the puddles.

Mr. Bonar Law, in a brief speech to the officers, praised the Canadian spirit, adding that even their hacrifices were less of a strain than the anxiety of their families across the seas.

Every Province from Nova Scotia to British Columbia was represented.

URGES SOUTH TO AID SHIP PURCHASE PLAN

Extraordinary Conditions, McAdoo Tells North Carolinians, Demand Special Measures.

CITES PLIGHT OF COTTON

And Asserts Governmentally Owned Ships Would Have Kept Prices Up—Naval Auxiliaries Needed.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—The intention of the Administration to press its fight for the Ship Purchase bill, which failed in the Senate at the last session, is made evident in a letter which Secretary McAdoo of the Treasury has written to Charles W. Gold, President of the Chamber of Commerce of Greensboro, N. C., regretting his inability to attend a dinner given by the Chamber tonight. Mr. McAdoo pleads for the South's support of the measure on the ground that an adequate number of American ships would have maintained both the price and the foreign markets for cotton. At the same time he connects the plan for Government controlled ships with the demand for an improved navy by asserting that the proposed law would provide the needed auxiliaries, without which the navy cannot be made effective.

Because of the lack of American ships, Mr. McAdoo says, American foreign trade in cotton has been seriously curtailed by the war, and the ill effect of the war has been nowhere felt so keenly as in the South. Mr. McAdoo holds the Republican filibuster responsible for the failure of the Ship Purchase bill, but he admits regretfully that the Republicans were aided by certain Democrats, several of whom were from the South.

Without reference to the British blockade, Mr. McAdoo explains that the enormous increase in ocean freight rates for cotton was due solely to the lack of American ships, and these ships would have been bought, leased or built if the Ship Purchase bill had passed. This would have meant an increase in the farmer's selling price of cotton of several cents a pound.

Mr. McAdoo illustrates his argument for the purchase of ships by a corporation owned by the Government by references to the ship line between New York and Panama, operated by the Panama Railroad Company, which is owned by the United States. Neither freight nor passenger rates have been increased by the war and great benefits have incurred to American citizens. There is a great opportunity, in his mind, for the increase of American trade with South America and even with Europe while the war curtails the activities of foreign competitors, but he feels that an American business man naturally does not wish to engage in such a venture when the end of the war would leave him dependent upon foreign ships interested in the success of foreign rivals.

Demands "Extraordinary Measures."

"These are times when conditions are extraordinary," Mr. McAdoo writes, "and we must resort to extraordinary measures, if necessary, to meet them. Why should the American people allow their interests to suffer merely because some are too timid to act, or too unintelligent to act, or afraid to utilize the great powers and resources of our Government to rescue us from a situation where private capital refuses to act?

"The paramount duty of the hour is to protect American rights and American interests, through the strong arm of our Government, which is the only reliable agency upon which the people may depend to solve national problems of such magnitude as those which now confront us.

"A Democratic Congress, under the leadership of a Democratic President, passed a currency bill, known as the Federal Reserve act, which is the greatest thing that has been done for this country in a half-century. For the first time in our history the American people are in position to become the leading financial power of the world, but the Federal Reserve act will perform in part only the great service of which it is capable unless we supplement it with the creation of an American merchant marine which will sail to all quarters of the globe, carrying our commerce under the protection of the Stars and Stripes into the open markets of all the world, and giving to our people their just part of the world's trade.

"We must protect American rights and American interests with firmness, with justice, with courage, and with enterprise. We cannot do this unless we have ships. We cannot longer be dependent upon foreign flags. It is not safe to do so. We need American ships not only for the expansion of our commerce, but we imperatively require them as auxiliaries for our navy. Our navy is today sorely handicapped because there are not enough American ships of suitable tonnage and character to form an effective naval auxiliary in time of war.

"A modern navy without adequate and suitable naval auxiliaries is rendered helpless for offensive operations at any considerable distance from its home base. We would be justified today in spending fifty to sixty million dollars for the creation of an adequate fleet of naval auxiliaries. These auxiliaries could be used in time of peace for the training and education of the American seamen upon whose courage and valor and knowledge we should have to depend in the event of war, while, in time of peace, they could be used in the fruitful pursuit of trade with enduring benefit to the commerce, the industry, and the prosperity of our country.

Has No Hope in Private Capital.

"It is simply fatuous to hope that private capital will provide these ships. Private capital will not provide them, even if the navigation laws, about which there is so much irresponsible talk, should be changed as private capital demands. I have never found even two capitalists who agree as to what changes should be made in our navigation laws. I have yet to find any man, who, although arguing that the only thing needed to create an American merchant marine is to change our navigation laws, has been able to tell how the navigation laws should be changed to guarantee the enlistment of private capital.

"Our capitalists are not interested in the shipping business—not because they cannot make money in the shipping business, but because they can make more money in other directions. Moreover, they are not familiar with shipping enterprises and will not engage in them on any large scale, no matter what inducements may be held out.

"We cannot afford to enter upon the scandalous policy of subsidizing private corporations or individuals. To subsidize is merely to make gifts from the Treasury of the United States to those of the strong arm and the long pull, and to repeat all the scandals and corruption which formerly characterized the enactment of our tariff laws. Instead of giving, say, $50,000,000, to subsidize any private interests, it would be far better for the Government to buy $50,000,000 worth of ships and operate them in the interest of our commerce in time of peace and have them as effective naval auxiliaries in time of war."

Mr. Hutchinson Keeps His Son.

Justice Giegerich yesterday vacated a Supreme Court order obtained by Mrs. Ellen Walker to compel her former husband, Frank D. Hutchinson of 121 East Twenty-eighth Street, to surrender their little son, Frank D. Hutchinson, Jr., into her keeping. In his application opposing Mrs. Walker's order, Hutchinson recited that he had divorced her and that she had married Charles Walker of 130 Post Avenue, who was named in the divorce proceedings. Mr. Hutchinson also recited that the boy was happy at the home of his maternal grandmother at Keyser, W. Va., and had begged that he be not taken from his grandmother's care.

U. S. MAIL STOPPED AS CHAUFFEURS QUIT

Seven Strike in Brooklyn When a Friend Is Removed—Warrants Out and Three Arrested.

All mails in Brooklyn were delayed yesterday afternoon because of a strike of the chauffeurs of seven of the twelve automobile mail trucks run by the Cashopheco Transporters, Inc., which has the mail handling contract in Brooklyn. The seven chauffeurs quit work when Andrew Madigan, the General Manager, removed James F. Byrne from the post of Superintendent of the garage at 130 Boerum Place, and Byrne at once resigned rather than suffer demotion.

Madigan sought chauffeurs from other concerns, and got some of the seven trucks running, but he could not man all of them, so that from 1 o'clock on the service was handicapped.

Postmaster William E. Kelly learned of the strike, and after a conference between him, Assistant Fedral Attorney S. J. Reid, and Post Office Inspector C. F. Crowell, Crowell swore out warrants before United States Commissioner Cahoone charging Byrne and the strikers with conspiracy to itnerfere with the mails.

United States Marshal J. M. Power found Byrne with John Murray and Peter Deeds back of the post office watching for trucks of their former company, and he took them to the Raymond Street Jail.

Meantime Mr. Kelly got some regular Government trucks, usually employed only for the handling of parcel post matter, and with these augmented the contractor's service until it became nearly normal. Mr. Madigan expected to have all his trucks running again by today.

ANDERSON LEFT $237,233.

Theatrical Manager's Widow Seeks Entire Estate.

An appraised inventory of the estate of Max C. Anderson, the theatrical manager, filed in the Surrogates' Court yesterday, places the valuation of his properties at $237,233.

Among the assets is a certificate of indebtedness of the B. F. Keith New York Theatres Company, upon which a valuation of $8,000 is placed; also there are 900 shares of the same company, the par value of which is $90,000, but the valuation given in the inventory is $22,500.

Stock of the Broadway and Thirty-ninth Street Company, the par value of which is given at $50,000, is placed in the schedule as of no value at the time of Mr. Anderson's death. The corporation owed the manager $19,850. There are 350 shares of the preferred stock of the United States Lithograph Company, of a par value of $35,000, but no value at all is given to them in the inventory.

Other securities in the schedule are: Stock in the Western Vaudville Theatre Managers' Association, $1,426; twenty bonds of the Central Pacific Railway Company, $17,375; bonds of the New York Gas, Electric Light, Heat and Power Company, $9,960, and fourteen bonds of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Company, $12,740. Mr. Anderson carried life insurance amounting to $35,481, the inventory shows.

Mrs. Nora Howard Anderson of 88 Central Park West, the widow, is administratrix. She claims title to the whole estate, reciting that her husband died intestate, a resident of Ohio, and under the laws of that State the widow receives all, there being no children.

Samuel Ehrenberg, Betty Bleyer, and Mary Ehrenberg of Philadelphia, brother and sisters of the decedent, have filed notice in the Surrogates' Court that Anderson died a resident of New York City and that they are entitled to share in the estate. The Surrogate will pass upon the contention.

LUNCHEON TO CHILD LEAGUE

Adolph Lewisohn Invites Executives to Meet Dr. Goldwater.

Adolph Lewisohn entertained at luncheon at the Mid-Day Club yesterday members of the Executive Committee of the International Child Welfare League. Dr. Goldwater, Health Commissioner of New York City, was the guest of honor. Others present were: Mrs. Walston Hill Brown, President of the International Child Welfare League; Mrs. Dexter Bradford, Mrs. Malcolm Wolcott Clephane, George Foster Peabody, one of the Vice Presidents of the league; Dr. Hastings Hart, a Director of the Child Helping Committee, and Dr. Gershel, of the Hebrew Sheltering Guardian Orphan Asylum. Mrs. Chauncy Stillman is Chairman of the Roof Garden and Playground Committee of the organization, and Mrs. Malcolm Wolcott Clephane is Vice Chairman.

The object of the luncheon was to discuss plans to establish much needed roof playgrounds and gardens on tenements and public schools. It was proposed also to open the public schools in Summer for mothers and children, with a view to instructing the mothers in child training, food values and home economics.

A report was made on the progress of the 3,670 home gardens started by the International Child Welfare League in Westchester County. The success of the home gardens at Tarrytown was so great that the Board of Education has appropriated a sum to make home gardening a part of the school system.

SHAM SWOON IN COURT.

Alleged Shoplifter Exposed by Unsympathetic Detective.

A jury before Judge Crain in General Sessions yesterday had just returned a verdict finding May Anderson, a young woman of 254 West Forty-fifth Street, guilty of petty larceny, when the defendant suddenly toppled from her chair to the floor in what appeared to be a faint. Spectators jumped to their feet. Court attendants rushed about for water. Judge Crain banged his gavel for order.

The detective who had arrested the girl stepped forward and, smiling blandly at the prostrate figure, remarked:

"Oh, let her alone. She'll come around all right if nobody takes any notice of her."

The girl recovered from her swoon instantly, stood up, and glared fiercely at the unsympathetic detective. Then the detective told the court that the young woman was a member of a band of shoplifters. Her part was to drop in a faint in a department store. In the ensuing excitement others would deftly pilfer articles from the counters.

Assistant District Attorney Ellison said both the girl and the codefendant, Clarence Wilson of 212 West 124th Street, had been arrested for shoplifting on several other occasions. It is said they secured a suspended sentence in each case by "squealing" on persons engaged in the traffic in drugs.

Both Wilson and the girl will be sentenced tomorrow.

Carnival at Rockaway Beach.

One of the biggest carnivals ever held in the Rockaways took place last evening when more than 2,000 tent and bungalow dwellers met in Wainwright's big pavilion at the foot of Seaside Avenue, Rockaway Beach, and held their third annual reunion. Dancers in fantastic costumes were present from all parts of the beach, and the big pavilion was crowded. Among the favors were 1,000 imported novelties which were given to the women. Prizes were awarded, and there was also a beauty contest open to men and women.

Not Head of Bowery Savings Bank.

Jay Stanley Foster, sued for breach of promise to marry by Miss Lillian Benson, and whose divorce from Mrs. Jennie Rice Morgan Foster was announced yesterday, is not President of the Bowery Savings Bank, as was erroneously stated, but is President of the Bowery Bank, the similarity in names having led to the confusion.

BLUEJACKETS LAND AT CAPE HAITIEN

Firing When Gen. Blot's Forces Return—Some of Them Give Up Arms.

OTHERS MARCH ON CAPITAL

Bobo's Army Said to Have Rejected Peace Proposals—Connecticut at Port au Prince with Regiment.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—American bluejackets were landed today at Cape Haitien to restore order when there was some firing in connection with the return of the forces of General Blot to the city. The detachment from the Nashville has taken charge of the situation, and the latest message from the commander of the Nashville to the Navy Department said that order had been restored.

Other advices to the Navy Department stated that the commission which Rear Admiral Caperton sent from Port au Prince to prevail upon the rival forces led by Generals Bobo and Blot to disarm and disband had won the co-operation of General Blot, who was in command of the Guillaume Government forces defending Cape Haitien against the revolutionary movement of General Bobo.

General Blot has acceded to the request of Admiral Caperton that he resign his military post and head a movement to organize a commission to administer the civil affairs of Haiti. The Navy Department is without any advices regarding the attitude of General Bobo, and none of his forces had entered Cape Haitien when the dispatch was sent. It is reported that they have rejected the peace proposals.

A dispatch to the State Department sent from Cape Haitien at 9 o'clock this morning read:

General Blot, commanding former Government troops, left for Fort Liberté last night with part of army. Of remainder some have surrendered their arms and are seeking refuge. The others are marching with arms in the direction of Port au Prince. The Nashville is now landing sailors. The revolutionary army has not yet entered Cape Haitien.

A later message from Admiral Caperton stated that there was some firing when General Blot entered Cape Haitien and that the Nashville had landed a detachment and taken charge of the situation. The Nashville had 176 men on board available for landing.

Rear Admiral William S. Benson, Chief of Naval Operations, said today that with the arrival at Port au Prince of the battleship Connecticut with the second regiment of marines as reinforcements a total force of 1,300 marines and bluejackets could now be placed on shore in an emergency. Admiral Benson said the Navy Department did not contemplate sending any more reinforcements to Haiti, but if it should become necessary the armored cruiser Tennessee, now at New York, would be sent there.

President Wilson is keeping a close watch on the situation in Haiti. All advices relating to conditions there are being forwarded to the Summer White House as rapidly as they arrive.

Secretary Lansing has spent several hours each day lately in conference with Americans familiar with Haiti. No political steps have been determined upon by this Government, however, and probably none will be planned until some form of government has been established with which the United States may negotiate.

CAPE HAITIEN, Aug. 4.—Government officials who have been in this city have fled to Fort Liberté on the dispatch boat Pacifique.

Revolutionist troops are beginning to enter the city, and marines have been landed from the United States gunboat Nashville to maintain order.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 4.—The United States gunboat Castine left today for Port au Prince to join Admiral Caperton's squadron.

ONLY 326,700 IMMIGRANTS.

Aliens Admitted During Last Fiscal Year Fewest Since 1899.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—Immigration was at its lowest since 1899 during the twelve months ended July 1, and the net increase in the foreign population during the fiscal year was only a little more than 50,000.

Statistics issued today show 326,700 immigrant and 107,544 non-immigrant aliens admitted during the year, while 204,074 emigrant and 180,100 non-emigrant aliens departed. Admission was refused to 24,181 aliens.

During the previous year 1,218,480 immigrants entered the United States.

Italian immigration showed the greatest falling off, 238,000 fewer Italians having arrived than during the previous year. Other decreases were: Polish, 118,000; Hebrew, 111,000; German, 59,000; Russian, 40,000; Magyar, 40,000; Croatian and Slavonian, 35,000; Ruthenian, 33,000; Slovak, 23,000; Rumanian, 22,000; Lithuanian, 19,000; English, 13,000; Scandinavian, 11,000; Bulgarian, Serbian and Montenegrin, 11,000; Irish, 10,000; Finnish, 9,000; French, 5,500; Spanish, 5,500; Turkish, 2,400.

American travel to Europe decreased 196,385 during the year, compared with the previous twelve months, and there was also a decrease of 47,007 in the number of Americans arriving from abroad. The war is the main cause of the decline of both immigration and travel.

STOCK SALE AUTHORIZED.

5,000 Shares to be Disposed Of by Brokers' Receiver.

Judge A. N. Hand has authorized Ralph Wolf, receiver of J. F. Pierson, Jr., & Co., stock brokers, formerly of 74 Broadway, to sell a lot of stocks and bonds on the New York Stock Exchange or the Curb. They have come into his possession from equities returns from loans, or were in the "box" at the time the bankruptcy petition was filed.

There are about 5,000 shares of various railroad and mining stocks in lots from one share to 1,300. It was stated that a majority of the creditors of the firm had accepted an offer of composition at 50 cents on the dollar, and that Peter B. Olney, referee, was about to file his report recommending acceptance.

A petition was filed against the firm on Dec. 8, 1914. The liabilities were $780,083.

Auto Crushes Man Against Pole.

The steering gear of an auto truck driven by Meyer Ripstein of 280 Metropolitan Avenue, Brooklyn, failed to work yesterday afternoon and the truck swerved toward the curb where a number of longshoremen were standing in front of an electric light pole at Eleventh Avenue and Twenty-second Street. Bernard Fitzpatrick, a longshoreman, of 420 West Twenty-ninth Street, was crushed against the iron pole. Ripstein was thrown twenty-five feet to the sidewalk. Fitzpatrick was killed instantly. Ripstein, who was removed to Bellevue Hospital suffering from internal injuries and a possible fracture of the skull, was charged with homicide.

Dopey Benny Gangster Guilty.

Louis Wexler, known as Waxey Gordon, of the "Dopey Benny" gang, pleaded guilty to grand larceny before Judge Malone in General Sessions yesterday. He was indicted on the complaint of Isaac Stolopolsky of 381 Grand Street, whom he had held up and robbed of a gold watch and $465 on Feb. 20 last. He will be sentenced on Monday.

SUFFRAGISTS TO GATHER.

Council Fire Night Will Be Celebrated Tomorrow.

Interborough Council Fire Night will be celebrated by the members of the Woman's Suffrage Party in Manhattan, the Bronx and Richmond tomorrow evening. This is to celebrate the evolution of woman to a point where she feels that she is able to take part in the Councils of the State. The biggest celebration will take place in a large open place at 204th Street and Sherman Avenue. Erminie Kahn will call the councilors with a trumpet peel from a high ledge of rocks. A phonograph will furnish the music.

Camp fire girls will distribute literature and sell buttons, there will be a recruiting tent where Mrs. Malcolm Clephane will tell the political fortunes of suffrage leaders and predict the result at the polls on November 2. At the close of the meeting red, white and blue balloons will be sent up. Speakers will be Mrs. James Lees Laidlaw, Miss Adeline Sterling, Miss Lavinia Dock, Miss Portia Willis, James Lees Laidlaw and Judge Charles D. Appleton. Prizes will be given out at the Woman Suffrage Party headquarters, 48 East Thirty-fourth Street, to any one bringing in any of the balloons sent off.

Council Fire Night will be celebrated in the Bronx at 181st Street and Washington Bridge, near Ogden Avenue, and in Richmond there will be a high bonfire on Ward's Hill. Mrs. Oreola Haskell is Chairman of the Committee on Arrangements, on which are Mrs. M. L. Ogden, Mrs. Robert Adamson, Miss V. Thorburn, Mrs. Stephane and Dr. Lillian Randall of Manhattan; Mrs. William Swan and Mrs. Harriet Reynolds of the Bronx, and Mrs. F. E. Brewer and Miss Amy Blake of Richmond.

ANTI-SUFFRAGE STRAW VOTE

Men Are with Them, Women Opposed to Ballot Say.

"Reports circulated by the suffragists that the straw votes at the Chautauqua debates between Miss Lucy Price and Miss Helen Todd were stopped because Miss Price complained that her defeats injured her reputation as a debater are not true," said the anti-suffragists yesterday at the headquarters of the New York State Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage, 35 West Thirty-ninth Street.

"Miss Price and Miss Todd have spoken thirty-four times since June 26, when the Chautauqua debates began. In four out of every five towns where these votes were taken the majority of the men were against woman suffrage, and in every case the majority of both men and women were against suffrage.

"At Moravia 43 men and 187 women voted against suffrage and 35 men and 130 women for. At Ovid 39 men and 136 women voted against and 19 men and 104 women for. At Cazenovia the joint majority against suffrage was 77 and at Hamilton 7, and in each instance there was a large majority of the men against.

"The ballots taken at the eleven Chautauquas resulted in the men voting against suffrage at eight of them and for suffrage at only three, and at one of these the majority in favor was only 2. At Perry, the first debate, the men voted 36 for and 103 against, or three to one against, which is about the proportion the suffragists claim will be the result in November."

PROTESTS VETERAN CLAUSE

Commissioner Williams Opposed to Preferment for Ex-Soldiers.

Water Commissioner William Williams wrote a letter yesterday to Rush Rhees, Chairman of the Civil Service Committee of the Constitutional Convention, protesting against the proposal to insert in the new constitution a clause giving Spanish-American war veterans and volunteer firemen a preference as regards appointment to and retention in civil service positions. Mr. Williams is a Spanish-American war veteran himself.

"I wonder," said the Commissioner, "how many advocates of the idea have given serious thought to its effect upon the efficiency of executive government. It is no small task to administer great public offices, even with the best available assistance,, and it becomes still more difficult when department heads are handicapped by being frequently required to choose for appointment or retention men of low efficiency in preference to those of high efficiency.

"It is pertinent to inquire what Spanish-American war veterans as a class have done to entitle them to be rewarded at the expense, first, of their less fortunate brethren, in the civil service appointment, but have not had the opportunity of going to war for their country, and, second, of efficient administration. I speak as one of them, and I know that many of them share my views.

"The proposed action will be an inducement to many Spanish war veterans to migrate to this State, and in effect take the bread out of the mouths of men born and bred here and often much more competent to fill the places in question. Has any valid reason been advanced why those engaged in the weighty task of writing a new constitution for this State should have their time occupied with a question of this character?"

STABBED IN ROW OVER SHIRT

Owner Took It Off to Keep Cool and Neighbor Objected.

Magistrate Corrigan in the Tombs Court heard an unusual defense yesterday when David Regan, a peddler, of 189 Park Row, charged with feloniously assaulting Benedetto Triano, excused his act on the ground that Triano on the fire escape of their home, on Friday last, insisted on removing his shirt to keep cool.

Regan said that in the fight he received a blow on the head which knocked him unconscious, therefore if he really stabbed Triano, as ten knife wounds in Triano's body would seem to show, it must have been done while he—Regan—was unconscious. He remembered everything but the stabbing. From that point on, he said yesterday, he would have to plead a loss of memory.

Judge Corrigan was not convinced, and held Regan in $1,000 bail for the Grand Jury.

To Drive Mosquitos from Queens.

Persons living in Queens are striving to eliminate the mosquito. The first step will be taken tonight, at a mass meeting in the Station Square at Forest Hills. Deputy Commissioner Haven Emerson of the Department of Health, Park Commissioner Wier of Queens, and Superintendent of Public Works Dayton of Queens are to be among the speakers. Moving pictures of mosquito extermination in other localities will be shown. Resolutions will be passed urging the Borough President to go ahead with the draining of the Flushing and Jamaica Bay marshes, and an Executive Committee with representatives from all the villages in Queens will be formed.

GARMENT WORKERS' STRIKE IS AVERTED

Both Sides Sign Agreement for Two Years with Higher Wage Scale.

MAYOR'S COUNCIL ALIVE

Conciliatory Body Will Continue Its Existence—Workers Were Prepared to Quit Today.

The manufacturers in the cloakmaking industry of New York yesterday afternoon accepted the findings of Mayor Mitchel's Council of Conciliation, which were ratified by the unions ten days awo, and the impending strike of 60,000 members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union was called off.

The crisis which was passed yesterday afternoon arose because of different interpretations put upon the findings of the committee relative to the right of discharge. The Council yesterday stated that it accepted no one's interpretation and regarded its findings as sufficiently explicit. The Council said that in response to a request from the Mayor it had constituted itself a permanent board of arbitration for all disputes between the Cloak, Suit and Skirt Manufacturers' Protective Association and the needle workers' unions.

The findings of the Council, handed down ten days ago, provided for a court of review to pass upon the justice or injustice of the discharge of workers. The unions had asked for this to guard against the wholesale dismissal of union leaders by the employers. They interpreted the findings of the Council to mean that every discharged workman had a right to have his case reviewed. The manufacturers held that only those whose complaints in writing should show a prima facie case of injustice should be heard.

The Council did not go into the merits of the interpretations, but announced it would sit, upon request, in the future and place its own construction upon the rules it had laid down. These rules say the employer has a right to discharge "the incompetent, the insubordinate, the inefficient, those unsuited to his shop or those unfaithful to their obligations." Whenever a discharged workman can show in writing a reasonable doubt that his dismissal cannot be predicated upon these premises, he shall have a right to have his case reviewed by a tribunal composed of one representative of the employers, one of the workers and an impartial third member.

Comments on Treaty of Peace.

After the settlement had been announced, Dr. Felix Adler, head of the Council of Conciliation, said:

"We have tried in twenty-three sessions to consider the urgent claims presented by both sides. We do not feel that we have done absolute justice, but we have established a footing to produce good will, which is essential to peace. Either side may claim the victory. That is a minor matter. What is real is that we have created the machinery for the settlement of disputes.

"The Mayor's Council is to continue in force. Today's action is a treaty of peace. It is a beginning of the establishment of a common understanding for the settlement of social differences."

For the unions Morris Hillquit, counsel, said:

"Both sides have accepted the council's finding unconditionally. We understand that the council does not consider itself bound by anything except its own principles, and in that spirit that we accept unreservedly the findings the members have reached. We will live up to the agreement in the best of faith, and we expect the manufacturers to do likewwise."

For the manufacturers, Charles Heinemann, Chairman of the Executive Committee, issued this statement:

"The association accepted the findings of the council on July 28, but it coupled with its acceptance the statement that if the interpretation the unions put upon the findings was correct, the association could not finally agree. The council has assured the association that the findings are clear upon their face and that all other interpretations are unwawrranted and not justified. It has promised to stand guard against any misinterpretations of the document.

"Dr. Felix Adler appealed to us in the name of the city to accept the recommendations and avert a strike. In this spirit we have accepted."

Were Ready to Strike Today.

Two thousand shop foremen yesterday were gathered about the Bar Association, where the all-day negotiations were carried on, ready to bear back to the shops the word to strike today. After the settlement was reached they were notified by Benjamin Schlesinger, President of the union, to tell the workers to stay at work and that everything had been settled.

The articles of settlement as laid down by the council, consisting of Dr. Adler, Charles L. Bernheimer, Louis D. Brandeis, City Chamberlain Bruere, Dr. George W. Kirchwey, and ex-Judge Walter C. Noyes, provide for an agreement for two years, to be renewed for a like term at the expiration of two years unless either party shall give a two months' notice of a wwish to abrogate the agreement. The union agrees that there shall be no strike during the term of the agreement. The agreement, besides defining the right of discharge, established a minimum scale of wages, affirmed the right of the workers to organize, gave the employer the right to distribute work according to the condition of trade, the right to select his own employes, and the right to reorganize his shop when he thinks it necessary.

The following table shows the weekly wage scale won by the unions, compared with the former scale:

	New Rate.	Old Rate.	Rate Asked.
Cutters	$27.00	$25.00	$30.00
Jacket under pressers	25.00	23.50	28.00
Reefer upper pressers	25.00	23.50	28.00
Skirt upper pressers	23.00	21.50	26.00
Skirt under pressers	18.00	16.50	20.00
Jacket under pressers	21.00	19.50	25.00
Reefer under pressers	21.00	19.50	23.00
Sample makers	23.00	22.00	25.00
Basters	15.00	14.00	16.00
Skirt finishers	11.00	10.00	12.00

The increases won on piece workers were: Operators granted wage of 70 cents an hour; they asked for 75 cents. Finishers granted 50 cents; they asked for 60 cents. Buttonhole makers granted 90 cents to $1.30 a hundred; they asked for $1 to $1.40.

NO BIG MACHINISTS' STRIKE.

Keppler Says Eight-Hour Day Campaign Is Won, Practically.

J. J. Keppler, Vice President of the International Association of Machinists, issued a statement last night in which he said the necessity for a national strike of machinists had passed, because more than 200,000 machinists had received the eight-hour day and increases in wages from employers who wished to avoid a strike. He said the unions would deal individually with the firms who refused the eight-hour day, but that the indications were that almost all plants would grant the demands of the men.

Keppler said demands for the eight-hour day would soon be made by the 10,000 machinists of Philadelphia.

W. H. Johnston, President of the International Association of Machinists, yesterday called a meeting for tomorrow afternoon in Hartford, Conn., of all organizers who have been at work in the Eastern States for the past three months, to outline plans for a general campaign in New England for the eight-hour day.

At the offices of the machinists, 116 Nassau Street, it was said that 200 small machine shops in New York City had granted the eight-hour day, and that 200 more were expected to settle in the next ten days. Announcement was also made of a mass meeting of the machinists of the Gaevin Machine Company, now on strike, at 179 Varick Street, tomorrow morning.

Five hundred metal workers employed by the Sloan & Chase Company of Newark, manufacturers of fine tools, walked out of the shop, at Sixth Avenue and North Thirtieth Street, yesterday when officials of the company refused their demand for an eight-hour day. The Sloan & Chase Company now works its men fifty-five hours a week. Lodge 14 of the Brotherhood of Metal Workers is directing the strike.

WANT NEW ADMINISTRATORS

Beneficiaries Under Mrs. Cutter's Will Make Charges.

Application was made in the Surrogates' Court yesterday to have W. McMaster Mills, Vice President of the Union Trust Company, and George Ramsay of 900 Ocean Avenue, Flatbush, removed as temporary administrators of the $1,000,000 estate of Mrs. Amelia Gertrude Cutter, who died on April 3, 1914. Mrs. Cutter was the widow of Henry T. Cutter, who was the organizer of the Hegeman chain of drug stores.

To Ramsay, who had been an errand boy in Mr. Cutter's office, was bequeathed $200,000, and Mills, a friend of the aged Mrs. Cutter, was to receive $100,000 under a will of Mrs. Cutter's which Surrogate Cohalan declared to be invalid. The Surrogate said it showed appearances of having been obtained by fraud.

The application yesterday was filed in behalf of George W. S. Lent and Ida L. Grout of 880 Carroll Street, Brooklyn, who recited that they were beneficially interested in the estate and that Ramsay and Mills became administrators only after falsely reciting that the discarded will was valid.

CHARGED WITH LOAN FRAUD.

Operator Gave $3,000 Check on Which Nix Got Nothing.

On a charge of giving a worthless check for $3,000 after having accepted $147.50 as a premium on a transaction, George Loffler, a real estate operator of 344 Waverly Place, Richmond Hill, was held yesterday in $1,500 bail for examination by Magistrate Levy in West Side Court tomorrow.

Frederick Nix of 328 East Sixty-first Street, said he answered an advertisement inserted by Loffler a few weeks ago, offering to advance money on first mortgages, and that he offered Loffler a mortgage of $3,000 on some property and received a check on the Ridgewood National Bank of Brooklyn, which was returned marked "No account." Nix also said he paid $147.50 premium for the loan he was to get.

Detective James Gallagher arrested Loffler when the advertisement again appeared.

LUNACY INCREASING IN STATE

Asylum Reports Show 353.6 Persons in 100,000 Insane.

ALBANY, Aug. 4.—A steady increase in the number of insane persons in New York State during the last twenty-five years is shown by figures made public today by Francis M. Hugo, Secretary of State. He reports that there are 36,240 insane persons in the hospitals and private institutions of the State, or 353.6 persons out of each 100,000 of population. In 1890 the proportion per 100,000 population was 249, in 1900, 304, and in 1912, 329.7.

The greatest increase is shown in the criminal insane. In 1903 the number of persons in the two hospitals devoted to this class of patients was 905 as compared with 1,360 in 1915, an increase of more than 50 per cent. in ten years.

Of the 33,900 patients in the fourteen State hospitals approximately 56 per cent. are of native birth and 4.4 per cent. are foreign born. Twenty-six per cent. of the latter are aliens. In this connection Secretary Hugo reports that the percentage of aliens in the hospitals will show an increase this year on account of the war, which permits comparatively few deportations. Since 1905 the State has deported 5,689 insane aliens.

Secretary Hugo reports that it costs the State $206.91 a year for each inmate of an insane hospital or nearly $7,500,000 yearly for all.

Sarah Cowell Lemoyne's Estate.

Sarah Cowell Lemoyne, the actress, who died on July 17 at Lake Placid, whither she had gone for the Summer, left a personal estate of only $500, according to the statement filed in the Surrogate's Court yesterday by her niece, Justine Noyes of 453 West Twenty-second Street. Mrs. Noyes applied for letters of administration on the estate in preference to Edward L. Cowell of Chicago, a nephew of the actress.

NEW DEFENSE BAND OPENS LOCAL OFFICE

Starts Clearing House at 303 Fifth Avenue for All Kindred Organizations.

THINKS CONGRESS REMISS

Statement Praises Gardner and Calls Attention to Weakness in the Army and Navy.

The American Defense Society, acting as a national publicity headquarters and clearing house for all organizations urging a great army and navy, has opened offices at 303 Fifth Avenue, and yesterday submitted papers of incorporation. Many of the officers and members have been active in the propaganda for the strengthening of the country's defenses. In a statement of its purposes issued yesterday the society says:

"At this time the American Defense Society desires publicly to commend Congressman Augustus P. Gardner for inaugurating single handed the present campaign for better defenses. When last January he proposed and urged Congressional inquiry into the state of the country's defenses, the entire weight of the Administration was used to crush his proposal.

"To the facts brought forward by Mr. Gardner, the answer says that he was playing politics. However, he stands today as the pioneer of the movement for better national defense. His statements of facts stand today uncontroverted, and today the Administration at Washington is debating the question of a special session of Congress, with all its unnecessary expense and unnecessary delay, for the very purpose urged by Mr. Gardner as long ago as last January.

"Recently a good deal has been said in the press, about the appointment of a Citizens' Advisory Board for the consideration of naval problems, but the fact remains that today the ships actually in commission are short over 5,000 men and 339 officers. Many of the ships now in commission are of an obsolete type. Our submarine flotilla exists chiefly on paper. Naval policy—we have none.

"What is true of navy preparedness is also true in the same degree of the army. There are today but 30,000 mobile troops in the United States. Our coast defenses are unmanned. Our National Guard is far below its paper strength. We are without necessary ammunition, field pieces, equipment. We are also without an aviation corps, which means today that both the army and navy are without eyes to see the enemy.

"One whole year has passed since the outbreak in Europe, and although as a nation we have grave diplomatic exchanges with at least two of the belligerent powers, still nothing has been done by Congress in the way of improving our national defense.

"Public support for preparedness is still feeble, unorganized and altogether unworthy of that name, especially with the clouds of war on the horizon. It is, therefore, the definite purpose of the American Defense Society to summon public support for the existing leagues, each with a proper field of activity.

"The American Defense Society is the announced enemy of those peace organizations who urge disarmament, and so by their program of non-resistance invite an invasion of American rights and American territory. It is also the announced enemy of all those politicians, either in office or out of office, who put self and party above the protection of the men, women and children of America."

The society also praises the individual efforts to awaken public sentiment in favor of increased preparedness made by Theodore Roosevelt, Major Gen. Leonard Wood, Rear Admiral Fiske, ex-Secretary of the Navy George Von L. Meyer, ex-Secretary of the Navy Charles J. Bonaparte, ex-Secretaries of War Jacob M. Dickinson, Luke E. Wright and Henry L. Stimson; Richard Harding Davis, Major Henry Reuterdahl, Hudson Maxim, Frederic R. Coudert, Dr. Lyman Abbott and S. Stanwood Menken.

The management of the American Defense Society is vested in a Board of Trustees, of which the members are J. Bernard Walker of the Scientific American, Clevelend H. Moffett, Henry Cole Quinby, Robert W. Neeser, Cushing Stetson, Commander R. R. Riggs, U. S. N., retired; and C. S. Thompson.

Police Seek a Crime Teacher.

Lulius Greenberg, 1 years old, who lives with his parents at 166 Norman Avenue, Williamsburg, was arrested yesterday, charged with burglary. It was said he was taught to steal by a man living in the Greenpoint district of Brooklyn. The police have his name and are now searching for him. The boy forced an entrance into the apartments of Mrs. Frances Bobosky, on the second floor of the Norman Avenue house. He was ready to take a car for Coney Island when arrested, and all the stolen property was found on him.

GALE AND RAIN COST EIGHT LIVES IN CITY

Tug and Schooner Are Wrecked and the Captains of Both Are Among Dead.

ALL RAIL TRAFFIC IMPEDED

Cellars Flooded and Rafts Are Used —Trees and Crops Suffer— Tents Blown Down.

Wind and rain destroyed life, property, and lines of cummication in New York City and nearby communities yesterday, when the local area was caught in the fury of two approaching storm centres.

The heaviest storm swept up the Atlantic Coast States, extending hundreds of miles inward from the sea, and the other tore east from Lake Michigan to meet it. From Pennsylvania, Maryland, and New Jersey, north to the St. Lawrence Gulf, the two storms held war in the air. They left Erie (Penn.) drowned Tuesday night, bent New York beneath an increasing volume of wind yesterday morning, and passed on to deluge and destroy further north.

The two-headed storm reached the hight of its violence in New York about 9 o'clock in the morning, when the wind blew sixty-four miles an hour and the rain fell in sheets. Between 7 and 10 o'clock the average wind velocity was sixty miles and the rainfall for the six hours ending with this period was 2.19 inches.

According to latest reports received last night, eight deaths resulted from the storm in this city and the reported injuries of persons weren umbered by the dozens.

The Dead.

CHADWICK, A. J., 72 years old, an inmate of the Sailors Snug Harbor, Staten Island.

MARTIN, E., 40, sailor on the schooner M. V. B. Chase.

MORRIS, ALBERT, 50, Captain of the tug Elsie K.

O'NEIL, PATRICK, 26, of 120 Hull Street, Brooklyn.

TUTTLE, H. F., 45, Captain of the schooner M. V. B. Chase.

UNIDENTIFIED BOY, 16 years old, washed ashore at Oriental Point, Manhattan Beach.

VRIONIS, STARVAN, 53, of 2,683 Amsterdam Avenue.

WARD, JOHN, 23, of 54 Greenwood Avenue, Brooklyn.

Schooner Lost Off the Hook.

The storm wrecked hundreds of small boats in New York Harbor, Kill Van Kull, Sheepshead Bay, and other waters. The three-masted schoner M. V. B. Chase, bound from Cheverie, Nova Scotia, for Norfolk, Va., with a cargo of plaster rock under the charge of Captain H. F. Tuttle and a crew of five men, foundered off Sandy Hook. The agents are Pendleton Brothers of 30 Pearl Street, New York.

The schooner was beating down the coast off Long Island when the gale struck her on Tuesday night. She had little freeboard owing to the read weight in her hold, and her main deck was nearly awash, which stopped her from making much seaway.

The velocity of the wind increased rapidly, and the vessel was blown helplessly out of her course until midnight, when Captain Tuttle heard the roar of the surf. The starboard anchor was let go, but the cable parted and the schooner started to drift again. She was held later by the port anchor.

Captain Tuttle and his cref spent the rest of the night lashed under the lee of the after deckhouse expecting every moment to be carried overboard by one of the big white-topped seas which swept with monotonous regularity over the decks. Pounding on the sand, the schooner seemed likely to go to pieces any moment.

At dawn the crew lowered a whaleboat at the stern and dropped into it, followed by the skipper, who took the stern sweep to steer by. The Sandy Hook coastguard men could do nothing for the men, as the ship was too far away for the breeches buoy and the seas were too heavy for a lifeboat. Just after the whaleboat had passed the outer edge of the breakers, amidst shouts from the spectators on the beach, a big wave engulfed it and it capsized.

Captain Tuttle and one of the sailors disappeared and never rose again. The four others were washed ashore and dragged to safety by the coastguardsmen. The body of the Captain was found later lashed to the stern of the whaleboat on the beach.

The small tug Elsie K., which is owned by the Kennedy Towing Company of 32 South Street, was swamped off Constable Hook, N. J. Her Captain, Albert Morris, died at the Crabtree Dock, West New Brighton, S. I.

Rescued from Water.

The tug was on her way to Elizabethport, with a barge in tow, and reached the Kill von Kull, fighting every inch of the way. Her whistles for assistance were heard by the ocean tug Murray and Standard Oil Tug 16, which started to the rescue. Just as they got o her the Elsie K. opened her seams and sank. Captain Morris was thrown into the water alongside Robert Coons, the engineer, who was hurled overboard when he tried to cu the hawser made fast to the barge. The Captain and the engineer, with Nielsen, the cook, and John Sleigh, the fireman, were picked up by the Standard Oil tug.

Another man drowned in the storm was aPtrick O'Neil, who went swimming in Princess Bay, Staten Island, early in the morning. His body was washed ashore there at 10 o'clock and, as he was clad only in a bathing suit, it was was some hours before he was identified.

A. J. Chadwick left Sailors Snug Harbor shortly after 7 o'clock in the morning and walked two and a half miles in the wind and rain to the ferry station at St. George. As he was about to purchase a ferry ticket he fell dead from exhaustion.

As he was crossing 168th Street at Audubon Avenue, protecting himself with an umbrella, Starvan Vrionis was killed by an automobile truck driven by William Reed of Jersey City. Reed was arrested and held in $500 bail pending the inquest.

The death of John Ward was due indirectly to the storm. He was a plumber employed by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company and he was inspecting the effect of the water pressure on the tunnel of the Centre Street loop, near the Canal Street station, when a crowbar in his hand got in contact with the third rail. The shock of electricity caused instant death.

Gustave Anderson, on board the yacht Mazie, found the body of the boy washed ashore at Oriental Point. The boy wore only a bathing suit, and had brown hair and blue eyes. His body was taken to the Coney Island Morgue.

There may be one or more deaths on board an unidentified three-masted schooner that was sighted in the afternoon eight miles off Toms River by a coast guard. Her sails were blown away and her American flag was at half mast. She disappeared headed north and was reported to Sandy Hook, but the lookout there never caught sight of her.

Tent Colonies Suffer.

The greatest inconvenience and damage in New York City due to the storm was in Brooklyn. Tents of hundreds of Summer campers in colonies on Long Island, Staten Island, City Island, and the Westchester shore were swept away.

Through the bursting of a sewer at Foster Avenue, the cut between Flatbush and Newkirk Avenues, on the Brighton Beach Line of the B. R. T., was ½ooded, and for hours no trains could pass. The service was operated from Church Avenue to Park Row only during the greater part of the day.

On account of the high water at Brighton Beach, shuttle service had to be operated from the Culver station to the Brighton Beach station, and from Brighton Beach to Avenue H. There was no service between Church avenue and Avenue H for hours. Besides the Brighton Beach Line these surface lines of the B. R. T. were seriously a%ected: Jamaica Avenue, Reid Avenue, Tompkins Avenue, Lorimer Street, Union Avenue, Cypress Avenue, Cypress Avenue, Flatbush Avenue, Ocean Avenue, Grand Street, Flushing-Ridgewood, Church Avenue, Gates Avenue and Richmond Hill.

The Brighton line cut was a rushing river after the rain had ceased, and nearby streets became its tributaries. The traks between Newkirk Avenue and Cortelyou Road at one time were under six feet of water.

In Ocean Parkway at Brighton Beach the water rose and spread from the steps of the Hotel Shelbourne to the new Brighton Theatre. Many persons made their way from the hotel to accessible transit stations in small boats and on improvised rafts. The water rose in the Gowanus Canal to the highest level ever known, and was within two feet of flooding the banks. Lakes formed in Park Circle and the Plaza, Brooklyn, and Surf Avenue, Coney Island, was a chain of small lagoons.

Parts of the beach at Coney Island and along the water front near by were washed away and waves broke over the boardwalks in many places. Small shops and stands in the pleasure places were wrecked, many of them being carried several blocks by the wind.

Hundreds of trees in Brooklyn were uprooted, many of them fine old shade trees. The districts that suffered most from this destruction were Flatbush, Bay Ridge, Bath Beach, Cypress Hills, and Stuyvesant Heights. Cellars all over the borough were flooded and much stored property was damaged. In many places sewers proved entirely inadequate to carry off the water. In Sheepshead, Gravesend, and Jamaica Bays, hundreds of small boats were set adrift and swamped. Numerous small piers and moorings were washed away.

Floods in Manhattan.

In Grand Street and West Broadway, Manhattan, the water was a foot and a half deep and overflowed across the sidewalks into cellars. Trolley traffic in both thoroughfares was tied up for hours, and many cars were stalled near by in Sixth Avenue. Passengers climbed through the windows of the cars and waded to the sidewalks. At Thompson and Grand Streets the water was two feet deep and flowed through Thompson Street north ino Broome Street and south into Canal Street, flooding cellars on the way.

Trees were blown down all over Manhattan and the Bronx, two of them in City Hall Park, one east of the City Court Building and the other south of the County Court House. While the storm was at its height thousands took scant refuge on the asphalt walk between the two court buildings, and as they fled to this sport around the corner of the City Court Building many lost umbrellas, which were jerked from their hands and turned inside out. After the storm was over torn umbrellas were strewn all over City Hall Park.

Subway excavations in Manhattan and the Bronx were flooded and engineers kept constant watch on affected foundations. J. Stewart Wilson, Superintendent of Highways in the Bronx, worked with three men for many hours pumping out cellars atnd pits where the gathering of water might cause damage.

A short circuit caused by water started a fire in the subway 100 feet north of 135th Street and Ninety-sixth Street was tied up for twenty minutes. The fire made considerable smoke that caused excitement among passengers in the 137th Street station and on a train at the platform, but the damage was slight.

Three inches of water covered the tracks of the subway at 116th Street and Lenox Avenue, but trains over this section were not delayed.

Railroad service into New York was subject to delay, but by noon yesterday normal service had been practically restored on all of the lines. The Twentieth Century Limited, due in New York from Chicago, at :20 yesterday morning, arrived twelve hours late, and the Fast Mail, between the same points, due at 7:20 in the morning, did not get in until after seven o'clock last night. The west bound Twentieth Century Limited, due in Chicago from New York at 9:45 yesterday morning, arrived there only one hour late, after having been shunted from Buffalo over the tracks of the Michigan Central Railroad.

Trains Stopped by Washout.

The Pennsylvania Railroad service to Long Branch was cut off for a time, due to a washout at Burlington, N. J., and another overflow at an elevation near Rahway caused similar trouble; but by 10 o'clock in the morning regular traffic had been resumed. The Central Railroad of New Jersey was menaced by the water in many places, but emergency crews prevented washouts, and traffic remained normal throughout the storm. The Long Island Railroad experienced temporary difficulties.

There was destruction of telephone and telegraph wires connecting New York with Washington, Albany, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Richmond, but at no time were all of the wires to any point down, and business was handled with some delay until normal conditions were restored, about noon.

Crops suffered heavily on Long Island and in Westchester and nearby New Jersey. In many fields corn was beaten down to the ground and fruit trees were broken. Some farms were completely under water for hours after the storm had passed.

The storm was particularly severe on the south shore of tSaten Island. A large part of Freeport was inundated, and many commuters went to the railroad station from their homes in boats.

Westchester towns suffered from wind and rain nearly as much as the Long Island settlements. All of the cellars in the lower parts of White Plains were flooded, and the widely admired sunken garden in the Greenace section of Hartsdale was damaged seriously. New Rochelle was hard hit, but precautions had been taken because of the storm signals posted, and the damage to vessels was comparatively slight. Ferry service was suspended during the storm. Many residence parks near the town were made swamps.

There was much damage in Hoboken, Bayonne, Atlantic Highlands, and other Jersey towns near New York. In Atlantic Highlands many persons, driven from their homes by the water, fled in boats and were not able to return to their homes until afternoon.

Staten Island, because of its exposed condition, was laid waste in many places. More than 2,000 new trees planted between St. George and New Brighton were blown down, and the best trees surrounding the residences of New Brighton were also destroyed.

Burned by Falling Wires.

One of the chief causes of injuries to persons in all districts around Manhattan was falling wire charged with electricity. In Brooklyn, Queens, the Bronx, Staten Island, New Jersey, and Westchester many persons were burned by electricity.

An incident of the storm reported was the burglary of the dry goods store of I. Harris & Co., at 476 Grand Street. While the noise of wind and rain made it impossible for any one to hear them, burglars took $200 from the safe in the store.

William Leary, Clerk of the Criminal Branch of the Federal District Court, was not on hand to call the roll of jurors. His associates were wondering where he could be until they received this telegram from him:

"Lost tent and clothes, and am at Woodland Beach, S. I., naked."

Mr. Leary was asleep in his tent when it and all of his belongings were blown away. He got a suit of overalls in which to come to Manhattan.

ENORMOUS DAMAGE IN JERSEY.

Crops Ruined, Streets Flooded, Bridges Torn Out—Two Drown.

Two lives were lost by the sudden swelling of streams in New Jersey due to the heavy storm yesterday morning. All over the State crops were beaten flat or swamped by the overflow of rivers and creeks. Orchards were stripped of their fruit. Dozens of bridges were carried away. The Lackawanna, Erie, and other railroads were tied up on, some of their branches by the washout of tracks. Several houses went down before the high wind, and in almost every town the streets were lined with fallen trees and trolley traffic interrupted. Several persons were burned by fallen live wires.

Assording to the Ctntral High School gaug in Newark, 4.16 inches of rain fell there between midnight and 9 o'clock in the morning. At Long Branch the wind reached a velocity of 78 miles an hour at 5:33 o'clock in the morning.

Seabright, which has been one of the heaviest sufferers from heavy storms in recent years, profited by the one yesterday. There appeared danger on Tuesday night that the heavy surf, which tore away buildings near the waterfront last year, would repeat the work of destruction, but before high tide the wind shifted from northeast to southeast and yesterday morning it was found that, instead of eating into the waterfront, the storm had actually piled up great beaches of sand, repairing the havoc worked by previous storms and giving a better protection against the sea than Seabright has had for years. At Asbury Park, too, the storm proved of material benefit, heaping thousands of tons of sand on the beach and doing a work which would have cost tens of thousands of dollars. Similar advantage from the storm was reported at other points on the coast.

Baby and College Student Drown.

One of the drownings occurred at Westfield, where Austin Wick, the 3-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Wick of Stanmore Place, was thrown into the water when a wooden bridge in front of his home was carled away by the stream while he stood upon it.

Elbert Pickell, 22 years old, and Warren K. Sherman, both students of Lafayette College, were thrown into the Delaware River near Phillipsburg, when their steel boat was overturned by the swollen stream. Pickell was drowned and Sherman, in trying to save him, had a narrow escape.

Veronica Howarth, 5 years od, fell from a plank into a brook that had suddenly grown into a small rover at Westfield. She was swept down stream, turning over and over, but Carl Sell, a baggage master, plunged in and rescued her.

A break in the North Avenue dam of the Elizabeth reservoir emptied such a volume of water into the Elizabeth River that streets in Elizabeth near the river were filled till the water touched the second stories of buildings. More than 100 persons who took refuge in the upper stories of their homes were removed in rowboats and hastily constructed rafts. The home of George Williams, at 134 Prince Street, was carried away a few minutes after its occupants had been rescued.

Five hundred employes of the Watson-Stillman plant had to suspend work because electricity was cut off and hundreds of others had to quit work for the same reason. The Rahway Valley Railroad, the Morris Traction Company, and the Public Service Trolley Company had to suspend operations for hours because of washouts in bridges and tracks. Property loss in Elizabeth due to the storm is estimated at more than $500,000.

Crops Suffered Enormous Loss.

Crop damage in the vicinity of Madison is estimated at $100,000. Sixty feet of the Lackawanna Railroad tracks were washed out there. At Rutherford the Erie tracks were flood d and the telephone service crippled.

Throughout Bergen County the damage to crops was extremely heavy, mounting into hundreds of thousands of dollars. In one orchard in North Hackensack 200 peach trees were stripped of their fruit.

Thirty-five tents occupied by campers at Keansburg were blown down and all the tents were deserted hastily for hotels and cottages. Many small boats were broken on the beach. The streets were flooded several feet deep.

Nar Somerville the property loss was enormous. The canal da mbroke near the headgates above Raritan, releasing a rush of water which spread over hundreds of acres of farm land. Corn was ruined, and potatoes and many other crops washed out. The County Engineer reported that sixteen bridges were washed away or so damaged as to be useless.

Cranford south of the railroad tracks was flooded and many places north of the tracks were under three feet of water. The Rahway River rose nearly ten feet in places. The water was three feet deep for half a mile along Lincoln Avenue. Several persons attempting to cross were thrown from their feet, but men and boys in rowboats quickly came to their assistance.

The temporary wooden bridge at Union Avenue for foot passengers was washed away. Residents of Roosevelt Manor had to make a detour of a mile to reach town. Riverside Drive was impassable. Hundreds of canoes along the river were swept away. Cement and wooden docks along the river were destroyed.

Washout on Pennsylvania.

At Woodbridge Junction the tracks of the Pennsylvania Railroad were washed away so that it was necessary to transfer passengers to Central Railroad trains.

The opening of the gates of the Morris Canal at Richfield caused the overflow of Weasel Brook, which forced the water through a section of Passaic. On a part of Van Winkle Avenue the water was five feet deep. Cellar walls at the home of Joseph Ratner, Jr., at 172 President Street, caved in and the members of the family, who had taken refuge on the second floor, got out by dropping from windows into a large touring car which was driven along the sidewalk where the water was shallowest. There were small washouts on the Lackawanna line near Passaic.

A slide of many tons of water-soaked earth covered the tracks of the Greenwood Lake division of the Erie at Bay Street, Montclair, and delayed traffic for some time. Great damage was done to farm crops and garden truck near Caldwell and in other parts of Essex County.

Newark Cellars Flooded.

Cellars in the lower part of Newark were flooded. Many of the trolley lines were tied up for hours because the water was more than four feet deep in places. Great damage was done to stocks in the cellars of factories and business houses because, on account of the unexpectedness of the storm, no precautions had been taken.

In Jersey City a half-built brick house at 59 Wade Avenue was blown down. Trolley lines were put out of service and the jitney buses did a big busines in spite of deep water on some of the streets. Live wires were broken all over the city. Joseph Gasway, 10 years old, of 47 St. Paul's Avenue, touched one on Hoboken Avenue and was knocked unconscious, but noa seriously hurt.

The new embankment of the Pennsylvania Railroad was washed out in several places near Rahway, and the use of the fourth track was abandoned.

Much Damage in Plainfield.

Many Plainfield commuters were forced to stay in downtown hotels last night to insure their reaching trains in the morning, the residential district being under three feet of water in some parts.

Work in the big plant of the Scott Printing Press Company was at a standstill, the entire place being flooded. The whole eastern part of the city is under water, and people went to and from their homes in rafts and small boats operated by boys. Trolley traffic was at a standstill.

In Plainfield and its suburbs the damage will amount to thousands of dollars. Five bridges over Green Brook have been washed from their moorings, and the brook has swept from its course over lawns and streets. The breaking of a mountain dam caused the water to rush into the city, and it appeared last night to be rising instead of abating. A majority of the cellars in the eastern district of the city are flooded.

The big greenhouses of Charles L. Stanley are washed out. Crops have been ruined, potatoes and other similar garden truck having been washed out of the ground and corn stalks torn asunder. Where big gardens thrived, vast fields of mud and water are to be seen. Hundreds of chickens were caught in coops and drowned. One automobile party was stranded in the middle of a street for three hours with water up to the flooring of the car.

Metuchen Under Water.

At Metuchen half the town was flooded, causing a complete cessation of traffice on the Lehigh Valley Railroad and trolley lines. This, in spite of the fact that Metuchen is the highest in altitude on the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad between New York and Philadelphia. On either side of the Lehigh Valley Railroad there are two streams that in normal times average eight inches in depth and six feet in width. These streams overflowed their banks, submerged the railroad tracks and became one large river from 500 to 1,000 feet wide that extended from Metuchen through South Plainfield and New Market to Bound Brook, twelve miles away. Freeman's lumber yard, the Lehigh Valley Railroad freight yards and passenger station, the J. F. Owen Tile factory and Public Service electric power station were islands in an inland sea.

The waters backed up to Main Street, where, in the heart of the town at the Pennsylvania Railroad Station, they rose in the roadway to a depth of eight feet.

Lost His Apto in Flood.

George A. Pierson drove an automobile under the railroad bridge and the machine stalled in a foot of water. He started to get help to take the machine out and returned in a few moments to find the car outof sight in the flood. North Metuchen was completely isolated by a two-foot-wide brook extending its width to 200 feet, with a seven-foot depth.

At Feltville, near Scotch Plains, a dam gave way and the water rushed down the hillside, flooding Scotch Plains and Fanwood, covering the Central Railroad tracks with three feet of water.

The village of Wachung was saved from inundation by the bravery of William E. Titus, who risked his life to open the Wachung flood gates. United States Senator James E. Martine's farm suffered heavy damage.

At Woodbridge, when a small stream overflowed its banks, flooding the Town Hall and jail, the police considered releasing the prisoners rather than take chances of having them drown in their cells. The Woodbridge Hotel was in the path of the flood, and water flowed through the barroom like a river.

RESCUE TWO AT SEABRIGHT.

George May and W. Meredith Nearly Drown at Octagon Beach.

Two expert swimmers were almost drowned yesterday afternoon at the Octagon Beach, Seabright, N. J. George May of 610 Bergen Street, Newark, who was visiting at the home of W. Weisenberger of Highlands was carried out by the heavy sea and the undertow. Confident in his own skill, he struggled hard and made no call for held till he was 300 yards out. Then he shouted for aid and was heard by W. Meredith, bathing master of the Peninsula Hotel, who is a brother of "Ted" Meredith, the runner. Meredith swam out to May., but became exhausted by the time he had reached him, and he, too, called for help.

The two managed to keep afloat by desperate struggles until they were reached by Thomas J. Howland and John Wells, who had plunged in upon seeing Meredith's difficulties. Wells and Howland got the other two ashore. Meredith was not seriously a%ected, but May had to be treated for nearly an hour by Dr. D. Harold Karp before he was resuscitated.

Willis Van Valkenburgh of 108 Chestnut Street, East Orange, N. J., left yesterday for the Orange Y. M. C. A. camp at Lake Wawayanda, N. J., in search of his son, Edward, who is believed to have been drowned there last Thursday. Mr. Van Valkenburgh took with him two divers to search for his son's body. The Y. M. C. A. officials have been searching ever since he disappeared.

Young Van Vaikenburgh is 25 years old, and has written magazine articles on social, religious, and economic subjects. He got an appointment as a volunteer leader and went to the camp last Thursday. After arriving at 2 P. M. he was about the camp for a while and then disappeared. He was not at supper, and when search was made his clothing was found in his tent, but his swimming trunks were missing. Life-saving crews patrolled the lake all night and grappled for the body, and the best divers in the camp searched for it, but without result. Other parties searched the nearby woods under the supposition that he might have got lost, but no trace of him was found. It is said that bathing alone was a violation of the camp rules.

Heat Kills John J. O'Connor.

John J. O'Connor, 45 years old, of 213 Fifth Street, for thirteen years elevator starter in the Criminal Courts Building, died at his home yesterday, after a collapse brought on by the excessive heat. It is said that O'Connor induced "Big" Tim Sullivan to obtain the Tammany indorsement for Whitman when he ran for District Attorney.

The Bulgaria was not damaged.

Three of these vessels are of 7,500 gross tonnage and three of 6,000 tons. Five will touch at New York and one at Philadelphia.

"It is said that this service will be increased by six additional vessels by May 1, 1916, and that Galveston will be made a port of call during the cotton season. It is also announced these vessels will probably touch at Honolulu."

CHARGE BOGUS MONEY PLOT

Two Men Accused of Trying to Sell Machine to Make Bills.

Mrs. Rosa Masi used to run a restaurant on the upper east side and managed to amass enough money to talk about retiring on her income. Two of her steady patrons were Sergius Bonlen and Albert Wasser, who have since described themselves to the police, respectively as a South African journalist and a German salesman. They heard Mrs. Masi talk about investments for her savings and, according to her story, they attempted to persuade her to buy a counterfeiting machine. They are alleged to have made up a contrivance of two small boards about the size of a banknote lined with felt and fastened together with screws, and by means of certain colored liquids they contrived to print paper it is said into a passable semblance of bills. It is charged they offered this machine for $700 and assured Mrs. Masi she would regain that amount very soon from the money she made.

Mrs. Masi kept notes of her conversations on the subject. Two or three weeks ago she refried, and the two men, with a confederate, are said to have redoubled their efforts to her the machine. They had an appointment to bring it to her house last night and show it to her, it is charged, and she telephoned to a friend living on Second Avenue to told him the whole story. He sent word to the Third Detective Branch, and Detectives Skelly and Gallagher started for Mrs. Masi's home at 407 East Seventy-second Street. On the way they fell in with the three men carrying a machine, and after a brief conversation the detectives arrested Bonlen and Wassre, the third man escaping in the melée. The prisoners were taken to Police Headquarters and locked up on the charge of attempted grand larceny. Then denied their guilt, but were identified by Mrs. Masi.

Shortly after he relapsed into his previous serious condition. He is unconscious, and it is said that only his great vitality is keeping him alive. His daughter, Mrs. Ferdinand Wilmerding, and his son, Frank Tracy, are always with him, and physicians are in constant attendance.

In these days of strenuous price cutting competition among automobile makers it is natural that many resort to a less expensive top material than

Genuine Pantasote

Therefore all the more credit is due to the manufacturers who are using Pantasote Tops, in spite of the expense, because of the superior service it gives the purchasers of their cars. It is certainly good evidence of the desire to give full value.

When cars of the character of Pierce-Arrow, Locomobile, Marmon, Hudson, Chalmers, etc., are equipping with genuine Pantasote Tops, there can't be any question of its superiority —in the matter of perfect shelter, perfect appearance, greatest resistance to weather, age, and wear.

SAY WHITMAN SEEKS NEW SING SING HEAD

Reported to Have Strict Disciplinarian in Mind for Osborne's Place.

TO VISIT RILEY NEXT WEEK

Delicate Situation Feared Unless Reformer Resigns—Sworn Charges Prepared.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 4.—According to report current here tonight Governor Whitman is already looking about for a man to succeed Thomas Mott Osborne as Warden of Sing Sing Prison.

A man with a hard-earned reputation as a strict disciplinarian it was said, has already been approached on the subject of taking up the work at Sing Sing, with a view of putting an end to the alleged loose methods which have characterized the Osborne régime.

This is only one of may indications that the policy of "watchful waiting" maintained so far by Governor Whitman and Superintendent of Prisons John B. Riley will soon end. Both realize that unless Warden Osborne should anticipate their wishes and resign the situation will be very difficult, for there is every inclination by persons in authority at the Capitol to avoid adding to Mr. Osborne's already spectacular career as a prison reformer the glamor of martyrdom.

Nevertheless, it was said tonight that affidavits dealing with alleged abuses at Sing Sing are in the course of preparation and will be submitted to Governor Whitman when he returns from his week-end trip to Newport. He will be the guest of Superintendent Riley at the latter's home in Plattsburg early next week, and during his stay there will inspect Dannemora Prison, where Warden Twombly, a man of Mr. Riley's own selection, is in charge.

Whether the affidavits will be used as basis for charges against Warden Osborne could not be learned tonight. Supt. Riley left the Capitol early today for his home, where he is expected to remain until after the Governor's visit. The affidavits, it was said, would show that the freedom convicts have had at Sing Sing since Mr. Osborne has been Warden have led to shocking abuses which Mr. Osborne would be the first to denounce and stamp out if he had had knowledge of their existence.

In the papers which will be put before Governor Whitman will be voluminous extracts from the correspondence between Superintendent Riley and Warden Osborne. Some of these letters, it was said tonight, would show that Mr. Osborne in his humanitarian zeal urged upon Mr. Riley, when the latter called his attention to the fact that some of the liberties he permitted involved direct violation of the statutes, that the law ought to be stretched as many points as necessary to permit the working out of his policies for the uplift and reform of the prisoners.

To this Mr. Riley replied that if Mr. Osborne had in mind permission to prisoners to go visiting in New York City and elsewhere, or the admission of other convicts to the death house, where the law provides that condemned men must be kept in solitary confinement, he was in error.

FOUND TURKS CONFIDENT.

Dr. Israels Says That They Have Abundant Supplies of Ammunition.

BERLIN, Aug. 4, (via London, Thursday, Aug. 5.)—Professor James Israel, who recently operated on the Sultan of Turkey, has returned here from Constantinople. He says he left the Sultan completely cured and able to attend the next Selamlik.

Dr. Israel in an interview in the Tageblatt, says he conferred repeatedly with the Grand Vizier and the Foreign Minister, and that, as the Sultan's tenure of life without surgical attention would have been very short, and as he was suffering great pain, it was decided to perform an operation. Two gallstones of large size were removed, and the causes of the other ailments of the Sultan were attended to.

Dr. Israel said that he notel in Constantinople an extraordinarily confident feeling on the part of the people with regard to the war. He conversed with virtually all the influential persons of the Court and the leading army commanders, and found all of them of the belief that the Dardanelles could be held, particularly since one of the chief difficulties, namely, the supply of ammunition, had been solved. There is now an abundance of ammunition in Turkey, he declares.

The relations between the Turks and the Germans, according to Dr. Israel, are excellent. The highest authorities, such as the Grand Vilier and the Ministers, repeatedly expressed to him their very friendly feelings for Germany and the Germans. Enver Pasha, Minister of War, Dr. Israel says, is unreservedly pro-German, and paid the highest tribute to the ability and extraordinary capacity of the Germans.

BRADLEY APPROVES ANTIS.

Refuses to Rent Auditorium to Women Who Fight Suffrage.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Aug. 4.—Alleging that the women opposed to women suffrage are unwittingly allowing themselves to be made the dupes of the liquor interests, James A. Bradley, founder of this city, today sent to the New Jersey Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage his refusal to rent the Beach Auditorium for meetings which were planned for this place. He said the association had professional speakers and asserted that the liquor interests contributed to the fund from which they are paid. In his letter Mr. Bradley said:

"The liquor interests, which I hold in abhorrence, as I look at it, regard sincere women as yourself as allies in their effort to crush the suffrage movement, because they know that when women get the vote, laws will be enacted, protecting their homes—protecting the people from the curse of rum."

BEAT HIS BLIND WIFE.

Dr. Clark, an Eye Specialist, Sent to Jail for Six Months.

Special to The New York Times.

HUNTINGTON, L. I., Aug. 4.—Dr. Charles H. Clark, an eye specialist, of Oakwood Drive, was senteced to serve six months in jail and pay a fine of $50 for beating his blind wife by Peace Justice Allison Lowndes yesterday. Clark was convicted once before of beating his wife.

In court Mrs. Clark showed black and blue spots on her face and arms where, she said, her husband struck her. She said he had jumped on her with both knees, causing other bruises on her body. Neighbors testified to having heard her scream. It was said that Dr. Clark threw two pillows and a blanket over his wife' head to smother her cries.

Bridal Pair Upset; Girl Killed.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Aug. 4.—Miss Eunice Hoag, 24, of Longmeadow, Mass., died today from the injuries she received when an automobile driven by Gerald W. Merdon of Springfield, was overturned on a hill in Northford yesterday. Werdon will recover. He says Miss Hong and he were on their way to New York City to be married.

RAISES LEGISLATORS' PAY.

Convention Advances Proposal Over Protest—Tax Article Assailed.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 4.—After a debate that occupied all of the afternoon session, the Constitutional Convention today, by a vote of 97 to 18, advanced to final reading the proposal recommended by the Committee on Legislative Organization to raise the salaries of lawmakers from $1,500 to $2,500 annually. The proposal also gives the legislators necessary mileage from the Capitol to their homes and return once every week, instead of expenses for the session.

Louis Marshall cautioned the convention against approving the proposal, calling attention to the adverse majority of 151,914 in a totatl vote of 676,894 when a plan to make the salaries of lawmakers $3,000 a year was before the voters in 1911.

President Root, Mr. Marshall, President Schurman of Cornell, and William Barnes voted against the proposed amendment. Pesident Schurman and Mr. Barnes explained that while they were in sympathy with the purpose, they feared that salary raising would be so unpopular with the voters just at present as to endanger the new Constitution.

The morning session of the convention was spent in debate on the new article on taxation, which came in for severe attack from many quarters, regardless of party lines. The up-State Republicans were as outspoken in their opposition as were the Democrats. A bitter attack was made on the provision giving the State Department of Taxes the power to review local assessments.

Only the first section of the article has been advanced and before this was accomplished it had been riddled by the opposition. Of the five sentences to the section, two were taken out bodily, the remaining two were changed, and even after the changes had been approved a motion was made to reject the entire section. This was voted down. In its new form the section reads:

The power of taxation shall never be surrendered, suspended or contracted away, except as to the securities of the State or civil divisions thereof. Hereafter no exemption from taxation shall be granted except by general laws and upon the affirmative vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each House.

Commissioner Saxe, Chairman of the Committee on Taxation, found the convention's attitude toward the article so uncompromising that at his own request consideration of the remainder was postponed to give him an opportunity to do missionary work among the delegates.

CLEARY MEN IN CONTROL.

Carries Haverstraw Election—Criticising Pastor's Vote Challenged.

Special to The New York Times.

HAVERSTRAW, Aug. 4.—At the annual meeting today of the Haverstraw Board of Education and in the election of three new members it was clearly demonstrated that the village is still under the control of the old Cleary ring. The ring ticket, consisting of Thomas J. McGowan, Samuel De Chelfin, and Charles D. Baisely defeated Everett Fowler, Charles D. Christie, and William T. Purdy by a majority of fifty-one.

The election today was the most bitterly contested ever known in the district. The votes cast numbered 771, of which at least 250 were cast by women, who worked as hard as the men in getting out the vote. Twenty-five automobiles, several being driven by women, were pressed into service.

This is the second election since the Cleary trial in which his followers have been successful, the other being the village election in March last, when the fight was fought on the same issue.

For five or six years past there has been the most bitter enmity between the McCabe and Gagan faction and the Cleary and Fox ring, but now they are working in perfect harmony against the anti-Cleary people. A feature of the election was the challenging of the vote of the Rev. Dr. Coullis, who created somewhat of a sensation here by his sermons against the Cleary verdict and gang rule. The challenging was done by Bernard J. Fox, who is under indictment as a result of the Cleary case and who was in charge of the voting place for the ring.

WEALTHY YOUTH VANISHES.

Henry Elias Wanders Away from Training Farm in Storm.

Special to The New York Times.

BABYLON, L. I., Aug. 4.—Henry Elias, 20 years old, son of the late Henry Elias, wealthy brewer, wandered away from the Maclevy Physical Culture Farm here in the height of the storm last night and no trace of him has been found, though he was without money to purchase transportation, and almost every square yard of road, field and woodland for miles about has been searched thoroughly by men from the farm. The search was begun before 9 o'clock last night and continued until daybreak, when other men took it up.

Elias has been at the farm for about three weeks, having been taken there by his mother to recuperate from a nervous breakdown. Mrs. Elias took quarters in the village and today assisted in the search for her son.

The young man had been in the main building of the farm when he decided, despite the weather, to take his usual evening walk. A youth with whom he roomed in a near-by cottage agreed to accompany him, and they left the main building together, Elias's roommate hurrying on ahead to get his hat. On his return Elias was gone.

The missing youth is about five feet eight inches in height and weighs 155 pounds. He wore a brown flannel shirt, cotton trousers, and a gray soft hat. He has blond hair, and wore tortoise shell rimmed glasses.

The police of this place and of all surrounding towns were notified of his disappearance, but found no trace of him.

WAR CAUSES MORE MALES.

Exceed Other Sex Because of Parents' Weakened Condition.

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 4.—In an address delivered here today Dr. R. Kendrick Smith of Boston told delegates to the convention of the American Osteopathic Association that the number of boys born following a great war exceeds the number of girls because underfed and weakened parents are likely to produce male offspring.

"It seems," he said, "that great vitality is necessary when female offsprings are born."

NOGALES ATTACKED BY CARRANZA FORCE

Defying His Chief, Calles Vainly Tries to Capture the Border Town.

Special to The New York Times.

NOGALES, Ariz., Aug. 4.—Defying his own Commander in Chief, General Elias Calles, commanding the Carranza forces near Nogales, Sonora, began an attack on the town at noon today following a fierce engagement at El Ranche, three miles south of the border town.

The fight continued until dark tonight when General Calles withdrew to his base near El Ranche, leaving many dead and wounded on the battlefield.

Governor José Maytorena, Villa's commander defending the town, estimated his own casualties in the town at 100, while 50 more were killed or wounded at the El Ranche fight.

The battle began at noon, with long-range firing from Calles cannon, which were stationed two miles south of the town. This was followed by a cavalry vanguard charge on Maytorena's outposts and a general infantry flanking movement.

General Felipe Angeles directed the Maytorena artillery from Nogales, and is military adviser to Maytorena.

No shots have yet fallen across the line, although the bombarding was severe during the afternoon. United States army officers are on the line awaiting orders from General Funston to return the fie in case any damage is done on the Ameican side.

A regiment of infantry, two troops of cavalry, and a machine-gun platoon, line the border to check any invasion of American rights by the Mexican factions.

The Carranza troops advanced this morning from Mascaras Ranch, ten miles south of Nogales, where they had defeated the larger part of Maytorena's troops last night.

MALLORY TELLS OF ABUSE.

Messenger Says Zapatistas Tore Our Flag with Their Teeth.

MEXICO CITY, July 25, (via Courier to Vera Cruz, July 28, and Mail to New Orleans, Aug. 4.)—Allan Mallory, the young American who was assaulted, robbed, and subjected to other indignities by Zapata followers July 22 near San Martin, made a statement on his arrival here today. He said in part:

"I left Puebla in my automobile, carrying mail for the Brazilian Legation in Mexico City, which was sealed and given to me by American Consul Jenkins. With me were Carlos Batres, son of the Chilean Minister to Mexico; A. Gallopin, a Swiss citizen; Reverol Coloca, a Spanish subject, and my mechanic, a Mexican. Shortly after we entered San Martin the Carranzistas fled from the town and Zapatistas entered, shooting in all directions.

"The Zapata soldiers went up to my automobile, tore the American flag from the hood, and ripped it into shreds with their teeth. Then they broke open all the packages I had in the car. The soldiers started to open the correspondence, but gave it back when I warned them what it was.

"I was taken to the plaza at Huejotzingo and taken before General Zapata, who tore open the mail, examined it, and tossed it aside. Finally he had an officer give me a passoport and permitted me to leave, but he refused to return the mail. Coloca was ordered away to be shot."

VILLA TO QUIT YAQUI LAND.

Protection of American Settlers Now Lies with Carranza.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—The Villa Governor of Sonora, General Maytorena, is preparing to withdraw his troops, which have been protecting American settlers against Indians, from the Yaqui Valley, and has stated that if American marines are forced to land, precipitating a conflict, the responsibility will lie with the Carranza forces, now moving into the valley.

Major General Funston, commanding the border forces, reported today that news of Maytorena's plans had reached him.

WOUNDED TROOPER DIES.

Second Victim of Clash with Mexican Bandits in Texas.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—Major Gen. Frederick Funston notified the War Department today that one of the two soldiers of the Twelfth Cavalry, wounded in yesterday's pursuit of the Mexican bandits who crossed the border near Brownsville Sunday night, had died of his wounds. One trooper was killed during the fighting yesterday. The dispatch reads:

Of the two soldiers wounded, one died this morning. When fight occurred Mexicans were in houses, and as party of Deputy Sheriffs and soldiers approached, Mexicans opened fire, wounding two soldiers and one deputy. Mexicans than ran into brush and disappeared. Lieutenant Lutz returned fire and captured two men, one boy, six horses, seven saddles. Prisoners were taken to Harlingen to prevent lynching. No doubt that some of the party came from Mexican side. Territory well surrounded with troops, but brush and cactus so thick will be difficult to prevent escape in small parties. No need for more troops.

BROWNSVILLE, Texas, Aug. 4.—Wire and rail communication between the Brownsville section and the rest of Texas was cut off last night near where United States cavalrymen yesterday cleared a stockade of alleged Mexican cattle thieves.

A bridge, 230 feet long, on the St. Louis, Brownsville & Mexico Railroad, the only rail link between a large part of the border and the rest of the United States, was burned.

No further fighting has occurred at the ranch about eighteen miles from here, where a cavalryman was killed yesterday.

CAPITAL STILL LACKS FOOD.

Cardoso Reports to Washington on Conditions There.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—Official confirmation of the reoccupation of Mexico ity by the Carranzistas was received by the State Department today from Señor Cardoso y Oliveira, the rBazilian Minister, who is looking after American interests in Mexico City.

Two messages were received from Senhor Cardoso. One, addressed to the Red Cross, told of the food situation, and said that supply trains en route to Mexico City from Vera Cruz ha reached Orizaba. The other message, addressed to Secretary Lansing and dated yesterday, said:

Cable has just been reopened. After several days of fighting in the streets, which resulted in the death of several noncombatants, the Carranzista forces under General Pablo Gonzales again occupy the city.

Gonzales repeated his assurances of guarantees given in the previous manifesto issued during the last occupation. But the situation remains unchanged for the moment on account of lack of food and restrictions which have been put upon the circulation of convention currency.

Today a decree has been published to all inhabitants of Mexico City, demanding that they deliver up their arms and ammunition within five days on penalty of death. I am endeavoring to make arrangements for Americans to retain their arms as before.

General Carranza cabled his agency here today that with the reoccupation of the capital he had appointed a commission of five civilians to supervise distribution of foodstuffs, and was arranging to bring from Vera Cruz ample supplies.

Carranza troops are said to have taken all strategic points about the capital for its protection and defeated the retreating Zapata troops.

VILLA CONFISCATES IMPORTS.

Seizes Goods Worth $100,000 in Juarez Railroad Yards.

EL PASO, Aug. 4.—Imports valued at more than $100,000 consigned to foreign and Mexican merchants and mining corporations, confiscated in the railroad yards at Juarez yesterday, were today ordered shipped south to the Villa Government at Chihuahua City.

Express companies have refused shipments of foodstuffs to mining camps.

Arrivals heer from Columbus, N. M., today stated that a battle was impending at Palomas, Mexico, ten miles south of the border at Columbus, between a force of Villa's soldiers and 15,000 men of the new faction headed by General Ochoa, General Contreras, and Colonel Garcia, which recognizes General Eulalio Gutierrez as President, and says it will take no aggressive action against any one.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—The State Department has sent representations to General Villa regarding his plan to make a forced loan upon the mining companies and merchants of Chihuahua.

Villa has called a meeting of representatives of mining companies to meet at Chihuahua on Monday, Aug. 9. His stated reason for this conference has been to consider and regulate the mining industry in that State.

According to information reaching the State Department, his real motive is to force a loan, and on the basis of this information strong representations have been made to Villa informing him that the levying of such a loan will not be satisfactory to the United States Government.

VILLA BEATEN, SAYS WIFE.

She Crosses Border to El Paso and Awaits His Flight.

Special to The New York Times.

EL PASO, Texas, Aug. 4.—Mrs. Juana Torres Villa, wife of General Villa, crossed from Mexico today.

She told the Immigration Inspectors that she came to await the arrival of her husband, who realized that his revolution had failed and was preparing to leave Mexico.

She said they intended to live on the Pacific Coast if he left Mexico.

GALVESTON, Texas, Aug. 4.—A Tennessee thoroughbred was shipped on the steamer City of Mexico yesterday for Vera Cruz, to be the personal mount of Venustiano Carranza. The manifest, made public today, showed the animal to be alued at $3,000.

CANAL TOLLS A RECORD.

Total for July, $573,365—Excess Earnings for Year, $230,833.

PANAMA, Aug. 4.—The tolls collected on the Panama Canal during July were the largest yet, $573,365, as compared with the March tolls, $560,784, the previous record. The excess earnings for the year ending June 30 were $230,833, the total earnings being $4,343,383.

The total operating expenses amounted to $4,112,550, but this does not take into consideration interest on capital invested, charges against depreciation, sinking fund and other general items, nor about $80,000 deducted from the earnings on account of Government vessels using the canal.

How to Make Croton Water the Best Water in the World

Better than bottled spring water, which grows stale and unhealthy—providing a running spring of live, crystal-clear water at your own faucet without extra cost

THE DUPLEX FILTER

(Self Cleaning)

AS McCANN FOUND IT

The Globe and Commercial Advertiser.

173-83 DEY STREET 12 WEST 31ST STREET
NEW YORK

July 9, 1915.

The Duplex Filter Co.,
110 West 40th Street,
N. Y. City.

Gentlemen:-

The test to which I put your filter in the Globe offite has disclosed results which actually frighten.

Croton water downtown is certainly not fit to drink. Very few people have any idea of this painful fact. They never see the filth deposits which the average filter hides behind an armor-plate of nickel.

The happy device which your filter genius has invented for the purpose of throwing out the filter sediment after each run of water, looked to me at first like a more or less picturesque talking point, but if the common people could examine, under the microscope, the stuff which it actually does remove from croton water or from any other water for that matter, they would gasp.

I find that it does completely remove those complicated little devils that scientists call protozoa, diatoms, and algae as well as much amorphous organic matter. When you get this sort of flotsem and jetsam out of water naturally you free it from all turbidity, color and sediment.

The microscope shows the sediment, which your self-cleaning devise side-tracks on its journey to the unsuspecting human stomach, to consist of diatoms, asterionella, tabellaria fragillaria, nitzschia, algae, protococcus, spirogyra, conferva, botrycoccus, pandorina, ulothrix, dinobryon and cryptomonas.

To put this in language that a longshoresman can understand your filter simply notifies the stomach that, as an aquarium, it might as well put out a to-let sign.

In addition to these queer little creatures that make croton water a sort of swimming zoo our Globe faucets show its sediment to contain 41,000 bacteria per c.c. incubated 48 hours at 20 degrees C.

The drinking water from the filter contains only 3,200 bacteria per c.c. This shows a considerable reduction in the bacteria count following the use of the filter.

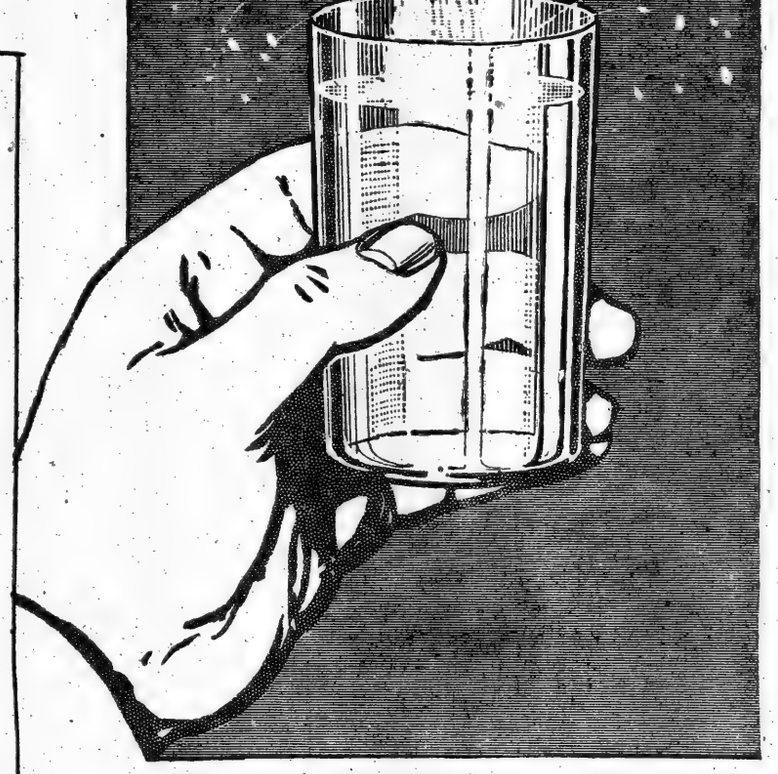
I do not know whether it removes bacteria of the B. coli type or not. There were no B. coli in the croton water which passed through your filter in the Globe office and for the purpose of determining this very interesting fact water, actually known to be contaminated with gas-producing organisms, would have to be passed through it.

One thing is certain. Your filter does remove bacteria to a considerable extent and it is very efficient in removing from the raw water the minute organisms which infest it in unusually high numbers.

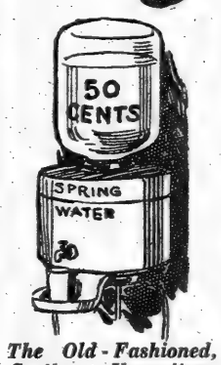
It is the cause of much satisfaction to me to know that the filter which I have installed in my home is keeping so much flotsem and jetsam out of the little tummies of my kiddies.

I wish you success in marketing your very useful, valuable and efficient machine.

Sincerely,
Alfred N. McCann



It Cuts Out the Cost of Expensive Bottled Spring Water



The Old-Fashioned, Costly, Unsanitary Way Providing Spring Water That Grows Stale and Unhealthy.

A Battery of Sanitary Coolers May Be Filled Daily With One Duplex Filter—As Used by Many of New York's Most Prominent Concerns.

Let a Ten-Day Free Trial Prove It

There have been SO MANY OLD STYLE FILTERS, with cumbersome, unsanitary "filter stones"—all ABSOLUTELY UNSATISFACTORY, that you must get the old idea out of your head.

The DUPLEX FILTER IS SELF-CLEANING. A simple reverse turn of the faucet cleans it. All the dirt and impurities which have been TAKEN OUT OF THE WATER BY THE FILTER are in turn TAKEN OUT OF THE FILTER BY THE REVERSED STREAM.

This filter MAINTAINS ITS EFFICIENCY. It cleans itself daily. There are no "stones" to be taken apart.

The old filter "stones" harbored filth and dirt, so the water had to run through an accumulation of the impurities.

THE DUPLEX IS THE FIRST PRACTICAL, SANITARY, SELF-CLEANING FOOL-PROOF FILTER, AS GOOD FOR THE HOME OR THE OFFICE AS IT IS FOR THE LABORATORY OR THE INSTITUTION.

Over 10,000 of them are already in use in New York and Chicago, and their surrounding towns, in large business institutions, homes, offices, hospitals, and laboratories. The Duplex is the recognized standard among filters.

One has been in use for eleven years in ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL without being tinkered with—HAVING NO PART CHANGED OR RENEWED; and it is in daily use to-day.

With a Duplex Filter attached to your faucet YOU HAVE BETTER WATER THAN THE MOST EXPENSIVE SPRING WATER YOU CAN BUY.

Bottled Spring Water GROWS STALE—DETERIORATES JUST AS POND WATER DETERIORATES.

Reports of the New York Health Board have shown its condition.

No matter how good the best spring water was when it left the spring, it is not the same when you get it.

Chemists have reported that UNFILTERED CROTON WATER is better to drink than much of the bottled spring water sold in this city.

PROPERLY FILTERED CROTON WATER IS HELD BY ALL AUTHORITIES TO BE THE BEST DRINKING WATER AVAILABLE IN GREATER NEW YORK.

INSTALLED FREE

The price of a Duplex Filter, home or ordinary office size, capacity 20 gallons an hour, is $25.

This includes installation by us—making the pipe connection to faucet of pipe line.

The purchase price may be paid in installments if desired at the rate you are paying for bottled water at present.

When you move the filter is readily removed.

THERE IS POSITIVELY NO FURTHER EXPENSE—AND THE FILTER IS GOOD FOR A LIFE TIME.

We will put one in—WITHOUT ANY EXPENSE TO YOU—on a Ten Days' Free Trial.

SAYS HOLY WAR INSPIRES TURKS

And Generous German Commissariat Supports Their Enthusiasm at Gallipoli.

CALL ALLIES' HOLD NARROW

Possessed Recently Only a Little More Than the Tip of the Peninsula, Says a Dane.

The difficulties which make the forcing of the straits for the Allies a war in itself are described in the Frankfurter Zeitung of June 23, in an article reprinted from the Danish paper Berlingske Tidende, by its special correspondent, Hellsen. The Frankfurter Zeitung report says:

In the Dardanelles itself no change has taken place in the last few months. The old forts, Kum Kale and Sedd-el Bahr, were quickly shot to pieces, but that is all that the Entente fleet accomplished. The forts Hamidieh and Medjidieh, which form the actual basis of the defense, and the new coast batteries are intact. Since the fortifications are built solely of earth and fascines, they may be hit without the guns being badly damaged. The Allies' advance scout ships venture scarcely four kilometers (two and one-half miles) into the strait. Thus the mine field has not been broken.

The bombardment of the villages within the strait takes place from Xeres Bay, over the mountains of the peninsula. At Sedd-el-Bahr the landing troops have dug themselves in squarely across the narrow tongue of land to the water's edge. At Ari Burnu the English trenches are on two heights, 800 meters (about half a mile) from the coast. That is the modest total of their winnings. Their losses include 68,650 English tons in five ships of the line, and 12,000 French tons (Bouvet), in addition to two English destroyers and three submarines, as well as a French submarine. To this must be added half of the landing forces, about 40,000 men.

The commander of the operations on land is General Liman von Sanders, though the coast defense is directed by Djavid Pasha, with the co-operation of two German Admirals, Usedom Pasha and Merten Pasha.

Altogether there are about thirty German officers and five hundred men at the Dardanelles, far fewer than has been believed. The Turks themselves have their very important share in the honors of the defense.

Great ingenuity is exercised in the concealment of the batteries. Each day the air craft of the Allies fly over the strait, but they seldom succeed in discovering the hidden batteries. The cannon are lost amid woods and bushes or are dug deep into gulches. The tents are covered with turf or daubed over with black. If, in spite of these precautions, fear is felt that the positions will be discovered, they are altered overnight. By day the coast batteries take part in the battle only at rare intervals; they are unwilling to betray their positions, unless they are sure of success. There is no shortage of ammunition, despite the newspaper reports. In Turkey they smile at the solicitous interest felt abroad concerning their ammunition. But naturally they are not in a position to expend it so lavishly as the Allies.

Night after night the Turks storm the English trenches. The Turkish soldier is brilliant in attacking. The rifle is to him something almost too complicated, but he is an expert with the bayonet. I went to the front on a troop transport, and on the foredeck there was a grindstone. Here the soldiers gathered and ground their blades with a peculiar smile and solemn movement, almost as if they were engaging in a religious ceremony. Then suddenly I remembered that this was, in fact, the "holy war." And I recalled the conversation with Hadji Evlia Effendi, the Under Secretary of the Sheik-ul-Islam, a shrewd and very wise man, who guessed my thoughts. He said to me:

"The holy war alone could move our people to go cheerfully to death. It is not enough merely to fight—the law can force us to do that—but it is necessary to sacrifice one's self. We have so many wounded because the officers cannot restrain the men. And in all the hospitals lie the wounded, with eager eyes, yearning for the day when they can again take their place in the ranks. The holy war was necessary. We had waged three wars in four years. We were tired out and poor. How, under these circumstances, were we to escape revolution? So we unfurled the green flag, and that was not in vain. We have never before seen the present spirit in the army."

I, too, who sojourned among the Turks at Chatalja, have noted a remarkable change. But that does not result from their faith. The Turkish soldier gets no pay, but he receives—for the first time during the present war—something to eat. That moves him deeply, and he burns now to show himself grateful. General Liman von Sanders, through his provisions for the material well-being of the troops, has struck the deepest of all human instincts. The Germans have, among many other things, organized the system of provisioning. The Turkish soldier, who formerly was obliged to plunder or starve, receives at the Dardanelles ample food, even on the firing line. It is somewhat different from the food I have been accustomed to eat with the soldiers in the Galician trenches; no goslash, but many vegetables—white beans and peas, with a sort of groats of crushed wheat—besides bread and Bulgarian curdled milk, and frequently also veal or mutton.

Every five paces there is a guard, with rifles lying ready for firing. On the ground sit the soldiers, playing with their rosaries that consist of ninety-nine round pearls and two oval ones, and smoking field-hookahs quickly converted from field flasks, sunk in dreams or kneeling in prayer with foreheads bowed to the ground. They are not at all disturbed when bullets graze the breastworks or fly above them. The uniforms are gray-green, with shawls of the same color. Instead of boots, they often keep their own shoes, a piece of leather bound under the soles and above the ankle. Most of them wear on their heads the "enveriak," a cross between a turban and a tropical helmet, bound with a white cloth over the helmet or falling over the neck and shoulders as a protection from the sun. The Moslem may wear no hat, i. e., a covering with a protruding shade that might interfere with devotions in which the forehead should touch the ground. In the counter-revolution of 1909 it was one of the accusations with which attempts were made to incite the uneducated people against the Young Turk leaders, who, it was charged, wanted to give the soldiers hats. It was, therefore, a great risk for Enver Pasha after the Tripoli war to introduce a headgear with slight protruding pieces in front and behind, even though it resembled a turban. Now the green helmet is adopted regularly and is called "enveriak."

From the two-kilometer-long position one can see the breastworks of the Allies, crowned with bright steel plates. Between them and the sea are barely 800 meters. The Turkish lines form a straight line, distant from the enemy on the right wing about 120 meters, and on the left, where a deep gully runs between them, scarcely fifteen meters. The gully is full of Australians in khaki, some of whom, leaning over the edge, are making observations, while others lie on their backs as if taking the sun. They cannot be recognized at once, for the uniforms have the color of the gray-green sand. But through the telescope each one can be made out, and one can see that hundreds of flies are crawling across the face of the one lying beside him. Why do they not brush off the flies? Because they are dead—stabbed to the earth in the attack of last night.

[No date is given for this dispatch, but since June 23, when the Frankfurter Zeitung reprinted it—probably many days if not weeks after it was sent—the allied lines have made substantial progress.]

NEW ATLAN MURDER ARREST

Joseph Bourett Held as Accomplice in Killing Hotel Clerk.

oseph Murray, also known as oseph Bourett, was brought to New York from Hartford, Conn., last night and locked up in Police Headquarters on a charge of homicide in killing Charles Miller, night clerk of the Atlan Hotel, 159 West Thirty-fourth Street, on the morning of March 14. Berney E. Corn is now in the Tombs under an indictment for murder in connection with the Miller killing, and the police believe the arrest of Murray clears up what promised for many weeks to become an unsolved gangster muredr.

Murray was arrested early yesterday by the Hartford police on a charge of larceny. A policeman noted the resemblance to the police description of Bourtett and notified the New York Police. Detectives Dawson and Flood went to Hartford, identified Murray and brought him back.

The police will try to have witnesses who identified Corn as one of the men who ran out of the hotel, identify Murray as the other.

ARREST AT GRAND HOTEL.

Police Say Callan Is Wanted for a Holdup in Philadelphia.

A man who gave his name as Eugene Callan was arrested last night at the Grand Hotel by Detectives McConaghy and Lowenthal of the Second Branch Bureau. The police say that Callan, alias Callahan, is wanted in Philadelphia in connection with a hold-up last April when William Tulleman, a bank messenger, was attacked by four men and robbed of $5,500.

Callan is a contortionist, they say, and can throw his body out of joint so as to deceive even a physician. He obtained $750 from the New York Central Railroad by pretending that he suffered curvature of the spine in a railroad accident when he was coming from Hornell to New York, the police allege. They say, too, that he has served a term in Elmira. He gave his residence as Hornell, N. Y. He will be held to await extradition papers from Philadelphia.

'BATTLING' NELSON, AUTHOR

Former Champion Sends Life Story to His Old School Teacher.

"Battling" Nelson recently sent a story of his career to Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, Superintendent of Schools in Chicago, according to The Chicago Herald. When she went to her office a few days ago Mrs. Young found a thick envelope in her pile of mail. In it was a blue, paper-covered book, entitled "Ring Battles of Centuries." Mrs. Young was puzzled. She could not understand what connection the directing of a public school system might have with dissertations on the fine art of uppercutting and the science of swats. She turned to the cover and found this inscription, "With kindest regards to the world's greatest woman, from Battling Nelson."

Perusal of the book disclosed that a chapter had been written by the battler himself. It was a graphic account of how he had "biffed" his way to immortality and the first place in Hegewisch citizenry.

At the beginning of the chapter was a paragraph that did not deal with the battler's prowess in manipulating right hooks and left jabs. It had been marked with a pen:

"I will never forget our first schoolhouse, because it was a dingy, one-room house, where all the children assembled for their studies, with one teacher. Now we have several schools, with plenty of teachers. Ella Flagg Young, our Superintendent of Schools, gave me a lecture in 1890 which I never forgot, and helped to make me what I am today."

After reading the chapter Mrs. Young wrote:

"My Dear Mr. Nelson: The sketch of your career is very interesting. I appreciate your thoughtfulness and courtesy in sending it. I have no doubt that you will continue in the same line of clean athletics that you have followed ever since you left the Henry Clay School at Hegewisch."

Such is the explanation of how "Ring Battles of Centuries" found its way to a shelf in Mrs. Young's library, between Mme. Montessori's "Kindergarten Methods" and a set of Gibbon's "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire."

English Cup Ties Called Off.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—The English Football Association has decided that the English Cup tie competition, which has been held every year since 1871, be abandoned this year owing to the unusual conditions brought about through the war. No international games will be decided. Owing to the railways being under control of the Government for the movement of the troops, it is feared that the English leagues competitions, which necessitate so much traveling, may not be held until the war is over. The association has under consideration a scheme for organizing three competitions which will divide the sixty clubs which are members of Leagues I. and II. and Southern League into districts which will avoid long railway journeys.

FISHEL'S TITLE UPHELD.

Prospect Park Tennis Champion Did Not Violate Rules.

Jesse C. Fishel was sustained as the winner of the lawn tennis singles championship title on the courts of Prospect Park at a meeting of the Executives of the Public Parks Lawn Tennis Association held yesterday. The protest of L. J. Sheridan was not upheld. William Rubenstein, the umpire of the match and partner of Sheridan in the doubles, as well as M. H. Mensch, a linesman, failed to make it evident that the rules had been grossly violated. Avid Weschler, Chairman of the Prospect Park Committee, heard the evidence submitted and concurred in the ruling. William H. Brown, Jr., the President of the Parks Association and referee of the tournament, at once made arrangements to have Fishel and Gerald Mustor, the Bronx Park champion, play in their match for the semi-final ronud this afternoon.

The committee received notification of the default of the Sunstet Park finalist to Francis J. Hopkins, Jr., the Van Cortlandt Park winner, so that the youthful Hopkins moves into the semi-final round. He will play the winner of the match between Russell Brown, Central Park champion, and Marcy Alexander, Claremont Park champion, which will be decided this afternoon at 4 o'clock on the courts at Macomb's Dam Park. A. Enklewitz, of the Executive Committee, will represent the association as an official. Alexander possesses the flashing style and the wonderful court-covering ability of Lindley Murray, the California meteor, and is favored to score over the formidable Central Park expert. Alexander is the former Captain of the De Witt Clinton High School team. Louis Oshman, Crotona Park winner, and H. Dulberger, Macomb's Dam Park champion, will also play today. The semi-finals will be decided on Saturday and the cup matches on Sunday, according to the program of the committee.

Tennis Tournaments Postponed.

BOSTON, Aug. 4.—The finals in the all-comers' tennis tournament at the Longwood Cricket Club between R. Norris Williams, 2nd, of Philadelphia and N. W. Niles of Boston was postponed today on account of rain. They will be played tomorrow, and the challenge match against M. E. McLoughlin, originally scheduled for tomorrow, will be put over until Friday.

NORFOLK, Conn., Aug. 4.—The State championship tennis tournament at the Norfolk Club, begun yesterday, was postponed until tomorrow owing to the rain.

CHICAGO, Aug. 4.—Rain again prevented the matches in the Western tennis tournament at Lake Forest today. After waiting until late in the afternoon, officials decided that a continuous drizzle and a wet course were too much to contend with, and called play off. Clarence Griffin of San Francisco arrived today after having taken part in the tournament at Longwood. He defaulted his match in the first round and it was decided not to let him take part. He will probably play in the doubles.

Syracuse Horse Show Plans.

The plans for the seventy-fifth annual New York State Fair Horse Show at Syracuse, Sept. 14, 15, 16, and 17, are progressing in a way that augurs well for the success of that notable equine event. The arrangements this year are in the hands of a committee comprising State Fair Commissioner W. A. Harriman, John R. Townsend, chairman; Hon. Horace White, Pierre Lorillard, Jr., Henry W. Bull, William Littauer and W. S. Blitz, secretary. A well-arranged prize list of sixty classes has been prepared and is the kind to please prospective exhibitors. For the trotter and roadster there are four classes, the heavy-harness horses nineteen and the saddle horses fourteen. There are three events for military horses, five for harness and saddle ponies and fifteen for hunters and jumpers. A special class and an innovation at the Syracuse show is a contest for five couples of American or English fox hounds. Each exhibit is to be shown with one huntsman and two whips, mounted, and to wear the liveries of their respective hunt clubs or individual owners. Hounds only are to be considered. The prizes in this class are, respectively, $200, $100, $50 for the first, second and third. Liberal purses are offered for first, second and third in the other classes. Entries will close Wednesday, Sept. 1. The judges are Theodore Frelinghuysen, Tuxedo Park, N. Y., trotters and roadsters; H. K. Bloodgood, New York City, and Robert L. Gerry, Newport, R. I., heavy-harness horses and ponies in harness; Lewis E. Waring, Plainfield, N. J., and Colonel Charles I. De Bevoise, Brooklyn, N. Y., saddle horses, ponies under saddle and military classes; Frank A. Bonsal, Monkton, Md., and John E. Cowdin, New York City, hunters and jumpers.

Montclair Horse Show Cancelled.

The Directors of the Montclair Horse Show Association have decided to omit the annual horse show at Montclair, N. J., this year owing to the recent death of its president, Joseph McClelland Greenfield.

TENNIS FOR JUNIORS.

Cart and Davis Win in Classes A and B at Allenhurst.

Theodore Cart won the final round of the Class A tennis tournament of the Allenhurst Beach Club, which closed yesterday, on the club courts at Allenhurst, N. J. Cart defeated Edward Gomaer in the final round, 6—2, 6—3.

In Class B, for boys under 13 years of age, Will Davis showed remarkable skill and promise. His racquet seemed longer than himself, but the way he handled his drives and placements gives great promise for the future, and it is hoped he will be encouraged to follow the game. The summary:

Rain Stops New Hampshire Tennis.

Special to The New York Times.

CRAWFORD NOTCH, N. Y., Aug. 4.—The third day of the New Hampshire State tennis championship here today resulted in some close contests and the starting of the consolation play this morning kept the courts crowded. James Nowell, the title holder, arrived and will put in much time in practice until Saturday afternoon, when he will defend his title. A heavy rain after luncheon prevented any more play and the finals and semi-finals will be played tomorrow in both singles and doubles. The scores:

To Name Columbia Coach Today.

The question of selecting a coach for the Columbia University football team next Fall was again before some of the members of the Committee on Athletics yesterday, and it was announced that a decision would probably be given out today. Several Western men have been considered and in one or two instances the candidates for the place have not been known to any of the members of the committee, so that it was necessary to carefully sift the voluminous recommendations, and the records of the men as coaches. It is known that a selection has been made, but there is not the least intimation as to whose name will be announced today.

RESOLUTE READY TO RACE AGAIN

Slight Damage Repaired and Yacht Is Towed to Newport —Storm Halts Cruise.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 4.—Two storms from the south and east meeting below here made more than a "half gale," as sailors term a forty-five to fifty-mile wind, a heavy downpour accompanying the wind, so the races for the Astor Cups, the feature of the New York Yacht Club cruise scheduled for today, were postponed until tomorrow so as not to interfere with the races arranged for the end of the cruise. The run to Provincetown after the trip through Cape Cod Canal on Saturday has been abandoned, the fleet sailing direct to Marblehead after being on the ways in Bristol all night. The cup yacht Resolute arrived here today. The damage to the bow plates and rigging was repaired, the cup defender was put in the water this morning and towed here this afternoon. She will be ready to sail with the racers for the Astor Cups tomorrow. It will be for a special cup with Vanitie as her single competitor. Entries for the Astor Cups races will be received until 9 A. M. tomorrow. Those which will surely start are: Schooners, W. E. Iselin's Enchantress, Hendon Chubb's Queen Mab and E. Walter Clark's Irolita; sloops, J. P. Morgan's Grayling, H. P. Whitney's Barbara, J. W. and E. P. Alker's Alerion, J. M. Macdonough's Spartan, W. Cameron Forbes's Kalinga and W. Earl Dodge's Samuri.

The contests are without time allowances, the first boat to make the course winning in each class. Vincent Astor, donor of the cups, is here to enjoy the races as to the troubles of starters in Tuesday's run were received all day by wire or phone, for none of the delayed craft were able to make port. Ventura is at Bristol having a new mast stepped in place of the one sprung off Fisher's Island yesterday. Alerion, Hopewell, Radiant, Sea Cotter, and Katrina, and Mrs. Arthur Curtis James's houseboat, Lanai, are storm-bound at Mystic. They will make for this port as soon as it is possible. The yawl Solita, belonging to Commodore Daniel Bacon of the Seawanhaka Club, is also at Mystic. The schooner Constellation, owned by Commodore H. M. Sears of the Eastern Yacht Club, limped back to New London with a broken bowsprit. R. M. Thompson's houseboat, Everglades, made three unsuccessful attempts to get out of Mystic last night. Katurah, Robert E. Tod's schooner, which anchored off Block Island with three headsails gone, was taken to Bristol this morning for repairs. Ralph N. Ellis's Iroquois put back leaking, and is at New London, where there are said to be about yachts waiting to come out.

A striking feature of the cruise was the three forty-foot motor yachts, Hoopla, owned by Harold Vessons; Vanche, owned by W. Butler Duncan, and H. L. Maxwell's Stiletto made the run without injury from New London. Hoopla was the run of forty miles in two hours against head tide and winds, which knocked out so many of the larger craft. All three reached here ahead of Vanitie, first of the fleet to complete the run.

GEORGE LAMBERT DEAD.

Professional Court Tennis Player Was Champion from 1871 to 1885.

The death in London early yesterday of eGorge Lambert, former world's professional court tennis champion, marks the passing of one of the most famous exponents of the indoor court game.

Lambert succeeded to the title in 1871, when Edmund Tompkins retired from play and retained the championship until defeated by Tom Pettitt, the Boston professional, best of thirteen sets, at Hampton Court, in 1885. Pettitt was in turn defeated in 1898 by Peter Latham, and it was not until Jay Gould, the American amateur champion, defeated George F. Covey, the English professional, last year at Philadelphia, that the title was regained by an American court tennis player.

GIANTS AND BRAVES ADVANCE IN PENNANT RACE—DODGERS TIED FOR SECOND PLACE

GIANTS TAKE TWO GAMES IN ST. LOUIS

Cardinals Pound Matty Out, but Tesreau Saves Game and Wins the Second.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Aug. 4.—The Giants took a dislike to the poor ball this afternoon and swatted it all over the diamond. As a result they defeated the Cardinals, 11 to 9 in the first game, and shut them out 7 to 0 in the second. The scores would have been much larger had not Burns, Smodgrass, et al., virtually collapsed from sheer exhaustion and quit trying to hit.

Matty blew up in the first game after he had pitched exceptional ball, and allowed nine runs after the Giants had collected a ten-run lead. He was relieved by Tesreau, who saved the game.

In the second game it was all Tesreau, the Cardinals never having a chance to show what they could do.

Matty retired after Ames, the Cincinnati cast-off, Griner, and Niehaus had been batted from the box and when it looked as if he had every chance to add another to his long list of shut-out games. When he started to crack he did it quickly, and McGraw in despair withdrew him and Wendell and put in Tesreau and Meyers. The day was raw and so cold that most of the fans wore overcoats, a condition that probably was more or less responsible for the downfall of the veteran.

Tesreau, in finishing the first game for Matty, showed he was in fine form and was the logical man to pitch the second game. He had everything. Try as hard as they could, all the Cards could do was to pop out or fan.

Probably as a result of the knowledge that the second game would be one-sided, the Giants, the Cards, the fans, and Umpire Lord Byron began making a farce out of it at the very outset. The lord was in fine fettle, and joined in the sport by making some of the poorest decisions seen in St. Louis in many a year. Just to add a little bit of excitement a fan bounced a ball off his head, and he appealed for police protection. Another fan mixed it verbally with Fletcher, the language flowing freely and vividly around the Giants' coop for a couple of innings. Several times a fight seemed to be due, but each time another player would pull Fletcher down into the coop and a peaceful fan would seize the belligerent rooter.

To get down to the details of the game the Giants started scoring in the first inning of the first game, and scored in the second, third, sixth, seventh, and eighth innings, the only inning lacking a tally being the fifth inning, for in it five runs were bagged. Doyle was the handiest man with the stick, getting four hits and three runs out of five times up.

The second game was a repetition of the first, with the exception that it lacked the Cards' batting rally. Lee Meadows, who has been home with his dying mother, and had not pitched for several days, did his best to get back into his old style, but failed dismally. Before he knew it the Giants had batted in three runs in the first inning. Their other tallies came in the fifth, sixth, and ninth.

The real feature of the second game came in the third inning, when the Giants made a triple play, the first of the season at Robinson Park. Here's how it happened: Betzel singled, Meadows got his second hit of the year, a single, and Bescher singled, filling the bases. Long sent a hot drive that was bound for left field and looked good for a double at least. Lobert speared it an inch from the ground. All the base runners were on the run. Lobert stepped on third, retiring Betzel, and threw to Doyle, getting Meadows for the triple play. The score:

DODGERS LOSING GROUND IN RACE

Another Defeat in Cincinnati Places Them in Tie with Hustling Braves.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Aug. 4.—Appleton and Dell, pitching for the Brooklyn Nationals at Redland Field this afternoon, allowed the lowly Reds to administer another beating. This time the score was 4 to 1 and marked the end of the series, which proved disastrous for the Dodgers, the locals taking three out of the four games played, with one postponed because of rain. Incidentally today's defeat, while the Braves were overwhelming the Pirates at Pittsburgh, allowed Stallings's aggregation to tie with Brooklyn for second place honors. The Brooklyns were the first to score in this afternoon's contest. They shoved across a tally in their share of the fourth round, only to see that slim one run lead fade away in the Reds' half of the same round. Dale was on the mound for Herzog's men and completely mystified the visiting batsmen. The fourth inning saw the only round when he was touched for real bingles. Aside from that frame, the youngster was never in danger.

Appleton, who started the game for the visitors, was found for three hits in the fourth round. Miller was on the receiving end. In this frame Miller allowed the ball to trickle past him, permitting the second Red run to score and handing the game to the locals. Dell, who succeeded Appleton, wavered in the seventh when four hits for a total of two runs were garnered off his delivery. Coombs pitched the eighth inning and did not allow a hit.

Daubert opened the fourth inning with a single to centre, and took second when Wheat bounded to Wagner. Cutshaw was out, Herzog to Mollwitz, Daubert going to third. Stengel tripled to right, Daubert coming across with the only Dodger score. Stengel was stranded on third when Getz bounded to Herzog.

The Reds came right back and tallied two runs and won the game in their share of the fourth. Wagner walked, a serious mistake by Appleton. Killifer then sacrificed him down to second, whence he scored with the run that tied the score when Wingo singled to left. The bases were full when Williams got a short single. Mollwitz fouled to Daubert. With Dale up, Miller had a passed ball and Griffith scored with the run that proved the winner. Dale walked and Groh fanned, ending the inning.

Dell took up the hurling responsibilities of the Dodgers in the fifth round and held the locals safe in two innings. In the seventh Dell fell by the wayside and watched the Reds sew the game up tight. With Dale disposed of in the seventh, Groh doubled and went to third on Herzog's single, the latter taking second on the throw-in. Clarke, batting for Wagner, singled, and Groh and Herzog scored, ending the scoring for the day. The score:

Future Boxing Bouts.

Three ten-round bouts appear on the boxing program to be staged at the Broadway Sporting Club, Brooklyn, on Saturday night. In the main event Johnny Dohan, the Fighting Teuton of Ridgewood, will oppose Terry Mitchell, another Brooklynite, who has an unbroken series of victories to his credit. Dohan has been taking on weight rapidly in the last three months, and his ambition now is to gain recognition in the first rank of welterweights. He was a good second-rater among the lightweights. Willie Jackson of Harlem and Joe Goodney of the East Side are engaged in another ten-round contest, and in the opening number Willie Brown, featherweight champion of the United States Navy, is matched with the aggressive Italian boxer, Young Mundy.

Jim Coffey, the Irish heavyweight, is supervising the training of Mike McTeague, claimant of the middleweight championship of Ireland, who boxes ten rounds with Johnny Baker at the Olympic Club on Monday night. For more than a week Coffey has been imparting his knowledge of the prize ring to McTeague, and has helped to smooth out some of the rough spots in the latter's style. Baker has agreed to weigh in at 158 pounds for McTeague.

The Irish boxer is scheduled to box two ten-round sessions in three days, for yesterday he was signed to appear in one of the headline bouts at the Fairmont Athletic Club Saturday night against Johnny (Kid) Alberts, the heavy-hitting New Jersey boxer. In another feature exhibition Matt Wells, former lightweight champion of Great Britain, will make his reappearance in the American ring with Willie Schaeffer of the Bronx as his opponent.

Swim Races at Travers Island.

With most of its star track and field men in San Francisco for the national championships, the New York A. C. is now turning its attention to swimming. The aquatic season has been delayed somewhat on account of the championships on the coast, but will get under way within the next two weeks. The biggest feature is the half mile metropolitan championship, which will be held at Travers Island under the direction of the New York A. C. on Aug. 28. In this event will be Joseph Wheatley, the New York A. C. representative who was second twice to Ludy Langer, the California sensation, in the championship races, and L. J. (Bud) Goodwin, another Mercury Footer, who won the three-mile title at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. Wheatley, with Al Downes, his clubmate, national high diving title holder, returned from the coast early this week, and after a rest of a week will prepare again for competition. Goodwin is returning by easy stages, traveling through the Canadian Rockies. Wheatley brought with him the point banner for the national title events, which the New York team won with a total of twenty-five points. According to Wheatley, the championships were successful in every sense, and big crowds witnessed all the events held in the yacht harbor at San Francisco. Entry blanks will be issued for the Metropolitan "880" in a few days. In addition to this event there will be a high diving competition from a sixteen-foot height and a 100-yard swim.

BASEBALL TO-DAY, 2 games; first game 1:45 P. M. New York Americans vs. St. Louis. Polo Grounds. Admission 50c.—Advt.

WON'T WAIT FOR LANDIS.

Federal League to Proceed as If Baseball Was Not in Courts.

As far as the Federal League is concerned it will henceforth proceed without any regard for the possibility of a decision being handed down by Judge Landis in Chicago, according to the statement yesterday afternoon of James A. Gilmore, President of the "outlaw" organization. When the case was first heard there was a period immediately following when the league held back, thinking that there might be an opinion at any moment, but from now on the league will proceed as though the baseball situation was not in the courts at all.

In support of this he immediately announced that there would be a Federal League team in New York next season, and set at rest all rumors of a home in the Bronx by admitting that the grounds would be on Manhattan Island. He would not say that the site had been selected and an option obtained, but this was considered probable from the fact that he announced that the plans for the stands would be given out in a week or ten days. This would indicate that the project for launching one of the league clubs in this city had been carefully studied for some time, and that ground was now under the Federal League control, else the plans could hardly have been drawn. Organized baseball, he said, was wrong in its reckoning if it considered that the Federal League was ready to withdraw from the battle now.

He attributed the falling off in interest in the game during the early part of this season to the general condition of the country. Business, except that which had to deal with war munitions, was feeling the pinch, and the result was that the people in many instances did not have the money to spend on baseball. When he was asked how he reconciled such an opinion of conditions with the plan to invade Manhattan he said he did not think that the depression would last through the Winter, and that next season he looked for better times.

Asked if the plan of campaign decided upon by the league involved the starting of minor leagues somewhat on the order of the Colonial, Gilmore answered emphatically in the negative. He said he never was in favor of any movement looking to the establishment of minor leagues, that there were plenty of ambitious ball players to be had whose one thought was to play in the big league, and that the minors were not a necessity as a preparatory school.

President Gilmore announced another reduction in prices in Newark. It was erroneously given out that the price in the bleachers would be fifteen cents, but he said that it should have been announced as ten cents. It was purely a local condition, he said, and had no bearing on the situation in other cities. The scale of prices at Newark will be 10, 25 and 50 cents, with the boxes at $1.

WHAT ANSWER CAN WE MAKE?

The American Eagle has by this time discovered that the shaft directed against him by Sir EDWARD GREY was feathered with his own plumage. To meet our contentions Sir EDWARD cites our own seizures and our own court decisions. It remains to be seen whether out of strands plucked from the mane and tail of the British Lion we can fashion a bowstring which will give effective momentum to a counter-bolt launched in the general direction of Downing Street. Upon that our answer will turn, upon that its success will depend. We are discussing questions of law, and the prize law of the two countries is the same. If we can show Sir EDWARD that he misapplies the principles of our decisions, or if we can cite British decisions or British practices contrary to his present argument, we may be able to place Great Britain in the position of disadvantage where by her latest note she has placed us. It may as well be admitted that the notes are very able, very skillfully drawn, and that the preparation of a convincing reply will be difficult, a task that will put to the test Mr. LANSING'S legal resources and President WILSON'S capacity for presentation.

As Sir EDWARD very naturally puts great reliance upon the case of the Springbok, involving questions of continuous voyage, so it may be expected that in our note we shall make what use we may of the Peterhof case, in which the question was not of violation of blockade but of contraband with enemy destination. We do not assert the right to trade in contraband of war intended for the Government or armed forces of Germany; there the right of capture is conceded. We did assert in our note of March 30 that "innocent shipments may be "freely transported to and from the "United States through neutral countries to belligerent territories." The Peterhof, a British merchant steamer, cleared from London to Matamoros, Mexico, near the mouth of the Rio Grande, was condemned, ship and cargo, by the District Court. The Supreme Court decreed the release of the ship, as there was no question of running the blockade, Matamoros being a neutral port and the mouth of the Rio Grande not being blockaded. The court, however, condemned the contraband part of the cargo, as it concluded from the evidence that it was not for the Matamoros market, but "directly to the rebel military service," the rebel forces then occupying Brownsville, just across the river. The language of Chief Justice CHASE in the Peterhof opinion is pertinent to the present issue:

> Contraband merchandise is subject to a different rule in respect of ulterior destination than that which applies to merchandise not contraband. The latter is liable to capture only whenever a violation of blockade is intended; the former when destined to the hostile country, or to the actual military or naval use of the enemy, whether blockaded or not. * * * Hence, while articles not contraband might be sent to Matamoros and beyond to the rebel region, where the communications were not interrupted by blockade, articles of a contraband character destined in fact to a State in rebellion, or for the use of the rebel military forces, were liable to capture though primarily destined to Matamoros. We are obliged to conclude that the portion of the cargo which we have characterized as contraband must be condemned.

That the principles of law here laid down are applicable to shipments of noncontraband commodities, like cotton, to the neutral ports of Holland, for instance, even though they might later be transshipped to Germany, is sufficiently evident. The Peterhof case may thus become something more than an offset to the Springbok case, which makes against our contention. It is to be remarked that the question in the Springbok case was one of violating the blockade, while in the other it was a question of contraband. The principles laid down in the Springbok case have been condemned by some of the greatest authorities, particularly Continental authorities, on international law. Sir EDWARD reminds us, however, that it is the business of text writers to formulate existing rules and not to offer suggestions of their own; the "existing rule" is unquestionably that laid down by the Supreme Court and accepted by Great Britain in the Springbok case. It was not through lassitude or mere good nature that the British member of the Mixed Claims Commission voted with the other Commissioners to affirm the Springbok condemnation. Great Britain was not disposed, even in the interest of British commerce and British ship owners, to insist then upon a construction of law which in her later experience as a belligerent she might find to be highly inconvenient. The wisdom and foresight she then exhibited now enable her to make use of this case in the argument defending her blockade practices against Germany.

PRAYER FOR PEACE WITH VICTORY.

In compliance with the appeal of BENEDICT XV. for peace, four French Cardinals have published a letter commanding the French Bishops to appoint a day of prayer for "the "blessing of a durable peace, with "the triumph of our army." "Peace, with victory for our side." That is what the belligerents pray for, none belligerently, however, but WILLIAM II., always "marching with GOD," whom, if without shadow of irreverence it may be said, he seems to regard as the war god and protector of the divinely right HOHENZOLLERN. All "pray to the same GOD," to widen LINCOLN'S phrase. The French Bishops cite the violated neutrality, the assassination of Belgium.

From the beginning of the war religious minds have been deeply shocked by the seeming irreconcilable opposition between religion and war. But war is only a part, and a small part, of the infinite sum, the mystery, immemorial and insoluble, of evil, pain, suffering, triumphant cruelty and injustice. Manichaeism, agnosticism, atheism have been reflexes of rebellion against the apparent order of the universe, blind, impartial Nature, and the sorrows of the world. But it is not for temporal prosperities that religious souls pray. "Not my will, but Thine be done." Inward peace, and the peace that passeth understanding, is the peace most ardently and hopefully to be sought. But all these prayers for peace and victory are prayers, in the thought of the suppliant, for justice, for right. If one side must be disappointed, let us be free from thinking its prayers have been fruitless. To liberate the soul, to commune in spirit with the Source of Things, is much. Who dares to think, so sacred are they, of the innumerable prayers now rising to heaven from the real victims of the war, those whose hearts are with the dead, the wounded, the missing, the soldiers in the trenches, the millions unscathed whose hour is yet to come?

Thousands of years ago an old Babylonian hymned the contest, as he saw it, between human and prayer and the unbending purpose of the immortals. "But that which is good "to man is evil before GOD. Who "shall understand the counsel of the "gods?"

LET THE DEBATE GO ON.

Higher criticism is at work on the three little simple declarative sentences which Colonel ROOSEVELT offered for the consideration of mankind on Monday. Each critic finds in it food and drink; he brought them and he finds what he brought. Each brought something different and finds it. The Colonel's statement is in the house of the interpreter, and the interpreter's name is Legion, and his eyes are those of Argus.

It is hard to choose among so many; but ORMSBY MCHARG entices one. In the fact that the Colonel did not throw any Big Berthas at the retreating forms of Mr. ROBINSON and Mr. HAMLIN as they go galumphing into the Republican camp Mr. MCHARG discovers clear proof that the Colonel is going to run for President in the Republican primaries. The statement is a thinly disguised announcement of his intention. ORMSBY MCHARG is the gentleman who supplied the mystery for Postmaster General HITCHCOCK in his campaign for Taft delegates in the South in 1908; since which time Mr. MCHARG has driven a roaring trade in the discovery of mare's nests and the planning of trips to the moon. He is at present without a peer as a discoverer, and the past has few to show worthy of comparison with him; certainly not in COLUMBUS, probably only in Dr. COOK.

THEODORE DOUGLAS ROBINSON is not a man of Mr. MCHARG'S type. He has the winsome trait of believing what he hears. He is not very old, and perhaps he has not yet met the Spanish prisoner or the man just from Alaska who must part at once with a $1,000 nugget for $10 because of a death in his family; for Mr. ROBINSON is said to be still in comfortable circumstances. Mr. ROBINSON interprets the statement in a manner exactly contrary to that of Mr. MCHARG. He sees in it a chivalric and blind devotion to the Progressive Party, a willingness to die in the last ditch rather than abandon it, and in the Colonel he sees a second Don Quixote. His superior political wisdom leads him to show the Colonel the error of his ways; but, alas, he can't get to the Colonel. He knows that that credulous and unobservant statesman is being misled to his ruin by GEORGE W. PERKINS, and would save him by exposing to his charmed eyes the real situation; but something always comes up so that there is nobody at Sagamore Hill when he calls on his enlightening mission. "None of us who "disagree with Mr. PERKINS has been "able to put to Colonel ROOSEVELT "since his return our side of the case, "and if we had had the opportunity "perhaps Colonel ROOSEVELT would not "have issued just the statement he "did." Perhaps he would have issued just that statement, but perhaps he could not figure out a way to hear Mr. ROBINSON'S arguments before issuing it and make a soothing reply; and perhaps he has made a vow never to answer a serious argument by saying, "Shoo, fly"; and perhaps this is why none of us had the opportunity to put to Colonel ROOSEVELT our side of the case.

A third commentary comes from Chairman SCHIFF of the Progressive County Committee. "If the Republican Party becomes sufficiently liberalized, and it may be accomplished, "there would be no need of maintaining a third party. The Progressive "Party will stand as a threat, in no "mean sense, to the Republican Party "—a threat for the purpose of getting "an indorsement of principles in keeping with the spirit of the times." The wind is easterly, and Mr. MCHARG and Mr. ROBINSON can always see a hernshaw at such times. It might be well for both of them to refrain from print until they have had a chance to hear Mr. SCHIFF, who seems to have a talent for recognizing a hawk when he sees one.

PORTO RICAN CITIZENSHIP.

The Porto Ricans want to be American citizens. Americans will think the idea creditable, even if they should want to think it over. At all events the request is entitled to be considered upon its merits, disentangled from irrelevant considerations. There is no reason, for example, why the questions of citizenship in the Philippines and in Porto Rico should be bracketed. The Philippines are remote, and are related to this continent only by accident, not by sympathy. Porto Rico is at our door, and has every reason for loyalty and attachment. There are eight times as many Filipinos as Porto Ricans, and the question of adulteration of citizenship grows rapidly with increase of number. There is no suggestion that Porto Rican votes would or could materially affect continental politics.

Now Porto Rico's status is that merely of a dependency, with a government which is a curious mixture of Federal and insular authority. At least it might be thought that Porto Rico could be made an organized territory, which would give a considerable measure of home rule, with Federal supervision. There have been bills before Congress, but they have never been considered seriously or independently. We are responsible for taking from the island the political relations which gave citizenship, and we are responsible for the continuance of conditions which leave a million men without a country. The boon of citizenship is asked for the sake of the Porto Ricans, but it may be that the gift would be a good one for us to make on our own account. It would be a reproach to us if we converted petitioners for citizenship into sullen inferiors.

THE WILLIAMSBURG BRIDGE PROBLEM.

There is no lack of bidders for the privileges on the Williamsburg Bridge which the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company values so little that it is ready to abandon them. The Third Avenue road of Manhattan is ready to operate across the Williamsburg Bridge, as it does across the Manhattan Bridge. That is to say, passengers can take cars of several surface lines in Manhattan and transfer to the busiest traffic centre in Brooklyn. Or if they take the same cars at the bridge in Manhattan, they can transfer to any line in Brooklyn. The same system is effective from Brooklyn. All connecting Brooklyn lines transfer to the terminus of the bridge in Manhattan, or if passengers take the cars at the bridge in Brooklyn they get transfers throughout Manhattan. That is the best system of interborough surface travel over any bridge. It puts the bridge to the most efficient use in serving all tributary districts, and thereby sustains tax values in a large district. There is no complaint that the profits are excessive, and there is no suggestion of any better way of facilitating travel under present and practicable conditions.

Another bidder also operates across the Manhattan Bridge, and proposes to establish a similar system over the Williamsburg Bridge. That is the Three Cent Line, which gives two rides for a nickel and no transfers. A feature of its bid is a proposal to establish elevators at the bridge towers, "so that the vast army of factory "employés, male and female, employed "near the waterfront, who are compelled to utilize this bridge in going "to and coming from their work, may "be saved the long walk which they "now have to take." Each one of the new bidders makes proposals better for the city than the one whose excessive profits led to the ending of the present arrangement, but that is not their best feature. It would be better to allow the profits if thereby superior traffic facilities were gained. But the fact is that the better terms to the city are accompanied by a traffic gain, and that the adoption of the new method on the Williamsburg Bridge would be followed probably by its extension to the other bridges.

There is hardly a more important matter to the city than the utilization of its four bridges. The Williamsburg Bridge cost $25,000,000, and the single line about to be relet carries sixteen million passengers without the development of its opportunities. There is nearly a hundred millions of city money in bridges, and the only hope of getting the money's worth is by developing their traffic capacity, as has not been done for successive decades. On an average day 763,000 passengers use them, and the traffic to and fro is as necessary to the city's prosperity as breathing to an individual.

THE INDUSTRIAL SPECULATION.

An illuminating sidelight is thrown by THE ANNALIST upon the current rampant speculation in the industrials. Their price has risen so that their yield is below that of railroad securities. Therefore their attraction as investments is comparatively less. This is as unexpected as the recent "crossing" of the prices of both descriptions, the industrials in their rise going above the rails on their fall. As some of the industrials which have had the greatest rise are non-dividend payers, it is clear how this pulls down the average yield. Another surprise is that the dividends of the industrial dividend payers have fallen even more than those of the railways which are so neglected. Yet the decline of the industrial dividends has had no deterrent effect upon the market for their shares. This effect is one only to be observed over considerable periods of time.

In 1900 the railway dividend yield averaged 3.12 and the industrials averaged 3.56. There then was an investment reason for buying them. In 1907 the railway yield was 5.08 and the industrial 8.28. Now the railway yield is 5.19, a rise in eight years, despite the recent fall. But the industrial yield is only 4.60, a positive fall against the railways' scant improvement. Yet the industrials are the market favorites. It is a demonstration that those who favor them do so because they like "action." What is any conceivable annual dividend compared with dividends several times over daily, as the market has moved lately?

THE GOLF AMATEUR AGAIN.

The confusion that has arisen over the effort to define clearly the qualifications of an amateur in golf deserves psychological investigation. We do not remember that the same amount of mystification has ever impeded the correct classification of amateurs and professionals in any other sport. Yet golfers are not essentially contentious. One who plays at the game habitually finds fault chiefly with himself, not with his associates. He has enough to do, day by day, trying to square himself with bogey. His continual grievance is that he is "off his game," not that somebody else is boastfully on it. There ought, it seems, to be as little trouble in defining the amateur golfer as in defining the amateur tennis player or oarsman. Yet the Philadelphia Golf Association has disqualified a golfer of previous good standing as an amateur because he acts as coach for football teams. A hot argument unfitted to this kind of weather has ensued.
